COMMISSION.

VICTORIA R.

Victoria, by the Grace of God of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland Queen, Defender of the Faith.

To Our right trusty and well-beloved Councillor John, Baron Romilly, Master or Keeper of the Rolls and Records in Chancery; Our right trusty and entirely beloved Cousin and Councillor Robert Arthur Talbot, Marquess of Salisbury; Our right trusty and right well-beloved Cousin David Graham Drummond, Earl of Airlie, Knight of Our Most Ancient and Most Noble Order of the Thistle; Our right trusty and right well-beloved Cousin Philip Henry, Earl Stanhope; Our trusty and well-beloved Edmond George Fitzmaurice, Esq. (commonly called Lord Edmond George Fitzmaurice); Our trusty and well-beloved Sir William Stirling Maxwell, Bart.; Our trusty and well-beloved Charles William Russell, Doctor in Divinity, President of the College of St. Patrick, Maynooth; Our trusty and well-beloved George Webbe Dasent, Doctor of Civil Law; and Our trusty and well-beloved Thomas Duffus Hardy, Esq., Deputy Keeper of the Records, greeting.

Whereas it has been represented unto Us that there are belonging to many Institutions and private Families various Collections of Manuscripts and Papers of general public interest, a knowledge of which would be of great utility in the illustration of History, Constitutional Law, Science, and general Literature, and that in some cases these Papers are liable to be lost or obliterated: And whereas We are informed that many of the possessors of such Manuscripts would be willing to give access to them, and permit their contents to be made public, provided that nothing of a private character, or relating to the title of existing owners, should be divulged:

And whereas it appears to Us that there would be considerable public advantage in its being generally known where such Papers and Manuscripts are deposited, and that the contents of those which tend to the elucidation of History, and the illustration of Constitutional Law, Science, and Literature, should be published:

Now know ye, that We, reposing great trust and confidence in your ability and discretion, have appointed, and do by these Presents nominate, constitute, and appoint, you the said John, Baron Romilly; Robert Arthur Talbot, Marquess of Salisbury; David Graham Drummond, Earl of Airlie; Philip Henry, Earl Stanhope; Edmond George Fitzmaurice (commonly called Lord Edmond George Fitzmaurice); Sir William Stirling Maxwell; Charles William Russell; George Webbe Dasent; and Thomas Duffus Hardy to be Our Commissioners to make inquiry as to the places in which such Papers and Manuscripts are deposited, and for any of the purposes herein mentioned:

And for the purpose of carrying out the said inquiry We do hereby authorize you to call in the aid and co-operation of all possessors of Manuscripts and Papers, inviting them to assist you in furthering the object of this Commission, and to give them full assurance that no information is sought except such as relates to Public Affairs, and that no knowledge or information which may be obtained from their collections shall be promulgated without their full licence and consent:

And We do further by these Presents authorize you, with the consent of the owners of such Manuscripts, to make abstracts and catalogues of such Manuscripts:

And We do hereby direct that you, or any three or more of you, shall form a quorum, and that you, or any three or more of you, shall have power to invite the possessors of such Papers and Records as you may deem it desirable to inspect, to produce them before you:

And Our further will and pleasure is that you our said Commissioners, or any three or more of you, do report to Us from time to time in writing under your hands and seals all and every your proceedings under and by virtue of these Presents:

And for the better enabling you to execute these Presents, We do hereby nominate, constitute, and appoint Wilford George Brett, Esq., Barrister-at-Law, as the Secretary to this Our Commission to attend you, whose services and assistance We require you to use from time to time as occasion may require.

Given at Our Court at St. James's, the Second day of April one thousand eight hundred and sixty-nine, in the Thirty-second year of Our Reign.

VICTORIA R.

Victoria, by the Grace of God of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland Queen, Defender of the Faith.

To the Right Reverend Father in God Charles Bishop of Limerick, Ardfert, and Aghadoe, and Our right trusty and well-beloved James Baron Talbot de Malahide, greeting.

Whereas We did, by Warrant under Our Royal Sign Manual, bearing date the second day of April one thousand eight hundred and sixty-nine, authorize and appoint Our right trusty and well-beloved Councillor John, Baron Romilly, Master or Keeper of the Rolls and Records in Chancery, together with the several Noblemen and Gentlemen therein named in the said Warrant, or any three or more of them, to be Our Commissioners to make inquiry into the places in which Documents illustrative of History or general public interest belonging to private persons are deposited, and to consider whether, with the consent of the owners, means might not be taken to render such Documents available for public reference.

Now know ye, that We, reposing great trust and confidence in your zeal, discretion, and ability, do by these Presents authorize and appoint you the said Charles Bishop of Limerick, Ardfert, and Aghadoe, and James Baron Talbot de Malahide, to be Our Commissioners for the purposes aforesaid, in addition to and together with the Commissioners whom We have already appointed by the above-mentioned Royal Warrant.

Given at Our Court of St. James's, the Thirty-first day of August one thousand eight hundred and sixty-nine, in the Thirty-third year of Our Reign.

By Her Majesty's Command.

VICTORIA R.

Victoria, by the Grace of God of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, Queen, Defender of the Faith.

To Our right trusty and well-beloved Richard Monckton Baron Houghton, greeting.

Whereas We did by Warrants under Our Royal Sign Manual, bearing date respectively the second day of April and the thirty-first day of August one thousand eight hundred and sixty-nine, authorize and appoint Our right trusty and well-beloved Councillor John, Baron Romilly, Master or Keeper of the Rolls and Records in Chancery, together with the several Noblemen and Gentlemen therein named in such Warrants, or any three or more of them, to be Our Commissioners to make inquiry into the places in which Documents illustrative of History or general public interest belonging to private persons are deposited, and to consider whether, with the consent of the owners, means might not be taken to render such Documents available for public reference.

Now know ye, that We, reposing great trust and confidence in your zeal, discretion, and ability, have authorized and appointed, and do by these Presents authorize and appoint you the said Richard Monckton Baron Houghton to be a Commissioner for the purposes aforesaid, in addition to and together with the Commissioners whom We have already appointed by the above-mentioned Royal Warrants.

Given at Our Court at St. James's, the Fourth day of May one thousand eight hundred and seventy, in the Thirty-third year of Our Reign.

By Her Majesty's Command.

H. A. BRUCE.

Richard Monckton Baron Houghton, additional Commissioner to inquire into places in which Historical Documents of public interest are deposited.

SECOND REPORT

OF THE

ROYAL COMMISSION ON HISTORICAL MANUSCRIPTS.

TO THE QUEEN'S MOST EXCELLENT MAJESTY.

MAY IT PLEASE YOUR MAJESTY,

WE, Your Majesty's Commissioners, appointed by Your Royal Commission to inquire what papers and manuscripts belonging to private families and institutions are extant which would be of utility in the illustration of history, constitutional law, science, and general literature, and to which possessors would be willing to give access, respectfully beg leave to present the following Report to Your Majesty.

In pursuance of a warrant under Your sign manual bearing date 4th May 1870, Lord Houghton was added to the Commissioners whom Your Majesty had previously appointed on 2nd April and 31st August 1869.

In the execution of Your Majesty's commands Your Commissioners have continued their inquiries on the subjects mentioned in Your Commission to the extent of the means placed at their disposal by the Lords Commissioners of Your Majesty's Treasury.

Since their last report Your Commissioners having in view Your Majesty's instructions and the usefulness of the information, which they were collecting, to all classes of Your Majesty's subjects, have confined their attention to those papers which the owners had thrown open to the inspection of Your Commissioners.

The First Report of Your Commissioners, which was issued in March 1870, has created great public interest; not only was the first edition of 875 copies as well as the second edition of 250 copies speedily disposed of, but a third edition of 500 copies has been nearly exhausted. In addition to those supplied through the ordinary channels to the members of the Houses of Lords and Commons, copies were sent to all persons who had in any way assisted in promoting the objects of the Commission.

The fact that 101 collections have been inspected during 1870, being 22 in excess of the preceding year, proves that the public interest in the Commission has not in the least diminished, but, on the contrary, increased, and it is satisfactory to Your Commissioners to report that they have received from the owners of MSS. every encouragement and promises of further assistance.

The Lords Commissioners of Your Majesty's Treasury during the last year placed the sum of 1,000*l.* at the disposal of Your Commissioners, for the purposes of the Commission, but that amount has been barely sufficient to carry out the objects for which the Commission was issued; the Commissioners, however, fully hope that the Treasury will increase the annual grant in order that the Commissioners may extend their operations and commence the compilation of calendars, pursuant to the terms of the Commission.

Mr. Alfred J. Horwood, Mr. Henry T. Riley, and the Rev. Joseph Stevenson, have continued to act as inspectors for England; Dr. John Stuart, of the General Register House, Edinburgh, and Mr. J. T. Gilbert, of the Public Record Office, Dublin, have also been respectively employed for Scotland and Ireland. In accordance with the recommendations of Your Commissioners the Lords of Your Majesty's Treasury have, by letter dated 19th October 1870, assented to the employment of Mr. William Fraser, of the General Register House, Edinburgh, as an additional inspector for Scotland, and Mr. Fraser has been specially engaged to report upon several important and valuable collections of papers which have been placed in his hands by various noblemen and gentlemen of Scotland.

In the Appendix (pp. 1 to 262) will be found reports on or catalogues of the following collections, which have been examined during the year :—

England and Wales.—Duke of Bedford, Countess Cowper and Baroness Lucas, Earl of Dartmouth, Earl Spencer, Earl of Mount Edgcumbe, Earl Cathcart, Earl of Bradford, Earl Cawdor, Viscount Dillon, Lord Camoys, Lord Arundell of Wardour, Lord Lyttelton, Lord Calthorpe, Lord Wrottesley, Lord Leigh, the Hon. G. M. Fortescue, Sir Charles W. Dilke, Bart., Sir Henry Dryden, Bart., Sir Baldwin Leighton, Bart., Sir Geo. Osborn, Bart., Trustees of the late Sir R. Puleston, Bart., Miss Ainslie, J. C. Antrobus, Esq., W. R. Baker, Esq., C. M. Berington, Esq., Colonel Myddelton-Biddulph, Colonel Carew, Mrs. Collis, Richard Corbet, Esq., W. Bromley-Davenport, Esq., M.P., C. Cottrell Dormer, Esq., J. R. Ormsby Gore, Esq., M.P., John Harvey, Esq., Dr. Hoskins, H. B. Mackeson, Esq., charter chests of the family of Neville of Holt, F. Peake, Esq., Mrs. Prescott, J. J. Rogers, Esq., W. T. McCullagh Torrens, Esq., M.P., W. H. Turner, Esq., Mrs. Willes, W. W. E. Wynne, Esq.; St. Lawrence's College, Ampleforth; Clare College, Gonville and Caius College, Jesus College, and Trinity Hall, Cambridge; Carlisle Cathedral; St. Mary's College, Oscott; Corpus Christi College, Exeter College, Jesus College, Lincoln College, New College, Oriel College, Queen's College, Trinity College, and Worcester College, Oxford; Stoneyhurst College; Monastery of the Dominican Friars at Woodchester; Corporation of Abingdon; Petyt MSS. in Inner Temple Library; and Chetham Library, Manchester.

Scotland.—Duke of Montrose, Duke of Sutherland, Marquis of Huntly, Earl of Crawford and Balcarres, Earl of Morton, Earl of Strathmore, Earl of Dalhousie, Earl of Airlie, Earl of Stair, Earl of Rosslyn, Earl Cawdor, Lord Forbes, Lord Torphichen, Sir J. H. Burnett, Bart., J. Guthrie, Esq., A. F. Irvine, Esq., and J. F. Leith, Esq.; University of Aberdeen; Catholic College of Blairs; Trinity College, Glenalmond; University of St. Andrew's; and Royal Burgh of Montrose.

Ireland.—Marquis of Ormonde, Earl of Granard, Earl of Rosse, Major-General F. P. Dunne, Robert D. Lyons, Esq., M.D. (Archbishop King's collection), The O'Conor Don, M.P., and Rothe's Register of Kilkenny.

Each report has, in conformity with the circular of the Commission, been submitted to the proprietor of the collection to which it refers, who has assented to its publication and circulation under the authority of the Commissioners.

In addition to these collections several others, including those of the Earl of Seafield, Lord Rollo, Sir Archibald Edmonstone, Bart., Rev. W. Sneyd, Mr. Dundas, of Arniston, Mr. Dundas, of Dundas Castle, Mr. Webster, of Aberdeen, and Mrs. Wemyss, of Wemyss Castle, have been examined; the notices of these are necessarily postponed to the next report of the Commission. The Dukes of Argyll, Buccleuch and Queensberry, Northumberland, and Roxburghe, the Marquis of Salisbury, the Earl of Home, Lord Wharncliffe, the authorities of Trinity College, Dublin, Colonel Carew, Mr. Wilson, of Eshton, Mr. Peake, of Sleaford, Mr. Dymond, of Exeter, the Corporations of Colchester, Haverfordwest, King's Lynn, Pembroke, and Tenby, and the Dean and Chapter of Wells, have also consented to the inspection of their manuscripts.

In the Report which will be issued by Your Commissioners in the ensuing year will be included a notice of the Shelburne papers now at Lansdowne House, in the possession of the present Marquis of Lansdowne. It is believed that these papers may contain many documents of great importance relating to the political history of the latter half of the 18th century, and may throw light on the events which led to the fall of the Shelburne ministry and the Fox-North ministry in 1783, and on those which decided the composition of Mr. Pitt's first ministry. It is also believed that there are many interesting letters from eminent literary characters in this collection.

One result of the operations of Your Majesty's Commissioners has been that some valuable series of papers have either passed or are about to pass from private into public hands. The Trustees of the British Museum are in treaty for some of the collections noticed in the First Report of the Commissioners; Sir George Duckett has presented a portion of his manuscripts to that institution; and the Curators of the Bodleian Library, Oxford, have purchased from Mr. Turner the volume noticed in Mr. Riley's report (Appendix, p. 101). These books and papers by being placed in public libraries will be catalogued and made accessible to the historical student.

The Earl Cawdor on 4th May 1870 placed under the care of Your Commissioners an heraldic and genealogical collection in three volumes, with a fourth containing the indices to the same, relating to the settlers in Wales, and known as "the Golden "Grove Book." These volumes have been deposited in the Public Record Office, under the following conditions:—That the public may have access to the same; that the volumes are to be properly preserved and taken care of; and that his Lordship, or his heirs, may at any time hereafter remove the volumes from the Record Office upon giving a receipt for the same. They will be found described at p. 31 of the Appendix.

Sir W. Stirling Maxwell, Bart., has presented to Your Commissioners for public use three volumes privately printed relating to the families of "The Stirlings of Keir," and "The Maxwells of Pollok."

The Standish Papers sent to Your Commissioners by F. Peake, Esq., have been sorted and repaired by the Public Record Office. The Montacute Papers belonging to R. Phelips, Esq., are being arranged and bound, and some manuscripts belonging to the Corporation of Abingdon have also been repaired and bound.

Transcripts of the papers relating to the Gunpowder Plot, noticed in the last report, have been made and placed with similar books in the Public Record Office, where they are now available for public use.

The Calendar of the Earl of Macclesfield's letters has been continued; 16 bundles, comprising 1,820 documents, have been calendared.

Dr. Stuart reports that the Earl of Dalhousie has resolved to print the "Registrum "de Panmure" (noticed in the Commissioners' First Report, App., p. 119), and has requested him to undertake the editorship of it. The collection contains numerous charters, many of them of early date. The Early English Text Society has obtained the permission of the Marquis of Lothian to print the Anglo-Saxon Homilies of the 10th century, noticed in the last report of the Commissioners (App., p. 14). That Society has printed a very scarce, if not unique edition of Lyndesay's Minor Poems from Lord Mostyn's collection. The Camden Society has printed, under the editorship of Mr. S. R. Gardiner, a selection of letters and papers from the collection of the Hon. G. M. Fortescue, a catalogue of which is annexed to this report (App., p. 49). One of the manuscripts in a volume belonging to Mr. Harvey, of Ickwell Bury, reported on last year, was found to contain information which proved to be of use to a gentleman who is now occupied on a life of Sir P. Sydney; and other persons have obtained important historical facts (which were previously unknown) from Your Commissioners' First Report.

Your Commissioners have much satisfaction in informing Your Majesty, that, in pursuance of the recommendation made in their report of last year respecting the papers in the House of Lords, Sir John George Shaw Lefevre, Clerk of the Parliaments, has engaged two of his officers to continue the arrangement of the papers in question, and that the Lords of Your Majesty's Treasury, at the instance and recommendation of Your Commissioners, have expressed their willingness to devote an annual sum towards the expenses of arranging and calendaring the same. The two gentlemen chosen by Sir John Shaw Lefevre have already commenced their labours. They state in one of their reports to Your Commissioners that the papers dated between 1629 and 1640, though not very numerous, are very interesting and important. They call attention to the original documents of Archbishop Laud's visitation in 1634, consisting of the articles issued and the answers, joint or separate, from the members of the several chapters. They also refer to the papers respecting J. Dury's mission to the Continent (1630–39), for a reconciliation between the Lutherans and Calvinists, consisting of his letters to the Archbishop, copies of his letters from foreign divines, resolutions of the Synods, &c. These papers will probably add much to the knowledge extant on the subject. Specimen calendars will be found in the Appendix, p. 106.

The Duke of Bedford sent for the information of Your Majesty's Commissioners an inventory of his MSS. at Woburn Abbey, with permission to have any portion of them calendared that the Commissioners might consider of historical importance. The catalogue is printed at p. 1 of the Appendix.

Among the Earl of Bradford's papers is the valuable correspondence of Lord Torrington while Ambassador at Brussels, from 1782 to 1792, giving the threads of European diplomacy during that important period. Mr. Horwood's report on this collection will be found in the Appendix, p. 30.

The collection of Countess Cowper and Baroness Lucas, at Wrest Park, described by Mr. Horwood (App., p. 4), includes a fine copy, written about 1400, of Higden's Polychronicon in Latin; the English Brut Chronicle, 15th century, and a French version of the same; a fine cartulary of Croyland Abbey (14th century), important, because it shows that the compiler did not know of or did not believe in the early charters cited by Ingulphus; the cartulary of the Abbey of St. John the Baptist at Colchester (13th century); four volumes of original works by Wyclif; a portion of Nicholas Trivet's French Chronicle; a curious early Chronicle pedigree of the great house of Mortimer; and interesting political memoranda by Lord Grenville, 1761–1768, and by Lord Grantham, 1766–1769.

Earl Spencer's MSS. at Spencer House, St. James's, contain most important materials for the history of the periods to which they relate, as will be seen in Mr. Horwood's report at p. 12 of the Appendix. Among them is a thin volume in the autograph of the Marquis of Halifax, containing notes of his conversations with King William the Third on persons, parties, and politics. Lord Spencer possesses two copies of this interesting paper, but was not seemingly aware that he owned the original. The Journal of the expedition of Robert, first Lord Spencer, who carried the Garter to Frederic, Duke of Wurtemburg in 1603, is curious and interesting. There are many hundred letters which contain ample illustrations for the political and social history of England during the 16th, 17th, and 18th centuries. There are several letters from gentlemen in attendance on Queen Catherine (widow of Charles the Second), when she went to Portugal after the death of her husband. There are some volumes which give copies of letters in the 16th and 17th centuries, among them are some from Mary Queen of Scots and Arabella Stuart. Letters from Sir Walter Raleigh, and other persons of note of the 16th and 17th centuries, give notices of raids on the Scottish border, of Court life and entertainments. Among the letters of the 17th century is one giving a notice of the marriage of Carr, Earl of Somerset, and the presents made at his marriage, and one by Archie (the King's fool), in 1616. An original letter by the Prince of Orange (17th December 1688) to the Marquis of Halifax and two other peers, to advise King James to go to Ham, where he would be safe. Among the writers of letters in the 18th century may be named, Sarah Duchess of Marlborough, David Garrick, Sir W. Jones, Sir Sidney Smith, Charlotte Queen of Naples, and Sir W. Hamilton. Some letters by Kent (the artist?) give curious notices of Alexander Pope.

The collection of the Earl of Mount Edgcumbe contains many letters illustrating the Civil War and the reigns of Charles I. and Charles II.; a document relating to Perkin Warbeck's conspiracy; an unpublished work on Forest Law, by Recorder Fleetwood; and papers about a naval expedition by Sir P. Edgcumbe (temp. Elizabeth), to assist Don Antonio, claimant to the Portuguese throne. Mr. Horwood's report is printed at p. 20 of the Appendix.

Earl Cathcart possesses a most extensive collection, containing numerous letters about the rebellions of 1715 and 1745; the troops abroad under the Duke of Marlborough; Earl Cathcart's embassy to St. Petersburg in 1768; and the English military expeditions to Holland and Bremen at the end of the last century. These papers will all be found fully described in Mr. Horwood's report in the Appendix, p. 24.

The Earl of Dartmouth's MSS., reported on by Mr. Horwood (App., p. 9), are valuable as containing numerous letters to Colonel William Legge, one of the stanchest supporters of Charles I.; many official papers regarding Tangier and its abandonment; scores of letters by Samuel Pepys on navy matters; numerous holograph letters by James II.; and several by the Prince of Orange (afterwards William III.). In 1688, Lord Dartmouth was Commander of the Fleet, and the part he took in the Revolution is well known. The correspondence here during 1688 is very extensive, and the letters in November and December, including originals by James II. and the Prince of Orange, are of high interest and value.

The collection of MSS. of Viscount Dillon at Dytchley (App., p. 31), though small, is certainly very choice; among them may be noticed Wycliffe's translations of the Gospels, with commentaries in English, one of which, that on St. Mark, appears to be unknown. It is not a little remarkable that two circumstances connected with the career of this celebrated man have been brought under public notice by the proceedings of the Historical Manuscripts Commission. Henry Lee's "Discovery and Recovery of Ireland," the letters of Charles II. and James, Duke of York, and letters and papers illustrating the French military operations on the Continent, 1706–1715, may be pointed out as well worthy of attention.

The collection of Lord Wrottesley, reported on by Mr. Horwood (App., p. 46), contains several interesting documents; it includes, among others, an original deed of composition under the Dictum of Kenilworth, and the existence of any other besides that at Wrottesley is not known. Letters relating to John Duddeley, the Duke of Northumberland, who was beheaded in the first year of the reign of Mary. He obtained from Henry VIII. a grant of the lands of the dissolved Priory of Dudley; these lands now belong to Lord Wrottesley, and the title deeds show distinctly the identity between Mr. Duddeley and the subsequent Duke of Northumberland. The deed of 1088, although only a copy, is not in the Monasticon. It is evidently taken from the muniments of Evesham Abbey, as affecting the anterior title of the manor.

The large and valuable collection of manuscripts belonging to Lord Calthorpe has been reported on by Mr. Horwood (App., p. 39). It contains original letters by Henry VIII., Philip, Queen Elizabeth, Mary, Queen of Scots, and some foreign sovereigns; original letters from persons engaged by Henry VIII. in the matter of the divorce; very important papers and letters regarding the Queen of Scots, and curious drawings of her trial and execution; large collections concerning the Hanse Towns in the 16th century; and considerable information on the many salient points of Elizabeth's reign. Some few papers are in the hand of Lord Burghley, and many of the volumes contain important notes by their former collector and framer, Robert Beale, who was Clerk of the Council to Queen Elizabeth.

Lord Lyttelton's MSS. (App., p. 36), contain letters illustrating the Civil War, and letters from eminent literary men in the 18th century, including Swift, Pope, Voltaire, and Dr. Johnson; and a curious note as to the first form of Lord Bolingbroke's "Idea of a Patriot King."

The collection of Sir Henry Dryden, Bart. (App., p. 63), includes letters by and to members of the poet's family during the 17th and 18th centuries, and an interesting letter of Atterbury when in the Tower.

The papers of the late Sir Baldwin Leighton, Bart., of Loton Park (App., p. 64), though not of great historical importance, yet contain matter which will be interesting to many persons.

Sir George Osborn's manuscripts (App., p. 65) contain some papers relative to Guernsey, but they have nearly all been printed.

Among the MSS. belonging to the Trustees of the late Sir Richard Puleston, Bart., reported on by Mr. Horwood (App., p. 65), is a very copious "Bouche of Court," giving a minute account of the various officers and attendants of the Royal household, temp. Henry VIII., their daily diet, and regulations for orderly behaviour within the precincts; an elementary work for teaching the Latin language, by John Leylonde, an Englishman of the 15th century; the original creation of Chirk to be a borough; illustrations of the tenure of land in Wales in the 14th century; notices of Dean Swift, and of the oppressive proceedings of Parliamentarians during the Civil War.

Mr. Antrobus, of Eaton Hall, Cheshire, submitted his manuscripts to the inspection of your Commissioners; though they are chiefly of a local nature, belonging to the class of title deeds, yet among them there are a few documents of historical value. (App., p. 69.)

In the collection belonging to Mr. W. R. Baker, Bayfordbury, Herts, are letters from Dryden, Addison, Aphra Behn, Congreve, Davenant, Dennis, Sir Godfrey Kneller, Sir J. Vanbrugh, Pope, Prior, Sir Richard Steele, and others, addressed to the well-known Jacob Tonson. Mr. Horwood's report will be found at p. 69 of the Appendix.

Colonel Myddelton-Biddulph, of Chirk Castle, possesses a manuscript chronicle of Wales, composed in the 16th century, as well as notices of King Charles at Oxford in 1636. (App., p. 73.)

In the collection of Mr. Richard Corbet, of Market Drayton, are some early deeds relating to Stoke and Drayton in Shropshire, and a book of seignorial rules for the town of Drayton, from 36 Hen. VIII. to 1720. (App., p. 77.)

Mr. Wm. Bromley-Davenport, M.P., of Baginton Hall, co. Warwick, and Capesthorne, co. Chester, possesses a document which possibly refers to Wm. Shakespeare; an unpublished letter and poem by Ben Jonson; letters by Atterbury; interesting historical memoranda by James Wright (of the Temple) from 1685 to 1714; English poems of the 15th century; a poem by Henry Marten, the regicide; and early documents relating to the serjeanty of the forest of Macclesfield. The collections at Baginton and Capesthorne are fully described by Mr. Horwood in his reports (App., pp. 78, 80).

Mr. C. Cottrell Dormer, of Rousham, possesses letters by Sir Philip Sidney, and by Katherine, the widowed Countess of Suffolk, to the Earl of Leicester, and letters containing notices of the Duke of Monmouth and Algernon Sidney; letters by the Royal Family of England while in exile during the Protectorate; and the interesting journals of Mr. Dormer's ancestors as Masters of the Ceremonies during the 17th and 18th centuries. Mr. Horwood's report will be found at p. 82 of the Appendix.

Mr. J. R. Ormsby Gore, M.P., of Brogyntyn, co. Salop, has the letter book formerly belonging to Richard de Bury, Bishop of Durham (temp. Edw. III.), containing copies of royal and other letters of importance; a 15th century volume of English poems; English tracts in the form of dialogue on ecclesiastical and social matters (temp. Henry VIII.); a fine copy of Higden's Polychronicon; numerous original letters by King Charles I., Prince Rupert, Prince Maurice, Sir John Byron, and others during the time of the Civil War. (App., p. 84.)

Mr. H. B. Mackeson's collection (App., p. 91) contains letters and papers touching the concerns and management of Hythe, and its relations with the other Cinque

Ports; Churchwarden's account, temp. Henry IV.; parts of a guild book, temp. Hen. VI., Hen. VII., and Hen. VIII.

The charter chests of the family of Neville, of Holt, co. Leicester (App., p. 93), contain a fine 12th century letter by Walter, Archbishop of Rouen, regarding the patronage of a church in England; an original letter giving account of the ravages by the French and English during Henry V.'s invasion of France; a roll of charges against William de la Pole, Duke of Suffolk, temp. Henry VI.; a deed giving a new fact in the life of William of Wykeham; a grant by Cecily, mother of King Edward IV., wherein she asserts that her late husband was rightful King of England; a pedigree of the Carringtons of the North, showing why Sir John Carrington (who died in 1446) assumed the name of Smyth; a volume containing copies of numerous State papers, temp. Queen Elizabeth.

Among the Standish Papers sent by Mr. Peake (App., p. 92), are the original documents executed on the foundation of a chantry in the parish church of St. Wilfrid in Standish, co. Lancaster.

Mrs. Prescott's collection, reported on by Mr. Horwood (App., p. 97), contains letters (original and copies) by Oliver Cromwell and members of his family, and the original account by Samuel Morland, laid before Cromwell, of the expenditure of the money raised for the persecuted Vaudois.

Mr. J. J. Rogers, of Penrose, co. Cornwall, possesses some papers relating to the Civil War and the Duke of Monmouth's rebellion. (App., p. 98).

Mr. Wm. W. E. Wynne, of Peniarth, co. Merioneth, possesses early manuscripts of the histories of Beda and Henry of Huntingdon, and later manuscripts of the histories of Alfred of Beverley and Nennius; large collections for early English and Welsh history, by John Lewis, of Lynwern (temp. James I.); the original duplicate signed by Francis I., of France, of a treaty between him and King Henry VIII., against the Turks; copies of State papers (temp. Queen Elizabeth); a transcript of Leland's Commentaries, which will supply the blanks in Hearne's edition; copies of the 13th century of 35 charters by Anglo-Saxon Kings, from A.D. 800 to A.D. 1048; a dramatic mystery in the Cornish language, A.D. 1508; several copies of the Brut Chronicle, some in English and some in Welsh; several very early copies of the Welsh Laws; an unpublished letter by the Earl of Mar in 1717, relative to a projected invasion to reinstate the Pretender. This priceless collection (the Hengwrt and Peniarth collections combined) comprises about 600 volumes. Mr. Horwood's report is printed in the Appendix, p. 103.

In the Chetham Library there is a volume consisting of transcripts in the 17th century of valuable matter for the civil and ecclesiastical history and topography of Ireland. (App., p. 156).

Among Lord Camoys's MSS. at Stonor Park (App., p. 33), is a noble folio volume upon vellum, in the original oaken boards, containing several treatises; among them is "The Ladder of Perfection," "The Stimulus Amoris, or Prickyng of Love," by S. Bonaventura, translated into English by Walter Hilton; "Amor Dei, or the "Love of God;" a poem in English verse called "The Prick of Conscience," by Richard Hampole.

Of the extensive and very curious collection of MSS. belonging to Lord Arundell of Wardour, at Wardour Castle, reported on by Mr. Stevenson (App., p. 33), the series of household rolls forms an important feature. They illustrate the history of prices in England from the reign of Edward III. to that of Elizabeth, while numerous particulars connected with the progress of art, trade, commerce, architecture, &c. are here recorded. It might be advisable that the whole series should be examined more closely than possibly could be done in a preliminary and partial inspection.

Many of the articles contained in Miss Ainslie's MS. volume (App., p. 68) are of interest for the illustration of the early history of the City of London, its trade, privileges, and customs. Copies of such as are unprinted might be secured and deposited in the Public Record Office, or in the Library of the City of London.

The collection of MSS. belonging to Mr. Berington, at Little Malvern Court, has at present been only partially examined, it would therefore be premature to decide what are the chief treasures which are deposited therein; so far, however, as it has been inspected, there is no doubt that among the letters which it contains, connected with the private history of the family from the early years of Queen Elizabeth to the end of last century, there must be many of which a more detailed account is desirable. The papers connected with the Council of Prince Arthur are worthy of especial notice; and full transcripts of these should, if possible, be obtained. Indeed, the preparation of a calendar of the principal documents, especially of the original correspondence, is most desirable. Mr. Stevenson's report will be found at p. 72 of the Appendix.

Mr. Stevenson's report on MSS. lately in the possession of Mrs. Collis (App., p. 76) notices, as illustrative of the Liturgical History of the English Reformation, "The Order of Common Prayer," used in the English Congregation at Frankfort, which claims attention. It is believed that no other copy is in existence.

Mr. Stevenson also brings forward (App., p. 125) an important manuscript belonging to St. Mary's College, Oscott, relating to the building of St. Peter's at Rome, which was unknown when he made his report last year on the collection of manuscripts belonging to that college.

There are two manuscripts in the library at Ampleforth College, to which notice should be directed. One of them is MS. 18, being a history of the English Benedictine Order, by Weldon; the other, MS. 31, furnishes a history of the Dissolution of the houses of the English Benedictines in France at the time of the first Revolution. Mr. Stevenson's report on this collection will be found at p. 109 of the Appendix.

The report upon the collection of MSS. at Stoneyhurst College (App., p. 143) is not yet completed. Attention, however, may be directed to the following articles:—The history of the early language and literature of England is illustrated by the Saxon lines contained in MS. 3; the roll containing a poem upon the Passion of our Lord, MS. 32; the treatise upon Contemplation, by Walter Hilton, MS. 33; the poems and pieces in prose by Chaucer, Bishop Alcock, and others, in MSS. 2 and 26; and by the curious dictionary in Latin and English, MS. 18. The civil and ecclesiastical history of England is represented by the following MSS., none of which, it is believed, have hitherto been collated:—The first volume of a splendid copy of Froissart, unknown to the Baron Kervyn de Lettenhove and M. De Lys, whose editions of this chronicle are in course of publication, MS. 10. A copy of the history of Henry of Huntingdon, MS. 29. A copy of the ecclesiastical taxation of England by Pope Nicholas IV., MS. 25. The act book of the commissary of the Monastery of Whalley, MS. 19, contains much matter illustrative of the moral and social condition of the district about the beginning of the 16th century. The MSS. marked 5, 6, 7, 8, are worthy the attention of the student of the ritual of the Roman Catholic Church. As illustrative of the history of art, the MSS. numbered 4, 10, 11, 13, may be consulted.

The interest of the reader will be excited by the perusal of the narrative contained in MS. 18 of the collection of Woodchester MSS. near Stroud, of which a detailed account is given in the report upon this library by Mr. Stevenson. (App., p. 146.)

Lord Leigh sent for the information of Your Majesty's Commissioners two very valuable MSS., which are fully described at p. 49 of the Appendix.

The manuscripts at Dropmore belonging to the Hon. G. M. Fortescue are very interesting and of much historical worth. Mr. Fortescue has kindly sent to the Commissioners a catalogue of them, prepared by Mr. Rawson Gardiner, and which is printed at p. 49 of the Appendix.

Among the manuscripts belonging to Colonel Carew, and submitted to Your Majesty's Commissioners, is one deserving of especial notice. It is a 10th century copy of the four Gospels, followed by a lectionary; after which there is a contemporary copy, or nearly so, of the celebrated letter of Fulco, Archbishop of Rheims, to King Alfred. As a full description of this valuable volume is given at p. 74 of the Appendix, it is needless to do more here than call attention to it.

Dr. Hoskins submitted to Your Commissioners a very interesting collection, made by himself, relating to Jersey. He believes that the papers are the component parts of the work long lost, entitled "Journal et Recueil des choses les plus remarquables en "l'isle de Jersey, par Jean Chevalier, vingetenier de le ville de St. Helier." (App., p. 158).

The manuscripts in the Cathedral Library of Carlisle were submitted to the Commissioners by the Rev. R. W. Dixon. They chiefly relate to ecclesiastical matters and border history, and contain valuable materials for the local and family history of the northern counties. (App., p. 123.)

By the continued favour of the Heads of Houses at Oxford and Cambridge, Mr. H. T. Riley has been enabled to resume his examination of what may be called the "Domestic Records" of the Colleges in the two Universities.

Among the records preserved at Clare College (formerly Clare Hall), Cambridge, its ancient Minute Book, or Register, claims especial notice. Information as to the early history of the College is to be derived from it that has probably been lost sight of for centuries, throwing light more especially upon the munificent provision made for its Chapel by the Foundress, and the history of some of its early Masters and Benefactors. The collection of Letters, carefully preserved by the College, is interesting, those of Tillotson, while still a Fellow of this College, and at a later date, occurring in considerable numbers. Among the other writers are to be found the names of Margaret Duchess of Newcastle, Saunderson Bishop of Lincoln, Pearson Bishop of Chester, Henchman Bishop of London, and Moore Bishop of Norwich. There is a letter of Robert Lover to Mr. Blythe, afterwards Master, descriptive of the ravages of the plague in Cambridge in 1665. The College Order Book contains many entries indicative of the state of political feeling in Cambridge at the beginning of the last century. Extracts from all the above sources are given in Mr. Riley's report in the Appendix, p. 110.

At Gonville and Caius College is preserved the MS. History of the College written by Dr. Caius, its third Founder, a few extracts from which are entered in the Appendix to this Report, p. 116; in which also the names of Francis Quarles (the Emblematist) and Titus Oates, formerly members of the College, will be found mentioned. The oldest Computus or Bursars' Account-book of this College, now in existence, begins in 1423, and contains matters of antiquarian and topographical interest.

Among the most valuable records in the possession of Jesus College, Cambridge, are the Computi of the Nunnery of St. Radegund, on the site of which the College now stands. Mr. Riley has given in his report copious extracts from them, in the Appendix, p. 119. Some of the early deeds here throw light upon Cambridge localities, as early as the 12th century.

Though the College itself is of early foundation, the records belonging to Trinity Hall cannot be said to be of ancient date. Among its papers are Letters from Queen Elizabeth, Lord Bacon, and Bancroft Archbishop of Canterbury; and a Letter (or copy of a Letter) from the Fellows of the College to Henry Earl of Holland, Chancellor of the University, begging that John Selden (who was educated at Oxford) may be appointed Master. All these are noticed in the Appendix, p. 121, with various memoranda relative to Robert Herrick, author of the Hesperides, who was a member of the College.

Among the extracts in the Appendix, p. 126, from the comparatively few records or memoranda in the possession of Corpus Christi College, Oxford, a few notices will be found of Bryan Twyne, Richard Hooker, and Edward Pocock, the divine and orientalist. The book of charges for building the College in the eighth year of Henry VIII. has yielded some extracts, which, it is believed, will be found of interest.

The Computi or Account-rolls of Exeter College are probably among those of earliest date in the University of Oxford. Much information is to be derived from them as to the history of the College; extracts are given in the Appendix, p. 127, in which the name of John Trevisa, a Fellow of the College, and one of the early translators of Higden's Polychronicon, appears more than once. The more ancient deeds and charters also of the College throw light upon the early history of the Halls and various localities of Oxford. The manuscript entries in the Latin Psalter and Hymnal, mentioned in the Appendix, in reference to the Obits of Richard Pates, Bishop of Worcester, and Nicholas Harpsfield, have been deemed worthy of especial remark.

The earlier books of Lincoln College contain particulars relating to the history of the Church of All Saints, in Oxford; some few of these are entered in the Appendix, p. 130. Notices have also been extracted there from one of the College Registers as to Robert Saunderson, afterwards Bishop of Lincoln, and Nathaniel Lord Crewe, Rector of the College and Bishop of Durham. The details as to College life and discipline in the first half of the 17th century that are there given, from the rarity of such details, seem to be of peculiar interest.

One of the most valuable documents in the possession of New College, is a letter written by William de Wykcham, founder of the College, and the only specimen of his writing apparently (beyond his signature) that has survived to these times; it will be found entered in the Appendix, p. 132; the copious extracts also which are there given from the early Books of the Kitchen Steward and the Hall Steward furnish much, and it is believed hitherto unnoticed, information as to the social usages of this country at the close of the 14th century. The rise in the College from the position of lowest scholar, of Thomas Bekyntone, afterwards Dean of the Arches and Bishop of Bath and Wells, has been also traced there from these books. Extracts are also given from the first Register in reference to the early benefactions to the College, its Library and Chapel more particularly.

The chief records belonging to Oriel College are its Computi or Treasurers' Accounts. Extracts are given in the Appendix (p. 136) from those that exist; in them a notice will be found of Henry Chichele Archbishop of Canterbury, then a Fellow of New College, and some particulars relative to St. Mary's, now the University Church. Though not of any great extent, these extracts, it is believed, will be found to contain some matters of interest in reference to the management of the College in those days, and the habits and usages of the times.

From the Computi of Queen's College, Oxford, which begin in 1347, only seven years after the Foundation of the College, many particulars of like features to those presented by the Computi of Exeter and Oriel Colleges may be gathered. Notices extracted from them will be found in the Appendix (p. 137), containing particulars relative to Robert de Eglesfeld, the founder, and to John Trevisa, the translator of Higden's Polychronicon. A John Wyclif is also mentioned in these Computi more than once. It was the opinion of the late Professor Shirley that this personage is identical with our early Reformer: reasons however will be found given in the Appendix for accepting this conclusion not without hesitation, the only alternative clearly being that there must have been two John Wyclifs residing much about the same time in this College. The question is also noticed in the Appendix, whether Henry the Fifth, when Prince, really was, as asserted by tradition, a member of this College; while passages hitherto, it is believed, unnoticed, are given in proof that his uncle, Henry Beaufort, afterwards Cardinal, was a member of the Society. The Register, or Chartulary of the Hospital of St. Julian, or God's House, in Southampton, in the possession of this College, commencing probably in the reign of Edward the Third, contains matters of interest that are at present unexplored, more especially in reference to the former history of Southampton.

Under the head of Trinity College, Oxford, some slight notices will be found in the Appendix (p. 142) of Doctors Kettell and Bathurst (former Presidents of the College), of Elizabeth the second wife of Sir Thomas Pope, the refounder of the house, of Sir Theodore Mayerne, William Chillingworth, John Somers, afterwards Lord Chancellor of England, and the unfortunate Eustace Budgell, who was originally a Member of this College, though in some of the biographies he is mentioned as of Christ Church only.

Worcester, being a College of comparatively recent foundation, has nothing of its own in the way of what may be called "records." It, however, possesses a manuscript Register of the town of Leslie in Fife, A.D. 1606–45. There are some entries in the Register Book of its predecessor on the site, Gloucester Hall, in which the names of Kenelm Digby and John Speed appear among the subscribers to the buildings of the new Chapel in 1630. The folio MS. volume, also noticed in the Appendix, as giving an account of Archbishop Laud's trial, on close examination may possibly be found to disclose facts which have hitherto been overlooked. (App., p. 143.)

The records of Jesus College, Oxford, are but few in number, and not such as call for any especial remark. (App., p. 130.)

The Inventory of effects of Viscount Lisle, "the John Dudley, Duke of Northumber-" land," of history, who was beheaded in 1553, has been deemed worthy by Mr. Riley of a lengthened notice (App., p. 101), as showing to some extent the internal and private economy of a Peer's London house in the middle of the 16th century. The list of the Duke's London Library deserves attention. The occurrence in the manuscript of the names of Robert Dudley (afterwards Earl of Leicester), Guildford Dudley, Sir Richard Verney, "Mr. Harrie Vaine," and several other persons of rank, known in history, renders it of additional interest.

In consequence of their number, and the length of many of the documents, the inspection of the Petyt Manuscripts, in the Library of the Inner Temple, has of necessity been comparatively cursory. The extracts given in the Appendix (p. 151) are sufficient to prove that the originals, if more closely examined, would be not unlikely to throw light upon the history of politics and religion in this country in the reigns of Edward VI. and Elizabeth.

The documents belonging to the Corporation of Abingdon, which have been recently examined (App., p. 149), in addition to those mentioned in the former report, are mainly of interest as illustrating the domestic history of that town in the latter half of the 16th century.

Lord Edmond Fitzmaurice has made a report (App., p. 99) on some manuscript volumes of Irish Parliamentary debates between the years 1776 and 1789, in the possession of Mr. W. T. M. Torrens, M.P. These manuscripts are of value in supplying new materials for the Parliamentary history of Ireland.

Mr. John Harvey, of Ickwell Bury, whose collection of manuscripts was noticed in the Appendix of the First Report, p. 62, has forwarded to the Commissioners another small collection of similar papers. Lord Edmond Fitzmaurice has drawn up an account of them. It will be found at p. 89 of the Appendix.

His Lordship has also called attention to the collection of manuscripts which was formed by the late Mr. Dilke, the grandfather of the present Baronet, Sir Charles W. Dilke (App., p. 63).

With the same liberality with which the Duke of Montrose has so often opened his charter repositories for the illustration of historical works, he readily consented that a report should be made on the muniments of his noble house. The special report by Mr. Fraser on upwards of 200 of these muniments, carefully detailed in calendar form, giving the import of each, will be found in the Appendix, p. 165. So varied are these collections, that perhaps they are not surpassed in historical importance and interest by those of any other ancient family. They include charters from King William the Lion, and subsequent Scottish sovereigns, to successive representatives of the family of Graham, who held high offices in the State, and acted a prominent part in the political transactions of their times. The papers relating to the first Marquis of Montrose include the correspondence of King Charles the First, King Charles the Second, Queen Henrietta Maria, Elizabeth Queen of Bohemia, James Duke of York, Prince Rupert, William Prince of Orange, and others, with that devoted Royalist. The letters of King Charles the First, which are nearly all holograph, and were written at different places during the progress of the Civil War, show the great difficulties in which the King was frequently placed. The letters of the Queen of Bohemia are written with the wit and vivacity which were characteristic of that royal lady. Montrose having presented her with his picture, for which she gives him many thanks, she hung it in her cabinet "to "fright away the brethren;" an epithet which she applies sarcastically to the Covenanters. Living at a place where she had little to do, she had become a good archer, and begged the Marquis to come and help her to shoot. She writes of proposed new commissions to be sent from the King from "godlie brethren" to cross "wicked Jamie Graham's "proceedings." In one of her letters, the Queen playfully alludes to her son Prince Rupert as "Robert le Diable;" and also to the proclamation which was issued against Montrose as that "detestable, bloodie murtherer and excommunicated traitour." On these strong expressions the Queen remarks that the Turks never called the Christians so. In the same letter she adds in a postscript, that the Earl of Brentford told her he was too old to be a knave, having been honest ever. The papers connected with the trial of Montrose and his companions, the depositions of numerous witnesses concerning his invasion of Scotland and the battle of Tippermuir in Perthshire; the petitions of the Ecclesiastical Courts for the execution of justice on his adherents who were imprisoned at St. Andrew's; the acts and proceedings of the Privy Council, and the Committee of Estates for enforcing "the swearing and subscribing" of the solemn League and Covenant, all throw light on the sad condition of Scotland in those unhappy times of civil and ecclesiastical convulsion. The Montrose Papers subsequent to the first Marquis have yet to be inspected and reported on. But it may be stated generally, that they consist of an extensive correspondence of the first Duke of Montrose, who, invested with several offices of State, acted a chief part in the management of the public affairs in Scotland, and was greatly instrumental in accomplishing the union between Scotland and England, for which Queen Anne wrote to him a holograph letter of thanks, which is still preserved in the family. But rich in historical materials as are the Montrose Papers proper, we are informed that there are in the possession of the Duke of Montrose other two collections,—the Lennox and the Menteith,—which are scarcely of less historical importance. On these collections Mr. Fraser has promised to make a separate report.

The Duke of Sutherland's collection at Dunrobin Castle, reported on by Dr. Stuart (App., p. 177), is very valuable. Besides the series of title deeds of lands which occur in the muniment-room there are many miscellaneous documents of importance. Some of these relate to the cathedral establishment of Bishop Gilbert de Moravia, at Dornoch, in the beginning of the 13th century, after the collapse of the earlier ecclesiastical arrangements. Others afford illustrations of the working of the law of sanctuary before the Reformation. One of the papers is of special interest, being letters of dispensation for the marriage of the Earl of Bothwell to Lady Jean Gordon, his first wife, in 1565. This document was not produced in the suit brought by Bothwell to have this marriage declared null, although Lady Jean was a party to it. In the articles given in by the Earl of Murray at Westminster in 1568, it is asserted that the dispensation was abstracted, and all subsequent writers have speculated on the cause of its disappearance down to Mr. Burton, who after discussing the subject says that it is still involved in mystery. It would seem that Lady Jean Gordon, who probably possessed the document throughout, had carried it along with her to Dunrobin on her marriage to the Earl of Sutherland in 1573, and that she declined to produce it in the suit against her, although its production would have made it impossible for Bothwell to have procured the wished-for decrect of nullity. Dr. Stuart has adverted in his report to the suppositions which historians have hazarded as to the cause of the withdrawal, but it seems plain that it is only now that the real circumstances have come to light. There is a mass of correspondence with the leading public men of the day, during the 17th and early part of the 18th centuries, in which are many references to events of national importance. Among them are several from Col. Robert Monro, the author of "The Expedition under Gustavus Adolphus." A series from the Duke of Gordon in the years 1684–5 and 6. In a letter from the Viscount Dundee, in answer to one from the Earl of Sutherland, dissuading him from taking part with King James, the Viscount asserts the instability of the new Government, and advises the Earl to throw in his lot with King James, offering his mediation if he should join with him. There are also many characteristic letters from Simon Lord Lovat. Among the manuscripts are the account books of Sir Robert Gordon, who managed the earldom during the years from 1616 to 1622. They afford many illustrations of the condition of agriculture, as well as of the sports and dress of the period. There is also the original Kalendar of the Abbey of Fearn, in Ross, in which at various periods obits, mainly of neighbouring ecclesiastics, barons, and burgesses, and historical memoranda, have been entered, ranging in date from 1322 to 1650.

The collection of the Earl of Dalhousie at Brechin Castle (App., p. 186), is chiefly remarkable for its extent, comprising (besides the MSS. formerly reported on) the registers of most of the Scotch bishoprics and religious houses, and selections from many of the more important charter rooms of Scotland. One of the volumes is a copy of Wintown's chronicle, and most of the transcripts were made for the Earl of Panmure, and his brother, Mr. Henry Maule, of Kelly, in the early part of last century.

The papers of the Marquis of Huntly at Aboyne Castle relate exclusively to the titles of lands belonging to the family. They begin in the 15th century, and are of great interest for purposes of local history and genealogy. (App., p. 180.)

The documents of the Earl of Airlie at Cortachy are very numerous, illustrating the descents of the family lands and many points of local history from an early period. Dr. Stuart's report will be found at p. 186 of the Appendix. Among the miscellaneous papers is one which shows the importance of the bell of St. Medan (a relic of Celtic times) down to the year 1447, when its hereditary keeper resigned it into the hands of the Lady of Airly as part of her dowry. There is also a charter by William the Lion, to the Abbey of Cupar, and various deeds connected with the office of hereditary porters of the abbey; also Commissions to the Ogilvys of Airly, as Baillies, from the Abbots of Arbroath and Cupar. In a document by the vicar of Lintrathin, dated 27th May 1560, he sets forth that "he has caused the common prayers and homilies to "be read weeklie to the parishioners," referring apparently to the English book of Common Prayer. Several papers relating to the embassy of Lord Ogilvy to Denmark in 1596; others connected with the burning of the bonny house of Airlie in 1640; and many about other events of public as well as domestic interest.

The first portion of the charters of the Earl Cawdor at Cawdor Castle serves, as Dr. Stuart shows in his report (App., p. 193), to throw light on the early thanes and thanages of Scotland, and the whole are of value in illustrating the condition of the country at various periods from the 14th century downwards. In the beginning of the 16th century the line of the thanes ended in a female who was married to Sir John Campbell, a younger son of the Earl of Argyll. Sir John acquired various lands in Argyllshire which had belonged to the monks of Iona, and the documents connected with these contain references of considerable interest.

The documents in the Dunecht collection, belonging to the Earl of Crawford and Balcarres (App., p. 181), consist of the title deeds of various branches of the house of Lindsay to their lands in the north of Scotland, as well as miscellaneous contracts and letters, all of which have been used in the Lives of the Lindsays by Lord Lindsay (now Earl of Crawford). Among the manuscripts is a volume containing the proceedings under a Commission issued by King James I., in 1605, for the settlement of the borders. It contains lists of all the Grahams, and is full of details of the state of society then prevalent in the debateable land, one of them being a list of "the names of those "that standis in feud with otheris." The Commissioners began by expatriating 150 of the Grahams to the low countries, but most of them soon found their way back to their native glens. The proceedings led to an extensive correspondence, all of which is recorded. Among the writers are the Bishop of Carlisle and Lord William Howard, the "Belted Will" of border history.

Besides the charters of the family of the Earl of Morton, at Dalmahoy (App., p. 183), there are in the muniment-room a large collection of miscellaneous original documents, dated from 1474 to 1656. Many of the letters are written by the leading political personages of the day, and they as well as sundry warrants and bonds relate to important public events, while other letters illustrate the social and domestic arrangements of the time. One of the Morton papers about Queen Mary is picturesque. It is a notarial instrument showing how William Douglas, of Lochleven, having entered the Queen's chamber at Lochleven, on the day after her demission of the crown, represented that he had come to know of that act which was accomplished while he was from home, and that he now wished to learn from the Queen herself whether the act had been done of her own free will. Thereupon the Queen asserted that it had been entirely of her free will and consent. The instrument gives the questions and answers in Scotch.

Most of the early charters of the family of the Earl of Rosslyn, Dysart House, were destroyed in an accidental fire in 1722, but a few of very early date, and a few more documents relating to lands in Orkney, escaped. In an obligation by Maitland of Lethington, secretary to Queen Mary, in 1564, relative to a marriage settlement, is a reference to a house called "the Hermitage" in the town of Dysart, which connects itself with a body of early ecclesiastical history, and especially with the circumstance of St. Serf, or Servanus, having here established a hermitage or "desertum," from which the surrounding territory took its name. Among the manuscripts is a journal kept by Archbishop Paterson of Glasgow while in London in 1695–6, and a book of household expenses of the Lord of Dysart in 1564. There is an extensive collection of letters of more modern date, to the first and second Earls of Rosslyn, by some of the most eminent political leaders of the period; the earliest portion was addressed to the first Earl, while he was Lord High Chancellor of England, as Lord Loughborough, and comprises a series from Lord Clive, Edmund Burke, Lord Carlisle, the Duke of Portland, Charles James Fox, William Pitt, Lord Thurlow, and others. There are also papers by Chancellor Loughborough on the state of affairs in America, on the union between Great Britain and Ireland, memoranda of law cases, drafts of bills, with the Chancellor's remarks and relative correspondence. The later portion of the letters addressed to the second Earl of Rosslyn ranges in date from 1806 to 1830; among them are despatches from Henry Brougham to Lord Rosslyn, October and November 1806, and private letters from him to the Earl, 1806–7; there are besides many letters from Mr. Brougham, of later dates, on all sorts of subjects, such as the Roman Catholic question and the King's opinion of it, the position of the writer with regard to office, and the like. There is an extensive series of unreserved political letters from Earl Grey to Lord Rosslyn, dated from 1821 to 1829, and several from the Duke of Wellington in 1829. There is a separate series, dated in 1799, from Lord Nelson, Lord St. Vincent, and Lord Keith, to General Sir James St. Clair, Bart., who became second Earl of Rosslyn in 1805. Dr. Stuart's interesting report will be found in the Appendix, p. 191.

There are masses of charters in the Earl of Stair's muniment-room, but the feature of most public interest in his collection (App., p. 188) is the "Stair Papers," being the despatches, instructions, and correspondence of Field Marshal John second Earl of Stair, the soldier and diplomatist. He began his military career by distinguished services in the campaigns of Marlborough; and commanded at the battle of Dettingen; he was Ambassador in Poland in 1709 and in France under the Regency. These papers have been arranged in 28 volumes folio, and one volume 4to. The last contains a series of letters which passed between the Earl of Stair (as "Captain John Brown,") and the Earl of Mar (as "John Murray,") in the years from 1716 to 1720. The folio volumes contain the correspondence of Lord Stair, while ambassador at the French Court, with the Secretaries of State and other political officials, some of the letters are in cipher, and amid many merely formal documents there are others which are of value for understanding the politics of Europe, and the state of parties in England during the period which they embrace, the writers being very various and of all countries.

Among the papers of the Earl of Strathmore (App., p. 185) is a series of charters of the lands belonging to the family of Lord Strathmore, from the time of Sir John Lyon, who in the year 1372 received a grant of the thanage of Glamis from King Robert II., with his daughter, whom he married. The manuscripts include a "Book of "Record" kept by Patrick, Earl of Strathmore, who towards the end of the 17th century rebuilt the castle of Glamis, and has left a minute account of the steps which he took in doing so, including his contracts with tradesmen, among them was the Dutch painter, De Wit; besides giving many particulars of his personal history. There are numerous inventories of furniture, plate, pictures, dresses, and jewels, partly of Earl Patrick's time, and partly of earlier date.

The collection of Lord Forbes, on which Dr. Stuart has made a full report (App., p. 193), contains many ancient documents of value for illustrating local history and topography. Among the miscellanea are early examples of those bonds of manrent by which powerful families entered into league with each other for protection in days when the law was too weak to assert its supremacy; there are several letters of interest, some of them illustrate the spirit which led so many of the younger sons of Scotch families to seek employment as soldiers under the leader who could afford the highest pay; one of them relates certain occurrences which had nearly led to the last judicial combat in England; others illustrate the disorganized condition of the north of Scotland, and one series describes the services of Lord Forbes in Ireland during the rebellion of 1642. A document, of which it is not known that any other copy has been preserved, is a memorial of 20 Scottish peers to Queen Anne, occasioned by a resolution of the House of Lords when the Duke of Hamilton was created an English peer. A volume containing rentals of the Forbes estates in 1552 affords very detailed information on the state of agriculture, and the condition of the country generally.

The early charters in the collection of Lord Torphichen at Calder House (App., p. 196), are of interest in connexion with the history of the house of Douglas, by marriage with a daughter of which the representation of the old Earls of Douglas is claimed by the family of Sandilands of Calder. There is also a series of papers of still wider interest connected with the history of the Knights Templars in Scotland, whose estates became vested in the family of Sandilands at the period of the Reformation. Some of these are of the 13th century, and others of the 15th and 16th.

The family of Burnett was settled at Crathes by King Robert Bruce in 1323, and has continued to flourish to the present time. The charters begin at that time, and the collection of Sir J. H. Burnett (App., p. 197) is large, but there are few papers of general historical interest in it. Among the letters is one from the Covenanting leaders in 1639; one from the Earl Marischal in 1650; and one from King Charles II. in 1651. There is also a letter from Bishop Burnet (descended from this house) in 1700. There is a Court Book of the Barony of Leys, and another of the Barony of Skene, ranging from 1613 to 1674, which afford some insight into the agricultural and social arrangements of the district.

Amongst the papers belonging to Mr. John Guthrie (App., p. 197) are various letters and papers of John Guthry, Bishop of Murray, who was deprived of his office by the Covenanters in 1638. There is a series of letters addressed to Francis Guthry of that ilk by the Bishop of Raphoe, and others, dated from 1639 to 1660. Another series is from the Marquis of Douglas and his son, the Earl of Angus, to the Laird of Guthry. Most are on matters of local interest, but a few of them contain references to public events, such as the coronation of Charles II. Several manuscripts of necromancy are filled with prayers and conjurations for revealing secrets and exorcising evil spirits.

The great bulk of the papers in the collection of Mr. Alex. F. Irvine (App., p. 198) consist of the title deeds of the many lands acquired by the family, beginning with their first grant of Drum from King Robert I., and many of them are of value for purposes of county history. Among the miscellaneous papers is a protestation by Sir Alexander Irvine, and his appeal to Col. Overtoun, one of Cromwell's captains, against the Presbytery of Aberdeen, which seems to illustrate the aspect of the contest between Presbytery and Independency, then in progress.

In the Whitehaugh collection (App., p. 198) are the valuable charters of the family of Forbes of Tolquhon, dating from 1420, of which Mr. Leith is the representative, besides those relating to the lands which have at various periods belonged to his own branch of the family of Leith. Among the manuscripts is a Book of Accounts kept by George, third Earl of Winton, from 1627 to 1651. This Earl was the builder of the house of Winton, and many of the entries relate to his expenditure on it. There are also payments to Sir Thomas Hope, the Lord Advocate; to Adame, the painter, for portraits of Lord Errol, Lady Hay, and the Earl himself; and many of the entries throw light on the condition of society at the time.

The documents belonging to the University of Aberdeen are numerous, consisting of the deeds of foundation, papers regarding the course of education and internal management, and also the buildings and library. Among the manuscripts the most prominent portion consists of about 20 volumes, mostly lectures and notes of books on canon law, which belonged to Bishop Elphinstone, the founder. There is also a copy of "The "Mirrour of our Lady" for half of the year. In the library of Marischal College are several MSS. of the Fathers, formerly in the monastic houses in Aberdeen; a Commentary on the Revelations, written by Thomas Reid, secretary to King James VI., with alterations in his Majesty's handwriting; also original papers and correspondence of Maclaurin. Dr. Stuart's report will be found at p. 199 of the Appendix.

The records of St. Andrew's (App., p. 206), which are unusually complete, commence almost with the foundation of the University in 1411, and contain materials for tracing the history of this great literary institution both before and after the Reformation; its schemes of study, its modes of collegiate life, and the eminent men whom it has nurtured in learning. There are also many records of a miscellaneous description, illustrative of the ecclesiastical foundations in the churches of St. Andrew's, the endowments of which were conferred on the University and colleges. In one of these is a contemporary notice of the proceedings against Patrick Hamilton, Abbot of Fearn, who was burned for heresy at St. Andrew's in 1527. Among the manuscripts is a copy of Wyntown's Cronikil and a Formulare, or volume of styles of the 16th century. The latter contains more than 600 writs, illustrating every variety of process in the Roman Court or at home—and the pervading influence of the system of the old Church—and is especially deserving of notice.

Among the letters at Trinity College, Glenalmond (App., p. 203), are several from Archbishop Sharp and the Duke of Lauderdale, relating to ecclesiastical proceedings in Scotland; and an extensive series illustrates the history and internal condition of the Episcopal Church subsequent to the Revolution of 1688, especially on questions of liturgical usages then in debate. A letter from Rose, the last established Bishop of Edinburgh, gives a graphic picture of his interviews with the Bishop of London and William III. There are some historical papers from the collections of Bishop Keith and Bishop Forbes, and sundry manuscripts and letters relating to the Eastern Church, and the proposals for an alliance between it and the Nonjurors in Scotland and England, which were mooted in the early part of the 18th century.

The records of the burgh of Montrose (App., p. 205) are of early date, and throw light on the early position of a Scotch burgh, showing that their privileges extended over a wide territory around the town. Much of their history at the outset is occupied with the encroachments which one burgh made on another within the enfranchised district, and which called for frequent acts of the King in their determination. Many of the documents afford incidental illustrations of the commercial arrangements of the period, while others relate to the ancient hospital of Montrose; altarages within the parish church; and a house of Dominican friars in the burgh.

The MSS. contained in the library of Blairs College, reported on by Mr. Stevenson (App., p. 201), relate for the most part to the early ecclesiastical history of Scotland; of these the more important are the collections of Father Brockie towards the formation of a "Monasticon Scotiæ," MSS. 25–34; two annotated copies of the Salisbury missal, MSS. 2, 3, 4; the collections of Father Placidus Fleming, MS. 14; the charters and other early documents connected with the history of the Scottish Benedictines in Germany, MS. 15. The narrative of Gilbert Blackal, No. 20, has already been printed. As illustrative at once of the history of art and as personal memorials connected with such individuals as Anne of Bretagne and Mary Beton, the MSS. numbered 22 and 23 have an especial interest.

In Ireland the labours of the Commission have during the past year been attended with very satisfactory results, as will be apparent from the amount of important matter brought to light in the reports from Mr. Gilbert now appended.

The documents of the house of Forbes in the archives of the Earl of Granard (App., p. 210) are of importance in illustrating the public affairs of Ireland, in which his Lordship's ancestors acted conspicuous parts. These papers also contain matter relative to the embassy of Admiral Forbes, afterwards third Earl of Granard, to Russia in 1733–34, and his affairs with the Emperor of Austria for the establishment of a marine force in the Adriatic. In the collection of Lord Granard is preserved a hitherto unnoticed personal narrative of affairs in England and Ireland from the Restoration to the accession of James II., supplying details not elsewhere extant. This manuscript is anonymous, but Mr. Gilbert assigns its authorship to Sir Alexander Stewart, first Viscount Mountjoy, in 1689.

In the collection of the Earl of Rosse have been preserved several fragile papers of high interest in connexion with Irish affairs from 1641 to 1690. (App., p. 217.)

The "Plunket Manuscript," which its hereditary owner, the Right Hon. Francis Plunket Dunne, placed at the disposal of the Commission, is all that is now accessible of a large work compiled in the 17th century on the affairs of Ireland from 1641, and referred to with approbation by Carte in 1736. (App., p. 227.) As Mr. Gilbert has ascertained that the original, revised by Dryden, was offered for publication in 1741, it is to be hoped that the now missing portions may be brought to light through the medium of this Commission.

The manuscripts of the O'Conor Don, M.P., include two valuable volumes in the Irish language, not hitherto described in print, as well as some original papers, which are the only specimens of their classes yet brought to light in connexion with Irish Roman Catholics from 1641 to 1690. Mr. Gilbert's report is printed at p. 223 of the Appendix.

Archbishop King's correspondence and papers, submitted by Dr. Lyons (App., p. 231), comprise many unpublished documents of interest relative to England and Ireland from 1681 to 1728. Of these we may notice the correspondence of Addison, and that of Henry Dodwell, the letters of Berkeley, Earl of Sunderland, Robert Molesworth, Sir Robert Southwell and his son Edward, Robert Howard, Dr. A. Charlett, of University College, Oxford, and Samuel Molyneux. Among these papers were found King's memoranda for a reply to Lesley's Answer to his work on the state of the Protestants in Ireland under James II.; a report on the impeachment of Bolingbroke in 1715; and a discourse on the taxation of Ireland, 1716.

The "Register of the Antiquities and Statutes" of Kilkenny, compiled by Robert Rothe, first recorder of that town, in 1609, has hitherto been entirely unknown to historic investigators. This volume, which appears to have lain obscurely in private hands, is of high value, as it supplies copious extracts from documents which have been long missing. (App., p. 257.)

The collection of the Marquis of Ormonde at Kilkenny Castle, on which Mr. Gilbert has made a preliminary report (App., p. 209), is unarranged and uncatalogued. It comprises original documents commencing with the time of Henry II., and extending to the early part of the 18th century. In addition to the documents on vellum, there are letters, papers, and books in large numbers, including a large mass of correspondence in connexion with the public affairs of the second Duke of Ormonde, in the reign of Anne, from which valuable new matter for the history of the period may be derived. The collection includes much of high interest to England, while so far as Ireland is concerned Mr. Gilbert states that he can say, without exaggeration, its value is beyond appreciation. A fuller and more detailed notice of this important collection will be submitted in the next report of the Commission.

Dr. C. W. Russell has given an account (App., p. 103) of two manuscripts from the collection of Mrs. Willes, of Goodrest, Berkshire, widow of the late Edward Willes, Esq., of Newbold-Comyn, in Warwickshire, which promise to throw considerable light on the condition of Ireland about the middle of the last century. They consist of letters and memoranda on the state of Ireland, written in that country by an ancestor of the present owner, the Right Hon. Edward Willes, who was Chief Baron of the Exchequer in Ireland. The letters are addressed to Lord Warwick, an intimate friend of Chief Baron Willes, and give an account of the writer's observations during his several circuits as Judge of Assize, between the years 1757 and 1768. The volume of notes and observations contains the autograph memoranda made by the Chief Baron in Dublin and elsewhere during his residence in Ireland. Neither volume can be said to have much direct bearing on the political or religious history of the period. The interest of both is almost exclusively social and economical; and the information which they supply as to the character of the people, the tenure of land, the mode of agriculture, the industrial and economical relations of the country, and in general its entire social condition, is such as will be sought for in vain in the printed sources of the history of Ireland during the 18th century. The letters appear to be well deserving of publication.

An index to this and the preceding Report of your Commissioners, as well as to the Appendices attached to both, will be found at p. 265 of the Appendix.

It only remains for Your Commissioners to state, that they feel perfectly satisfied with the success of their inquiry, so far as it has proceeded at present. They entertain a confident hope that their future labours will tend greatly to the advancement of Historical Literature, by bringing to the notice of the world important papers and manuscripts, the existence of which might possibly be unknown to the majority of those who may be interested in the inquiry. Your Commissioners are inclined to think that a continuation of their efforts may be the means of preventing those casualties to which valuable collections of MSS. are liable from various causes,—casualties arising not unfrequently from changes in families, from removal of MSS., and ignorance of the localities to which they have been transferred. It may also be of importance to the possessors of valuable documents to know where papers cognate with those in their possession are to be found, and into what direction the lines of correspondence consequent on family alliances or intermarriage may have diverged; whilst to those who are engaged in biographical, historical, or political researches no greater boon can be offered than well-authenticated information, where materials which are indispensable for the due prosecution of their inquiries are preserved. Your Commissioners have also to suggest whether it might not be desirable (with the full consent of the owners) for copies to be taken of the more valuable papers in private collections, not with a view to publication, but as an additional security against those accidents to which all manuscripts are exposed, —accidents, which, in more ways than one, have already inflicted irreparable injury on the historical and biographical literature of this country; and not unfrequently on the memories of those who have served it with the greatest efficiency and fidelity.

The Manuscripts of the Right Honourable the Countess Cowper and Baroness Lucas, at Wrest Park, Bedfordshire.

The Manuscripts are valuable and interesting. They consist of 57 bound volumes, and a great number of letters; besides several numbered volumes and packets of treatises not bound. There is a brief and not quite accurate Catalogue of some of the volumes in the printed book "Catalogi Manuscriptorum Angliæ et Hibernie," fol., Oxford, 1697, p. 391 of the Appendix. Five volumes of translations and original works by Wickliffe (Nos. 11, 26, 32, 38, and 47), and two fine monastic Cartularies (Nos. 6 and 56), make this collection particularly remarkable, and the Illustrations of English and Irish History are considerable. The Catalogue of 1697 contains a few volumes not now in the collection, notably a volume of letters by Philip and Mary of England, which are printed in the Fœdera. The volumes will be taken in order.

No. 1. A large folio, vellum, 13th century, Latin Bible. In 1538 it belonged to John Webster, clerk, a monk of St. Mary of Pippewell. The 5th verse of the 1st Epistle of St. John has not the ending, "and these " three agree in one."

No. 2. A folio volume, paper, 16th century, 52 leaves, labelled "Catalogus Paparum." It is in Latin, and contains the lives of the Popes down to and including Adrian 4th. The name of Clement 7th is entered, but the life does not follow. Begins (after the heading Jesus Christus Dei filius, Ann. 33), "Pace terrâ marique partâ " Octaviano Augusto." It also contains lives of certain Emperors.

No. 3. Large folio, vellum, about A.D. 1400. Higden's Polycronicon in Latin, in seven books. Begins (after a table of 8 leaves), "Post preclaros artium scriptores." The last date is 1346, and it ends with the Prince of Wales and Duke of Lancaster and others going to Calais to make pesce; and the Kings of England and France returned to their respective kingdoms about Michaelmas next ensuing, and soon afterwards messengers were sent to the Pope at Avignon for confirmation of the mutual peace and contracts.

At the end of the volume is a Latin note stating that the volume was bequeathed by John Clynte, Doctor of Theology, to Windsor Herald, afterwards Norrey, king at armes for the North, and then Clarencieux king at armes for the South of England, who bequeathed it to John Wrythe, otherwise Garter king at armes, who bequeathed it to his son Thomas. At the beginning of several of the books is a large bugle's or bull's head erased sable, gutteé ringed and horned or. The word bugle is written against it.

No. 4. A large folio volume, filled with collections for the pedigrees of the De Greys, and the alliances of the family; pedigrees and arms. The collections are of the 17th and 18th centuries (some, I think, were got up for the cases printed in Collins on Baronies).

No. 5. A folio volume, vellum, 15th century, 39 leaves, double columns. An English version in verse (by Hugh Campeden, temp. H. 6) of the Questions of Sydrac. The beginning of the prologue is absent; it ends on fo. 41:—

" Shall they then remember hym ought
" Of wyckednesse that they have wrought."

Then begins the poem as given by Warton (History of English poetry, vol. 2, p. 363, ed. 1840). Ends with the section "If thou have cleydryn kepe hem wele, Till they " ken of age sum dele."

The English Brute Chronicle. This is the ordinary text, beginning "In the noble land of Surrye." Ends (after the siege of Rouen) "in reule & governance." After the chapter "Of the death of King Edward, and " how Sir John Mowmsterworth was hanged and draw " for his fals treason," is the word Amen. And in a fresh hand "And after King Edward that was born at " Windsor, &c. &c."

No. 6. (No. 4. in printed Catalogue). A fine folio, vellum, 14th century. It is a Cartulary of Croyland Abbey, made up originally in the reign of Edw. 3. A later hand has in some places added items tempp. Richard 2d and Henry 4th.

A copious table of 21 leaves is followed by 252 leaves of text, consisting of copies of grants to and by the Abbey, beginning with the Confirmation by King Stephen of the bounds of the Abbey, and the bulls to the Abbey.

The places in which the properties were situate, are Croyland, Hull, Spalding, Pincebek, Surflet, Multone, Quappelade, Holbeach, Ryd, Flete, Burton, Gedeneye, Suterton, Algerkirk, Wyketoft, Botolfston, Kirketon, Langetoft, Baston and Theford, Thurleby, East Depinge, Brassingburgh, Burthorp and Manthorp, Stamford, Ingoldeby, Bukenhale, Ulseby and Stepinge, Merburne, Walmestede and Stiltentone, Overtone, Folkesworth, Wassingle, Glinton and Peykirk, Wyrthorp, Clyve, Estone, Elmygiton, Glaptborn, Adington, Wodeford, Windlingbrugh, Herdwyk, Wyleby, Drayton, Cotenham, Hoketon, Staundone.

The early charters given by the pseudo-Ingulph are not here.

A rather later hand has in the table inserted a list of Mercian kings, beginning with Ethelred, founder of the Abbey; and under Baston, a later hand has inserted a charter of the Anglo-Saxon period, by "Algarus miles "filius Northlangie," of the manor of Baston.

On the first fly leaf are some memoranda temp. Edward 3, of a squabble about fishing.

This cartulary was known to Tanner. See p. 200 of the List of Cartularies in vol. i. of Nichol's Collectanea.

No. 7. A folio volume, paper, 17th century. Copy of the Journals of the House of Lords from 17th May 1685 to the 10th of February following.

No. 8. A folio volume, vellum, 15th century, 54 pages. "Hic sunt que in antiquis cronicis inveniuntur "in diversis monasteriis tam Anglie quam Scotie ex "quibus liquide apparet quod reges Anglie ab antiquo "habuerunt et habere debent subjectionem et homagium "super regnum Scotie."

P. 5. Extracts from the Scotch Laws. P. 6. Papal Bulls. P. 8. French account of King Edward at Norham, and his address; beginning "Notre seigneur le Roy "regardant," and the reply thereto beginning "Sire, la "bone gent d'Escoce." Letters or Writs of Edward, dated Norham, 10th May, 19 Edw. 1, and 31st of May; letter by Florence, Earl of Holland, Robert de Brus, John de Balliol, and several others, dated, Norham, Tuesday after Ascension, 1291; from Edward at Norham the Wednesday following; from Florence Earl of Holland, and the others, same day; from Edward at Norham, 7th June 1291. Names of the 24 magnates of England chosen by the King to try the right of all claiming inheritances in Scotland, and names of those chosen by Bruce; names of those chosen by Balliol; other proceedings. Letter by Robert, Bishop of Bath and Wells, dated Thursday after Feast of St. Paul, 1292. Letter by Eric, King of Denmark; other letters. Fealty done by John Balliol; homage and ligeance by him, &c. At fo. 31. List of fealties done (in Latin), ending on fo. 44. At 45 French begins again; fealties done by Abbats and Corporations.

No. 9. A folio volume, paper, 17th century. Armorial of the Mayors and Sheriffs of London (the arms are coloured), from Fitz-Aylwin to the year 1650. The arms in four pages (A.D. 1622 to A.D. 1630) are only pencilled and not coloured, and the writing is by a different hand.

No. 10. A folio volume, paper, 16th century. Fo. 1. Forma Coronacionis Regum et Reginarum Anglie. Begins "Imprimis princeps noster" . . . (see a copy of this in Mr. Bromley-Davenport's collections).

Fo. 10. A short part (in French) of the Genealogy of the House of Luxembourg, by Roland Bourriel, seigneur Boncourt, &c., Captaine Dauxy, by order of his lord and master Jaques de Luxembourg. Illustrated by pen and ink drawings of armorial bearings. At the end is a drawing of a ragged staff twined with a riband and a blank shield at top.

Fo. 71. A note in English of the christening of Edward Seymour on Wednesday, 25th Sept. 1567. He was born on the 24th.

Copies of patents concerning the Greys.

Fo. 85, A.D. 1508. Copy of the Latin tract on the (intended) marriage of Charles (afterwards the Emperor Charles 5th) with Mary, daughter of King Henry 7th. Begins "Et primum quidem quoniam inter Oratores." . . . . Ends with the verses of Carmeliani. (See Archæologia, vol. 18, p. 33, for an account of a tract printed by Pynson on the (assumed) solemnization of the marriage).

No. 11. Large folio volume, vellum, end of the 14th century, double columns. English Sermons for Advent and feast days. Begins "Scientes quia hora est, Ro. 13. Ric. 2) "si quid inde adversan factionis subori- "retur ipsi Ricardo auxiliatricem pollicitus." This seems a copy corrected by the author. The autograph of William Cecil is on page 1.

No. 14. Folio, paper, 16th century. Transactions in Parliament, 17th March, 3 Car. 1., 1627, to the prorogation on the 26th of June.

No. 15. A folio volume, paper, 16th century. It contains, collections for the family of Lascelles, Extracts from the Great Register of Evidences of the Duchy of Lancaster, and from the Register of Evidences of the Priory of Newhous, Co. Lancaster; and fo. 10, touching the office of Marshal, from records (in French and in Latin).

Fo. 15. Extracts from the Register of the Monastery of the Holy Cross at Waltham; and (fo. 16), from Register of priory of Tuttesbury; fo. 18, from Book of Evidences of Clifford of Frampton, 1573; fo. 22, from Register of the Religious House of Godstowe; fo. 23*b*, from Charters of Montagu; fo. 25, from Charters &c. of Edward Arderne, Co. Warwick; fo. 34, from Charters of Samoson Evdeswicke, 1579; fo. 40, from Register of Evidences of the Priory of Newport Pagnell, Co. Bucks. (at fos. 44 b, and 45 are charters of Annesley and Chaworth); fo. 50, from a book containing transcripts of charters, &c., of the monastery of St. Mary and St. James of Wadden (the book was written out in 1578); fo. 56*b*, from charters of Arthur Gregory, Co. Warwick, 1580; fo. 60, from an old book formerly belonging to the monastery of Westminster, called Diadema Monachorum (the extracts give charters of Dunstan and King Edward, and the originals were, I suppose, written on the fly leaves of the book);—

Fol. 61 b. Sentence by the Court (in French) in the Grey and Hastings dispute as to arms, 11 Hen. 4.

Fol. 63. Extracts from the Melrose Chronicle; 71 b., from Register of Evidences of the priory of Colne in Essex; 76. Extracts from another register; 79 b., from Registers of the Monasteries of Torre, Malmesbury, and Glastonbury.

A problem why the Court of Chancery of late and more especially now in the time of the present Chancellor is more frequented than other Courts (temp. James or Charles 1st).

An essay on Favourites (7½ brief sheets). Begins I never was a favourite myself and therefore may miss in describing that mistery (temp. James or Charles 1st).

Noy's projects 1634; extracts from the Rolls. (About Ship Money.)

List of blacks (mourning apparel) for Henry Earl of Kent, 1614. The total was 75?1.

Essay by Sir Anthony Benn. God before all; all for the King.

7. Copies of a manuscript given by Bishop Tanner to the Bodleian Library. Copy of Queen Anne's letter to the Marquis of Buckingham that Raleigh's life might not be in question.

Of the origin and progress of the troubles in England by Mr. Wren (small 4to).

8. This packet, amongst other things, contains:—

About 50 leaves of a diary A. D. 1743, addressed by a lady to her friend Musidora. The contents are interesting. The writer speaks of Clarissa (Harlowe) and the Castle of Indolence.

Argument for the pastoral drama of Cythnia.

Opinion as to the proceeding by Court-Martial on a dismissed officer for an offence committed while in service. The opinion is apparently by some officers, and they think that such a proceeding is valid.

Copy of a letter by Bishop Fell (of Oxford) to Countess of Nottingham, on her marriage.

Extract from a letter from St. Petersburg, 24th July 1764, about the murder of Prince Ivan by Lieut. Morowitz.

Letter from Sir C. H. Williams at Grodno in Poland, no date. He says that the country of Poland is in a wretched state; speaks of the insolence of the nobility, and their wealth; the Ulans, Cossack linears, have enough cloth in their trowsers to make him a riding coat. The most amiable of women, and daughter of the famous Ponintowski, who went through all the mad King of Sweden's fortune, and who is still alive, is a great friend of mine, and though near fourscore is as active as she was at 18.—English beer all over Poland;—says he was staying at the Great General of Poland's house; the King's hunting, their mode of life;—supposes the house life is like John of Gaunt's in the Savoy; describes the animals; all the Lithuanian ladies have pages, all dwarfs, an odd sight, an assembly of 200 or 300. (The letter is of 5 pages, and addressed to some one at Usk, perhaps his father.)

Copy of letter from Stanislaus King of Poland to Charles Yorke, dated Warsaw, 6 Oct. 1764.

A folio in quires unbound, contains:—Extracts from the originals in the Scotch College by the late Mr. Carte, with a view to the credit of the King James 2nd. The originals in the hands of Mr. Jernegan who married Carte's widow; after his death they were to go to the University of Oxford. Amongst them are several Memorials delivered to the French Court relating to King James's correspondencies with England, and some reports from his emissaries here. Begins with Charles 2nd's Letter, June 8, 1648; ends with "Relation du "Capitaine Floyd nouvelement revenu d'Angleterre," and many letters from the Duke of Portland in 1688. These copies occupy 150 leaves.

An unbound 4to, upwards of 400 pages, contains modern copies of letters from the Earl of Leicester to Cecil, the Duke of Norfolk, and others, and of letters from Walsingham, Sidney, and others to Burghley. The letters range from 1564 to 1585. There are also letters and papers by Wilkes to the Earl of Leicester; some of these copies have notes by Lord Hardwicke. One letter certainly is, and more may be, in "The Leycester Correspondence" edited by Mr. Bruce for the Camden Society, but they do not appear in Hardwicke's Collection of State Papers. Some of them seem to have been copied from Cotton. MS. Galba E. VI.

But for the limits imposed by the Commission I should have described two manuscripts on vellum, which shew that hands still living can vie in patience and skill and taste with those of the scribes and illuminators of old.

Letters.

Letters from Catherine Talbot to MRS. Wastfelde, 1743–1758, about 30 in number.

Correspondence between Catherine Talbot and Lady Annabell Grey, 1763–1769; about 30 letters.

Letters from the Honourable Frederic Robinson to his brother, Lord Grantham, and a few from Lord Grantham, 1778–1780.

Letters to the Honourable Frederic Robinson, 1763–1770, and 1780–1784.

Letters from Lord Borrington to his uncle, Lord Grantham, 1789–1791.

Letters to the Honourable Frederic Robinson, principally from his brother, Lord Grantham, 1785, and 1786; and from various relatives, 1778–1783.

My best thanks are offered to Lady Cowper. A visitor to Wrest Park can never leave but with regret; and her Ladyship most kindly made me her guest.

ALFRED J. HORWOOD.

THE MANUSCRIPTS OF THE RIGHT HONOURABLE THE EARL OF DARTMOUTH, PATSHULL, CO. STAFFORD.

This collection consists almost exclusively of letters; and they are most interesting and valuable. They particularly illustrate two very important passages in the history of this country, viz., the Great Rebellion and the Revolution of 1688. Colonel William Legge was one of the most energetic and faithful supporters of King Charles I.; he suffered severely in person and in purse, and the letters here preserved testify his activity and devotion to the Royal cause. There must have been a severe struggle in the mind of his son George, 1st Lord Dartmouth, before he could adopt a course which seemed so opposed to that of his father; but in transferring the fleet which he commanded to the service of William of Orange, he spared the country much bloodshed and helped to secure the personal and mental liberty which are now the boast of an Englishman. By the course which he adopted he does not seem to have lost the esteem of James II., and Dr. Lingard, in his history of England, has no harsh words for him.

The Civil War letters range from 1640 to 1649. It is not here necessary to give a full detail of their contents; careful copies of them and of later letters were made upwards of 40 years ago by William, 2nd Lord Bagot; and the transcripts, illustrated by a great number of drawings from original portraits, and by prints and plans, are contained in four large folio volumes, now in the library at Patshull. Among them are letters by King Charles I., Prince Rupert, Lord Newport, the Earl of Northumberland, the Earl of Cumberland, Lord Wharton, Lord Mandeville, the Earl of Lindsay, Lord Digby, the Earl of Annandale, Mr. Fairfax, and Henry Cromwell. Most of them are addressed to William Legge but some few are to other persons. All the letters from Prince Rupert, and most of those from Lord Digby in 1644 and 1645, are in cypher (decyphered), and one of those by Digby is written on linen.

The Civil War letters and some of later date were consulted and used by Mr. Warburton for his work "Prince Rupert and the Cavaliers." Some of the letters for 1688 were used by Sir John Dalrymple in his Memoirs of Great Britain and Ireland.

There are no letters during the time of the Commonwealth, and the letters and papers from 1660 to 1680 are not very numerous, having regard to the space of time. After 1680 they are very numerous. The documents from 1660 to 1688 are more than 2,100 in number, and of these there is at Patshull a catalogue of every item.

After the Restoration there are letters by the Duke of Ormonde, and others from Ireland; many papers about Tangiers, particularly when the place was abandoned; numerous letters by Samuel Pepys while he was at the admiralty. The letters of 1688, are of the utmost interest. The letters and papers of the 18th century are also very important.

A few extracts from and notes of contents of some of the letters will give an idea of the value of this collection.

A letter by Lord Wharton in 1641 alludes to the Bill against Strafford, and the King's opposition to it, and a vague accusation against unnamed persons of setting the army against the Parliament, whereupon Henry Percy, Henry Germaine, Mr. Davenant, and Sir J. Suckling fled and were not taken; that the ports were stopped.

1641. Letter from Lord Mandeville, Thos. Cotton, Robert Osborne, and Henry Cromwell to the Earl of Holland asking him to return 50 horses which the county of Huntingdon had supplied.

In the same year the Earl of Lindsay tells William Legge that he had sent 60 cart horses and 20 carts at the costs of Lincolnshire to Newcastle for the train of artillery, and asks that when discharged they may be sent back by the person now sent.

Any one in an office of trust is liable to have his actions severely scrutinized, and even "Honest Will. "Legge" could not escape calumny; a letter of 1641 (signature torn off) gives accounts of charges brought against W. Legge of making money by the gunpowder supplied to him.

The letter mentioned above as being written on linen, is dated 3rd June 1645, and addressed by George Digby to W. Legge at Oxford. Is anxious to hear how long he can hold out; "If you can allow us but a month or six "weeks to pursue our advantages whilst the enemy is "engaged before that place, in my conscience, without "hyperbole, you give the King his Crowne and in-"fallibly deliver the kingdom this summer from all its "misery."

A holograph letter from King Charles, dated Broomyard, 3rd Sept, 1645, asks W. Legge to delay a week for the design at the Isle of Ely and Cambridge.

1641. May 8. An order of the House of Commons, signed by Denzill Hollis and John Pym for Captain Legg to appear at once before the House.

1648, Dec. 10. Promise by W. Legge that if he is discharged he will not bear arms against the Parliament or their army in this kingdom.

1648, Feb. 9. Order by the Commissioners for compounding with delinquents, that as Will. Legge of London has submitted to a fine for delinquency and paid it, the authorities should forbear to seize or sequester his estate. A saving as to future estate. He is to sue out a pardon under the Great Seal within six weeks.

1649. Aug. 22. Order (in consequence of an order for the removal of Col. W. Legge to the gaol at Exeter) for the gaoler to receive him. (19.)

A letter from William Legge while a prisoner in Arundel Castle, dated Aug. 30th, 1648, says that the King had been seven months under strict restraint, without chaplain, friend, or servant of his own choice or acquaintance; that his treatment did not please the Scots, but that the Londoners fearing loss of trade had succeeded in getting him ordered to the Isle of Wight. He ends by saying that he thinks affairs to be in a hopeful position.

On the 30th March 1649 Charles II. directs W. Legge to go to Ireland.

A paper indorsed "For Col. Legg." The way and manner how Jones and Ludlow were to be surprised in Dublin Castle.

In 1661 are about a dozen letters from Prince Rupert at Frankfort, Vienna, Cleves, and Mainz.

In 1662 Lord Ormondo at Dublin gives an account of the state of Ireland.

In 1662 is a copy of "Thomas Violet's case" under his own hand. (Some of his writings on trade are printed. He poisoned himself.)

In 1673 or a little later is a statement of Col. William Legge's services.

In 1672 Sir John Worden writes from Whitehall that the Prince of Orange is coming back to Holland, and the Spaniards remain in Flanders, both exclaiming against their associates for either cowardice or treachery, which is what our French letters tell us.

JERSEY AND GUERNSEY.

1604. Oct. 22. Letter by Christopher Hatton to the Hon. William Legge of H.M. bedchamber and Lord of Ordnance. This is dated from Cornett Castle (Guernsey) and is concerning the castle.

A bundle of papers relating to a survey of Guernsey about 1680, 1681. Three abstracts of records from the Tower, the Rolls Chapel and the Paper Office. Directions for Captn. Leake to make a survey of Jersey and Guernsey.

Copy of Lord Hatton's account of Guernsey. This is historical and gives an account of the courts and a list of Governors. 18 pp. (Y.Y.)

1665. Letters by Mr. Wharton, Comptroller of the Tower, to Lord Dartmouth. The plague is several times mentioned in these letters. It seems that after people had recovered, sores broke out on them. (Y.Y.)

1665 and 1666. Several letters from the Duke of Ormonde and Earl of Ossory, and one from Prince Rupert on Irish matters.

1672 and 1673. Journal of H.M. ship Katherine. Also some accounts of the engagements between the Dutch and English fleets in 1673. Ship letters. Several accounts of engagements.

A 4to. manuscript, intituled "A full answer to a "traitorous seditious libel, intituled An exact relation "of the several engagements and actions of His Ma"jesty's fleet under the command of His Highness "Prince Rupert and of all circumstances concerning "this summers expedition, 1673; pretended to be "written by a person in command of the fleet, but "spread abroad and vulgarly called the Prince's full "Narrative; published as an antidote against the in"fectious dissent of rebellion too visibly spreading "itself all over the kingdom under the threadbare old "trick of religion." And a printed 4to. tract of 1674, intituled "A just vindication of the principal officers of "H.M. Ordnance from the false, &c. of an exact rela"tion, &c." (This is not a print of the MS. 4to.) Journal of Capt. Geo. Legge in the Katherine during this summers expedition 1672–3. (K. 3. 1534–1550.)

On the 24th Feb. 167$\frac{3}{4}$, Charles II. by his sign manual directed the Governor of Portsmouth to treat well all French subjects and vessels.

In a packet of Letters received by Col. W. Legge in 1678, is one from Lord Ossory at the Hague, dated May 3rd. Hopes to see him before the Duke comes: "If "we can weather it out till then I hope we shall not be "over-run by an enemy whose offers of peace are made "in a stile as if all were already conquered."

1679. Dec. 12. Petition by the Archbishop of Armagh and other lords about private persons coining money.

1679–80. January 4. Copy of the King's letter directing the Lord Lieutenant to stop the practice, and to provide for coining. (Q.Q.)

In 1679, 1680, 1681, 1682, and 1683 are very many holograph letters from James, Duke of York (afterwards King James II.) to Lord Dartmouth. They are very interesting; some are written from abroad. In one he expresses very good feeling towards the Duke of Monmouth.

1686. Several letters from Ireland by the Earl of Clarendon, Lord Chancellor Porter, and others.

Tangiers.

There is a large mass of correspondence relative to Tangiers. A few notes of the later portion may be interesting.

Original address to King Charles II. by the late Governor, Field Officers, Commandants, and soldiers of the garrison, testifying their conviction that the place could not be held against the King of Spain.

1683. July 2. Original instructions by Charles II., countersigned by Leoline Jenkins for the demolition of Tangiers; directs care for persons and effects there; and the blowing up of the whole place and mole as much as possible.

1683. July 10. Charles II. to Sir John Berry, Lieutenant Captain of the Henrietta. By commission of 2nd July he has appointed George Lord Dartmouth to blow up Tangier; and by another commission of the same date he has appointed Piercy Kirke, Esq., in case of the death or illness of Lord Dartmouth. Directs Sir John Berry to assist Kirke.

And a letter 8th Oct. 1683, from the Mayor, &c., of the city, saying that they were glad that it is to be given up.

Copy of Sir James Lesly's treaty, 8th Oct. 1683, with the King of Morocco; peace for four years. (Bundle 28.)

In 1683 are papers received by Lord Dartmouth after his quitting Tangiers. Results of Councils of War, held on board the Grafton in Tangier Roads. A Journal by Sir Cloudesley Shovel (with his autograph signature), from his leaving Admiral Herbert, 1st July, to his arrival at Tangier Bay on the 29th Sept., and his (signed) reasons for sending home the Crowne to England. (She was leaky.)

1683 and 1684. Tangier papers. List of persons to return to England. Confession and repentance of John Burnet, a renegade. State of the navy of Tangiers. Petitions of people for return to England. (P.P.)

Some of the letters in No. 28 are for Col. Kirke.

1683 and 1684. Tangier papers. A number of Spanish letters from the Alcayde of Alcazar to Lord Dartmouth. And report of correspondence between Mr. Robert Cuthbert and the Alcayde. (W.W.) In a letter dated 5th April 1684, Samuel Pepys states that the King and the Duke are satisfied with Lord Dartmouth's doings in the Tangier business.

The Revolution.

1688. Aug. 27. Letter by Lord Hatton. He hears that the King has ordered all officers to repair to their respective commands.

Sept. 23. Thomas Ken, Bishop of Bath and Wells. Professes loyalty to the King consistent with superior duty to God, and the holy religion he professes. The Declaration has not been sent down; is coming to London.

Sept. 28. The King's Sign Manual countersigned by Pepys. The King orders the ships in the Downs, under the command of Sir Roger Strickland, to repair to the Buoy at the Nore. Orders commanders of ships and fire ships in the Thames and Medway to repair thither.

Sept. 29. Sign Manual countersigned by Pepys. To forbear searching foreign ships till further orders.

Sept. 30. The Duke of Berwick says that the King has ordered the officers and troopers of his regiment to have armour. Asks for it.

1688. Oct. 1. Instructions by James II. to Lord Dartmouth, for the fleet. (With seal.)

Oct. 1. Copies of several instructions from the King to Sir Roger Strickland regarding his squadron. (Sir Roger gave up his commission.)

Oct. 3. The Earl of Bath congratulates Lord Dartmouth on his being appointed Admiral. He has done his best to quiet the country, his Majesty's Declaration coming seasonably.

Oct. 9. Jacob Richards of Gillingham offers to raise 100 or 200 men with Blood for an officer.

Oct. 9. Letter by Thomas Phillips at Portsmouth about the fortifications of Portsmouth and Gosport; says that the condition of Gosport is hazardous.

Another letter from Thomas Phillips (who seals with the arms of Phelips of Montacute, co. Somerset), about the difficulty of getting money for payment of troops; the men desert.

Oct. 10. List of the fleet of the Channel Guard.

Oct. 14. Letter from John Berry on board the Elizabeth. The gun carriages are bad; they will fall to pieces in action.

Oct. 23. Letter by Wm. Penn. Yesterday was a great presence at Whitehall; the King, the Queen Dowager, the Council, the Judges, the Lord Mayor and Aldermen, the Bishops and Lords about the town, of which the Archbishop of Canterbury and Bishops of London, Winchester, and Oxford, the Marquis of Halifax, and Lord Nottingham, were some, appeared in the Council Chamber, where the birth of the Prince was cleared by the ladys of the bed chamber, the women midwife, nurses, phisitians, and Lords present at his birth, to the great content of the company. Last night an express from Rotterdam with some difficulty come from their army, and speaks of additional forces to the former. One Greenwood apprehended for dealing with the King's officers of his army to revolt. Also Wicksteed for such practises and words against the Lord President for having corresponded with the Prince of Orange; he is fled with his messenger. (P. 3.)

Nov. 13. Sign Manual of James II. to Lord Dartmouth, ordering him to set at liberty the Flyboate, taken by the Foresight, with soldiers belonging to the Dutch fleet, and all future captives. Countersigned by S. Pepys.

Nov. 15. Lord Dartmouth to Captain Froude of the Ruby. Orders him to fight and destroy the fleet from Holland if he meets any. (1672.)

Nov. 16. Order by Lord Dartmouth to Lord Berkeley, commander of the Montague to fight the Dutch fleet.

Nov. 17. Lord Dartmouth to Lord Berkeley. Will seek the Dutch at Torbay; fight perhaps to-morrow.

Nov. 17. Letter by Lord Preston. The King this afternoon goes for Windsor; he has taken the Prince with him. The Queen stays here (London) for some time.

Nov. 26. Letter of six sides from S. Pepys. The King at his entrance to town this afternoon heard that the Princess of Denmark had withdrawn in the night. The King directs a statement, lest impressions be made in the fleet. She went in her usual manner and time to bed. (He gives an account of the discovery of her being gone; and of the order for the seizure of Lord Churchill's house.)

Nov. 26. Sign Manual. Order to send a ship to Plymouth and seize Capt. Geo. Churchill.

Nov. 28. S. Pepys to Lord Dartmouth. Has just attended the King in his Cabinet, who says he shall have a Parliament. The Chancellor is commanded to issue writs.

Nov. 28. Letter from P. Musgrave (in the Ordnance Office). The King disapproves Sir E. Hales' project; it could not be effectual in suppressing a rabble, but might destroy the whole city, and would endanger a general revolt of the kingdom; therefore directs the mortar pieces to be returned into store. Col. Shelton made Lieutenant of the Tower in room of Sir E. Hales. His office is in a bad state. Account of the meeting last night of the King and the Lords Spiritual and Temporal in his drawing-room; they recommended a Parliament; this morning writs issued.

Nov. 29. Original letter by the Prince of Orange, inviting Lord Dartmouth to surrender the fleet.

Nov. 29 and Dec. 1. Three letters by James II. to Lord Dartmouth about sending the Prince of Wales away.

Dec. 3. Letter from Lord Berkeley at London, to Lord Dartmouth. Reached London at noon, when the King was at dinner. After he had dined I kissed his hand; he carried me into the Queen's bed-chamber, where I read the address; he was well pleased; gave him Lord Dartmouth's letter; he asked about the fleet. Abundance of people railed at Lord Dartmouth, but the King continually justified him. The whole Dutch fleet are at Plymouth where they were saluted by the citadel at their coming with about 40 guns. Bristol in the Prince of Orange's hands. The Marquess of Worcester, the Earl of Clarendon, and Lord Blessington, Capt. Steveningham, and several others, have gone over to the Prince. The Lords of Halifax, Nottingham, and Godolphin are gone to negotiate, but the truth is that was sent before for leave they found drunk asleep at Reading, so they are forced to stay there till they have an answer by another.

Dec. 11. Letter by Phil. Frowde at London. The Queen and Prince went away down the river on Sunday night. The King followed about two or three o'clock. The mob are now pulling down the Mass houses, and burning, &c. Sky so red, I can see it, &c.

Dec. 11. Council order. Reciting that the King had privily that morning withdrawn himself; orders the removal of all Popish officers out of their respective commands. Signed by Archbishops of Canterbury and York, Lord Pembroke, and 20 others.

Dec. 12. Copy of Lord Dartmouth's letter in answer to the Prince of Orange's invitation, dated 29 Nov.; and of a letter dated 20 Dec.

Dec. 13. Lord Feversham to Lord Dartmouth, with copy of the King's letter. He will see the Prince of Orange, but will not take employment.

Dec. 13. Letter from Fra. Gwyn at Whitehall, 10 a.m. The King's resolution has depressed all his friends. Lord Feversham's conduct in disbanding the army is much blamed. The morning the King withdrew, the lords whose names you see to the declaration and who were all that were in town met at the Guildhall; they sent a letter to your Lordship, and in my opinion that is a good ground for your Lordship to return an answer and desire their commands . . . . it is necessary to keep the ships together (1983).

Letter from the Duke of Berwick to Lord Dartmouth, asking for orders: "The King being gone and I being "left without orders I desire you will let me know "wether you have received any forme . . . . . "Lord Feversham by the King's order has disbanded "the army so that I know not what to do." He sends a copy of the King's letter to Lord Feversham.

Dec. 13. Letter by Gardiner. Mentions the taking of the King at Shelness and his being taken to Faversham; also the taking of Jefferies.

Dec. 14. Letter from Thos. Hancock, Mayor of Portsmouth. Is forced to leave his home; is threatened to be boiled; threatened by the soldiers; if they offer abuses to the town he has ordered torches to be fired in the tower; is going on board ship to secure himself. The town is in great fear. Shops shut up. The Irish threatening to do strange things. (The date in this letter looks like 1699, but it is indorsed 1688.)

Dec. 14. Letter by William Jennery. Is desired by the Mayor to remind Lord Dartmouth for his passport to go to France, and he desires he may have a passage in the yacht for Jersey. The Gosport people having been much abused by the Irish soldiers have seized on the castle, and he understands the Duke of Berwick says he would fire them out; they are protestants, and he (Jennery) judges himself obliged if they are ill treated to defend and assist them to his power. They are in very great trouble, and will be more if the Irish part not before he sails out of harbour. He saw great companies march on the hill, and they went towards Farnm (Farcham?), but he conceives, had they been the Prince's forces, he should have had (news) by some hand or other, and then he would have sent to Lord Dartmouth.

Dec. 15. A letter from Lady Dartmouth to her husband, speaks of the insults to the King at Faversham. The rabble rifled his pockets and took away all from him.

Dec. 16. Letter by the Prince of Orange to Lord Dartmouth, directing him to bring the fleet to the Nore.

A packet of 17 holograph letters by James II. to Lord Dartmouth, the first dated Oct. 5; and the last Dec. 21, from Rochester, asking if Lord Dartmouth is going to stay at the Downs or is obliged by want of victuals to come up to the Nore. Several of these letters have remarks indorsed by Lord Dartmouth.

Jan. Dec. 1688 there are letters by the Duke of Berwick and several letters by other persons to Lord Dartmouth, concerning the King's intended removal of the Prince of Wales.

Dec. 19. Letter by Sir R. Beach. The King taken to Faversham; the Chancellor taken; he was going to Hamboro' in a collier; when taken to the Lord Mayor he kneels to kiss his hand; the Lord Mayor so astonished that he fell into a swound (1986).

Dec. 19. Copy of the Prince of Orange's letter to Col. Berkeley, to go to Portsmouth and acquaint the Commander-in-Chief that he has ordered men to march there and take possession of the garrison. The regiments will be provided for elsewhere and need not apprehend ill treatment. There is an order at the foot signed "Churchill" for all persons to assist Berkeley.

Dec. 25. Letter by the Prince of Orange to Lord Dartmouth, to have ships cruise off Guernsey to protect against the French; and between Dover and Calais, and Harwich, and the coasts of Holland and Flanders, to protect the packet boats.

Dec. 25. Letter from S. Pepys to Lord Dartmouth. The Prince of Orange's orders to your Lordship of the 16th from Windsor, which he was pleased to communicate to me on his first arrival made him expect your Lordship's arrival with the fleet at the buoy of the Nore. . . . His Highness is sensible of the hint you gave him in your letter touching Guernsey.

Dec. 29. Original summons by the Prince of Orange to Lord Dartmouth, to attend the Convention Parliament.

In October, November, and December, 1688, are numerous interesting official letters by S. Pepys.

Two letters by Lord Devon to Lord Dartmouth, about going over to the Prince of Orange.

1688. Ordnance and ship letters received by Lord Dartmouth in this year, also letters relating to State occurrences.

$\frac{8}{89}$. Janry. 2nd, 5th, and 10th. Three original orders by the Prince of Orange, regarding the fleet.

$\frac{8}{89}$. Janry. 9th. Copy of Pepys' report on the fleet.

$\frac{8}{89}$. Janry. 10th. Samuel Pepys to Lord Dartmouth. His Highness had directed him to remain with the whole fleet at the Nore until further order. Pepys thinking that the wording of it may lead him to alter his last intention and expect clearer directions for repairing thither for serving him therein as soon as may be, has provided a fresh warrant in that behalf from the Prince, and sent it by post to Sir Phinehas Pett at Chatham.

$\frac{8}{89}$. Janry. 16th. Saml. Pepys asks Lord Dartmouth to set the Katherine at liberty as soon as possible: "I am not sure but her service may be required by the "Prince to-morrow, before next day, it seeming at "present very likely it will be so."

Janry. 19th. Letter by James II. at St. Germain to Lord Dartmouth. "Howsoever the Prince of Orange uses me in other things, sure he will not refuse me the common civility of letting all my coaches and horses come over to me, tis but what I did to Prince George when he went from mo. I send the bearer Ralf Sheldon to you to bring them away so sone as a pass can be gott for them from the Prince of Orange. Speake for the passe yourself and to Lord Middleton to have it solicited, and give directions to Delarbre to bring over himself, or, if he bo not yett ready to come, to send the best of my guns and pistols over with Sheldon, this bearer, to whom I refer what elso I have to say. James R."

MISCELLANEOUS.

Abstract of several petitions to King Charles II. for grants of ground about the Tower in the Little Minories (one is by Col. William Legge), with the surveyor-general's reports thereon. Interrogatories and other papers on the subject 1686. Report on the boundaries of the Tower Liberty. The Little Minories, Well Close, and old Artillery Ground, were places always of right belonging to the liberty of the Tower.

A bundle of papers relating to the establishment of the King's stables in 1669, when Lord Dartmouth was Master of the Horse.

Numerous letters to Lord Dartmouth while he was governor of Portsmouth.

About 20 bundles of papers on Ordnance matters 1670-1688, and a few earlier, some relating to Ireland.

Papers relating to the royal forests when Lord Dartmouth was Lord Lieutenant of the forests of Alice Holt, and Woolmer. Copy of the perambulation of the forest 26 Hen. VIII. (99.) There is another bundle on the same matters, and in this is a copy of the perambulation in 29 Edw. I.

On the 8th October 1688, William van de Veldo de Oude writes to Lord Dartmouth that he has delivered at his Lordship's house, five pictures (in gold frames at 3l. 10s. a piece); Lord Berkeley paid him for a piece of 4½ feet 20l.; Lady Berkeley his mother paid him for a piece of 5 feet 23l., he leaves it to Lord Dartmouth's generosity.

1687, April 28th. Curious account of the fireworks at Blackheath.

1687, June 15th. Order of march of the train from the Tower to Hounslow.

1688, April 17th. Letter by Samuel Pepys to Lord Dartmouth. The King by Conway's letter to Lord Dartmouth in 1674 said that foreign flags coming before any castles on the coast were to be lowered and kept so within gun shot.

1688, April. Letter by Edward Sherborne about firing on ships not striking their flags. Cannot give an answer. Cannot find Pepys' opinion supported by books.

1688, Dec. and 1689 Jan. Many papers relating to the navy, the ships to be paid off, and places of their distribution.

A bundle of papers relating to Lord Dartmouth's imprisonment and examination (he died in the Tower in 1691).

A folio book containing copies of official letters and papers, beginning with the commission by James II. in September 1688 for Lord Dartmouth to be Admiral of the Fleet. There are copies of letters by and to Lord Dartmouth, to and by James II., and the Prince of Orange. The last document is the order of the Prince of Orange, dated 10th January 1689.

There is a 4to volume of memoranda written by the first Earl of Dartmouth in Bishop Burnet's history of his own time.

1690. Copies of some papers taken with the Lord Preston (fol. 9 pages): about the restoration of King James 2nd.

PAPERS OF THE 18TH CENTURY.

A packet of Minutes of Council from the middle of 1710 to the middle of 1713.

Two packets of correspondence from about 1704 to 1715.

Official letters from Matthew Prior at Paris in 1713, and from Lord Bolingbroke in 1714.

Extensive correspondence of Wm Legge 1st Earl of Dartmouth about the same time.

Letters from Harley (about 30) in 1710-1722.

Letters from Judith Reed at Philadelphia 1773-1775, some of them touch on the rebellion.

Letters between Geo. Legge and M. Francklin, Lieutenant Governor of Nova Scotia, and other Nova Scotia papers.

A long and interesting letter, four folio pages, in 1765 from Wm. Smith of New York, to the Rev. Mr. Whitfield on the discontents of America, specially regarding the Stamp Act.

About 50 letters from John Hough, bishop of Worcester, to Lady Kaye, beginning in 1740. (In Wilmot's Life of the Bishop, 4to, Lond., 1810, are 43 letters by the Bishop to this Lady.)

Letter from Dr. Dodd at Plaistow in Essex, dated Nov. 22, 1759. He dissuades Lord Dartmouth from taking holy orders. Lord Dartmouth answered that he had never had any thought of so doing.

Letter from John Wesley dated June 14, 1775, on his way to Dublin. This is a long and eloquent letter to the Earl of Dartmouth protesting against the war with America. (It is printed in Macmillan's Magazine for December 1870.)

Letter from Dr. Johnson to the Earl of Dartmouth, dated April 25, 1783, recommending Mr. Desmoulin for employment.

Nearly 50 letters by King George III. to the Earl of Dartmouth, 1773-1804. In one of January 19, 1774, he alludes to the people of Boston's unjustifiable proceedings. On the 28th January 1775 he does not approve of Lieut. General Gage for America as Commander-in-chief, but proposes Sir Jeffrey Amherst. He hopes to prevent effusion of blood. On the 16th of June 1775 he says that America must be a colony or be treated as an enemy.

I cannot close this short notice of the manuscripts without expressing my great obligations to Lord Dartmouth for his attentions to me during my stay at Patshull.

ALFRED J. HORWOOD.

THE MANUSCRIPTS OF THE RIGHT HONOURABLE EARL SPENCER, AT SPENCER HOUSE, ST. JAMES'S.

This Collection consists, with few exceptions, of letters of the 16th, 17th, and 18th centuries.

The letters of the 16th century chiefly relate to Northern and Border matters; those of the 17th century are, for the most part, addressed to Geo. Savile, Marquis of Halifax, whose name is well known in the History of England during the latter half of the 17th century. The letters of the 18th century give much political, social, and literary information.

The notes by the Marquis of Halifax of his conversations with King William III. are particularly valuable; and it may be hoped that Lord Spencer will at some time publish them.

The letters are very numerous. Rapidly looking over them, I made notes and extracts of such as appeared to contain matter of more than private interest; but it must not be supposed that these notes contain all that is worthy of extract.

Box 31*a*.

Seventeen letters from the Duchess of Marlborough to John Lord Spencer in the years 1726, 1742, and 1743. They are written by an amanuensis, but are mostly signed by her, and there are two or three memoranda by her own hand. They are very characteristic, and abound in money matters.

1742, June 20. The Duchess abuses the government; mentions their having raised a million for the Queen of Hungary; they will try to borrow more; is assured that the next step will be to move parliament to give greater interest, "but it will do nothing with me."

1743, Oct. 23. Death of the Lady Carteret. The King offered that Lord Carteret should not go with him to the army. Lady C. begged he might not omit the last service in his power to Him, and said that she was not in any danger; "but if I don't mistake she "died two days after."

1743, May 30. Approves making Mr. Pelham Lord of the Treasury. Lord Bath in a great rage at it he wishes to vindicate himself in the Craftsman's name. In the paper of Old England in the Craftsman of 6 August he mentions this: "I suppose for some time "they will be entertaining, as they are written by "Lord B. to shew the greatness of his character."

Sunday (no year). Refers to Saturday's paper of Old England. "I am of his mind that the D. of Cumber-"land will not except (sic) of Hanover if His Majesty "would give it him; but as the Prince of Wales is the "eldest brother, I wish he had it, on condition that

" the younger brother should leave England, which is " now but a province to Hanover, and all the money in " a little time will go there. Officers come over give " full account of all that has passed abroad. His " Majesty was prevailed not to be exposed to fire as " was reported, but to go into a wood out of reach of " musket shot, which was certainly very right, because " he was secure, and by that means could give direc- " tions to gain so great a victory as he did."

Here and in 35 G., are many inventories of plate and jewels belonging to the Duchess.

In 31*a* is a grant of arms, dated 26 Nov. 1504, by Richemount, otherwise Clarencieux, to John and Thomas Spencer, sons of William Spencer, of the County of Warwick, the arms are, "Azure, a fess ermine between " six semewes heads, silver erased; the crest upon the " headme is a moure heyne in his proper colour, " membred gowles standing on a wreath azure and " silver, mantelled of the same tasselled gold." The arms are depicted on the margin and the autograph of Clarencieux remains, but the seal is gone.

1565, May 14. Ratification (by way of Inspeximus) under the Great Seal, in accordance with the Statute of Hen. VIII., of a Dispensation by Matthew Parker, Archbishop of Canterbury, to Nicholas Cooke, B.A., Chaplain to Robert Dudley, K.G. and Earl of Leicester, to hold a third benefice with two others.

1690, Aug. 18. Holograph will of the Duchess of Marlborough, on a sheet of letter paper, disposing of 7,000*l.* given to her disposition by the Duke. She gives 500*l.* to get poor people out of prison.

In C. 24 are a number of fine deeds of the 13th and 14th centuries; many with fine seals, and many being grants to and by the Abbey of the Holy Cross at Waltham.

A letter signed "Exeter," dated Newark, 1624, alluding to extortions in taking money from men pressed for his Majesty's service to release them, and directing suppression of the practice for the future.

No. 19. — A large collection of letters from Lord Jersey to the Countess Spencer, from 1769 to 1804. They relate to personal matters, town gossip, and political events;—

1769, Dec. 23. Lord Chatham is to speak (in the House of Lords), even though on his back.

1769, Dec. 22. The world is full of nothing but Junius's last letter; a sort of speech to the King, impudent and wicked; some give the credit of it to Lord George Sackville, but most to Wilkes. Beckford, the Lord Mayor, very angry at the Guards going through the City to the rioters in Spitalfields, drums beating and fifes playing, without his permission. His letter to the Secretary at War I saw. In future his leave is to be asked.

1798. A report of Bonaparte being taken. On the taking of Rome the French offered passports to go through France, to buy pictures, statues, &c. at Rome.

Box 24.

1793, November 6. Letter in French from Louise de Stolberg, Countess of Albany (at Florence); she recommends Zimmerman on Solitude.

1780. A letter in English and another in French from L. M. T. B. d'Orleans.

1764. A letter in French from the Duke of Braganza (at Milan).

1766. A letter in French from Frederick Prince of Hesse.

1764. A letter in French from Cardinal Albani (at Rome); he sends an alabaster vase, a counterpart of one which Lady Spencer admired at his country house; and another in 1765, on the same subject.

1761. Several letters from the Duke of York. In one he says he defers carrying the Buchentour and other things from Venice to the Queen, until he has shewed it to Lady Spencer.

1763. Letter from the Duke of Cumberland.

1764. A letter from Louise, wife of Prince Frederich of Prussia.

1765. Letter from Elizabeth Augusta Electress Palatine about Lady Spencer's intercession for an innkeeper, who had behaved badly.—And copies of Lady Spencer's letters to the Electress.

1794. Letter from Augustus Frederick Duke of Sussex (at Rome).

Upwards of 50 letters from David Garrick. They range from 1776 to 1779, and are very sprightly and interesting;—

1776, Nov. 15. He mentions the Electrical Eels exhibited in the Haymarket, at 5*s.* a head; sends a (bitter) epitaph on Dr. Johnson, by Soame Jenyns:

" Here lies poor Johnson: reader, have a care;
Tread lightly, lest you rouse a sleeping bear.
Religious, moral, generous and humane
He was; but self-sufficient, rude and vain;
Ill-bred and overbearing in dispute;
A scholar and a Christian, and a brute.
Would you know all his wisdom and his folly,
His actions, sayings, mirth and melancholy,
Boswell and Thrale, retailers of his wit,
Will tell you how he wrote and talked, and coughed

June 6. A card by Mr. Garrick to Lady Spencer. Mr. Garrick has fixed next Saturday for the last time of actiug.

1776, Nov. 9. Mentions a new fashion for ladies, of illuminated heads; head-dresses made of evergreens and lamps; a new invention, heard of by him, by a confectioner and toyman (Pinchbeck).

1777, Sept. 14. Electrical apparatus at the Pantheon, to show that pointed conductors invite lightning and produce evil; and his Majesty ordered Mr. Wilson, the great electrical performer on the occasion, to take down all the pointed conductors of Dr. Franklin and place blunted ones in their room at the Queen's house.....no less than 400 drums and many thousand yards of wire in the apparatus;..... it is to be hoped there is no party spirit in the business ..... Miss Hannah More, whose essays your ladyship did not much fancy, has written a good tragedy lately..... The subject from Cheyy Chase, the quarrels between the Scotch and the English.

1777, Oct. 22. Mentions Foote's death on his landing at Calais, he had much wit and no feeling; sacrificed friends and foes to a joke, and so has died very little regretted, even by his nearest acquaintance.

A letter written by David Garrick, in Mrs. Garrick's name, in German English.

1777, December 11. Our tragedy succeeded; cordial applause; not a dry eye in the house.

1778, Nov. 17. Have just finished the prologue to Henry Fielding's long lost comedy; it was given over for gone by the family, but it fell into my hands after 25 years' absence; it is to be acted on next Saturday se'nnight.

Nov. 24. The new comedy will not be ready for next Saturday.

Upwards of 20 letters from Mrs. Garrick to Countess Spencer, ranging from 1780 to 1792.

Between 70 and 80 letters from Sir William Jones, ranging from 1768 to 1791. He seems to have been a tutor to Lord Althorp;—

1768, Aug. A letter from Wimbledon.

1768, Sept. 3. Encloses an exercise by Lord Althorp.

1768, Sept. 9. The professorship of modern languages is vacant; he is asked to put up for it.

In June 1769, he dates from Harrow; in August following from Oxford. In 1770 he was at Nice with Lord Althorp.

There is an interesting correspondence about his quitting the tutorship of Lord Althorp, on a difference of opinion regarding the mode of education to be pursued.

1780, June 16, Temple. Speaks of his being determined, if God preserves his life, to write the history of the American war in the manner of Thucydides, i.e., from his own personal knowledge of many actors in it on both sides, and of the events.

June 20. In the House of Commons vehement sparring and bickering between Dunning and Burke, not from sudden heat but from long nourished disgust, and, I fear, rancour.

1781, Feb. 21, New College, Oxford. Asks Lord Spencer to seal a petition, and says that this is the " same Margaret Williams whom you recommended last " Christmas at the Almoner's office."

1783, Creshna-nagar. Is charmed with Sanscrit ..... The Brahmins do not know how much he is assisted by Latin and Greek.

1791, Oct. 24. Our army stormed Nundee Doorgum on the 15th.

Letters from General J. Cunningham, 1771–1788, politics and chat.

More than two dozen letters from Richard Rigby, M.P., to Lady Spencer; these range from 1777 to 1788, when he died. They contain much political information;—

1779, Jan. 29. Offers Lady Spencer a room in the Pay Office to see Garrick's funeral.

1779, March 25. Incloses a letter from R. B. Sheridan about a dedication to Lady Spencer.

About 80 letters from Lord Clermont, 1780–1800.

Nearly 50 letters from Lord Frederick Cavendish, M.P., and Lord John C., 1779–1788, containing political news, domestic and foreign, and notices of proceedings in the House of Commons;—

1780, March 22. A full account of the duel between Lord Shelburne and Mr. Fullerton. (The writer was second to Lord Shelburne.)

1780, June 2. Lord George Gordon brought up the petition. In four hours both houses were prisoners.

1780, June 5. Riots by the mob.

1780, June 9. The taking of Lord George Gordon; the various reports.

1780, June 10. Letter from Lord John Cavendish. Account of the riots, &c.

1784, April 14. Letter from Lord John C. Does not approve that the Duchess of Bedford should canvas for the Westminster election.

1788, Nov. 28. Illness of the King; he is to be moved to Kew.

No. 26.

A bundle of letters from Charlotte, Queen of Naples, to Lady Spencer, and copies of 9 or 10 from Lady Spencer to the Queen of Naples, April 1794 to March 1802;—

1794, Oct. 7. Italy is perpetually menaced, and it seems that the rogueides redouble their efforts to penetrate. Up to this time we owe our safety to the English squadron. Feels assured that the efforts of England will save Europe.

1798, March 8. The head of the church is driven from Rome, and 20,000 French rob here to the last half-penny; expects the same fate.

1798, June 20. Alludes to the taking of Malta by treason, without a blow struck; is much indebted to England; the appearance of its squadron will save Sicily, now in great danger since the taking of Malta.

1798, Sept. 4. Is so delighted with the complete victory which the brave Nelson, with his fleet, obtained.

1799, Jan. 25. Is in great grief. An army of 50,000, under General Mack, animated by the presence of their sovereign, destroyed in less than a month. The French at the gates of the capital without difficulty. The King obliged to fly to Sicily. The brave Nelson conducted us; our navy was in insurrection; only two ships remained, almost without equipage;—at Palermo, in an island almost destitute. Our navy burnt; the arsenal pillaged.

1800, Oct. 17. At Sellenbrun, with four of her children.

1802, March 6. Cannot pay her debt to Lady Spencer. Cannot pay her own people; shall be obliged to sell some of her diamonds at a sacrifice. [It appears that Lady S. had lent her large sums of money.]

Letters (about 20) from Mrs. Eliz. Carter to Lady Spencer, 1773–1800. They are chiefly occupied with religious matters.

1776, July 29. "It is, I am told, a pretty prevailing "notion or affectation of a notion that Mr. Jenyns is "not in earnest." She thinks he is sincere (alluding to his book on the Evidences of the Christian Religion).

1800, May 21. It is evident that the wretch who attempted the life of our Sovereign had some companion or confidant; inter alia the letter thrown into Lord Albermarle's carriage appears very striking.

About 15 letters from Mrs. Mary Carter.

Many letters from Lord Harcourt, 1784–1805. He was a friend of Horace Walpole.

In 1784, he says he bought at Westminster, from Pinchbeck's son, who had bought in some of his father's trumpery, a portrait of Raleigh, damaged, but certainly of the age he lived in, and he believes authentic, for one guinea; and a portrait of Prior, with frame, for one guinea.

His letters for 1784 are really a diary, and are very amusing.

Some letters from Dr. Richard Warren (one of the doctors employed for George III., when mentally deranged) to Lady Spencer.

1788, Nov. 12. "Rex noster insanit; nulla adsunt "febris signa; nulla mortis venturæ indicia." This is the whole of the letter, which is dated from Windsor.

1788, Dec. 2. The King was removed from Windsor to Kew, on Saturday; is no better; has been in this state five weeks. "I persuaded the chancellor to visit "the King; he was more surprised and affected than "Mr. Pitt."

Letters from H. Stanley, 1764–1778, contain some good accounts of journeys abroad.

Five letters from Sir Sidney Smith.

1782, June 19. The Tory at sea off New York. He begun a letter to her (Lady S.) after the opportunity of success on the 12th of April, but lost the opportunity of sending it; . . . had been introduced to Prince William and had a long conversation with him about the 12th of April, &c.; he (the Prince) had had an accident by a fall on board the Warwick; the shoulder was put out.

1788, April 26. Ponta de Lima, Portugal. Went to Morocco with an ambassador who was going to pay tribute (he can call it no other name since it is received as such); . . . he has a plan for saving the payment and giving freedom and happiness to some millions of oppressed people. (3 sheets, very interesting.)

1789, Sept. 10, Windsor. The King has resumed his usual mode of life; he rose at six yesterday, spent all the morning in answering German despatches till time to go to chapel; then walked on the terrace till dinner; . . . he looks thinner than before his illness; this improves him, as he has no longer the florid look and prominent eye that made him appear as if he was going into an apoplexy. He (Sir Sidney) can answer for his memory; . . . He (the King) came into the equerry's room when he was there, recognized him and asked him when he returned. (A very interesting letter.)

About 20 letters from Sir William Hamilton, and two from his wife; 1762–1797. They are mostly dated from Naples;—

1767, Nov. 2 (to Lord Spencer). About the eruption of Mount Vesuvius.

1783, Jan. 28, Caserta. Sends a small etching of himself in profile, by M. de Nou, the French chargé d'affaires at the Court. (The etching is exquisite.)

1791, Aug. 17, London. About his marriage with Emma; . . . he is 60, she is 24; he admits that her character will not bear scrutiny; but having lived five and a half years with her, he is sure she repents.

1794, July 5, Naples. About eruption of Vesuvius. In a letter of this year he mentions the plot to blow up the theatre with the nobility and royal family.

1796, September. Fears that the French are coming; fears for his vases and his collections of 32 years.

1798, Caserta. Has recollections of Lady Betty Germain.

About a dozen letters from Gavin Hamilton, at Rome, 1765–1772; about pictures for Lord Spencer.

Box 31.

(1.) 1688, Nov. 17. Letter from Robert Brent to Lord M. (Middleton); "press on the King to make no "treaty and call no Parliament until the suppression "of the rebellion;" to venture his crown; if he lose it, it will be but for a short time; an usurper can only be supported by force.

1688, Dec. 1. . . Letter by Lord Middleton to Lord Halifax . . . The King desires that your Lordship and my Lord of Nottingham attend him in his bedchamber at 4 this afternoon.

1688, Dec. 10. Copy of King James 2d letter to Lord Faversham, saying that he had sent away the Queen and the Prince of Wales and was going himself, and thanking the officers and soldiers.

1688, Dec. 12. Copy of King James's letter to Lord Faversham (dated at Faversham): "I had the mis- "fortune to be stopt at Shelness by a rabble of seamen, "fishermen, and others, who still detain me here, "although they know me;" . . . asks him to send servants, linen, and clothes; . . . wants money; all his had been taken.

1688, Dec. 17, Windsor. Letter by "Prince d'Orange" (William 3d) to the Marquis of Halifax, the Earl of Shrewsbury, and Lord Delaware, bidding them tell the King that it is for the quiet of the city and the safety of his person that he remove to Ham, where he shall be attended by guards, who will be ready to preserve him from any disturbance.

Copy of a letter from these three Lords to Lord Middleton (apropos of the Prince's letter), asking where they may find him.

1688, Dec. 18. Letter in French from Bentinck;—The Prince says that the King may go to Rochester instead of Ham; it is indifferent to him.

Notes of debates in the assembly of the lords, as to abdication.

(2.) 1651, Oct. 14. Copy of the Earl of Derby's last letter to his children, Lady Mary, Mr. Edward, and Mr. William, in the Isle of Man. Dated from Chester Castle; and a similar one to his lady, dated 12th October.

A relation of the surrender of the Isle of Man: folio, 372 pp. Begins: The 16th of September Capt. Yonge sent to the Isle of Man. Ends: desiring Col. Duckford and other gentlemen to mediate for her goods, which he promised to her.

(4.) Three letters from Lord Clarendon, one dated in 1665, and two not dated, and three from Frances Lady Clarendon, in 1681, &c.

(5.) Letters (about 10) from Lord Holles, at Paris, in 1665, to Sir Wm. Coventry, of the Privy Council and secretary to his Royal Highness.

Four letters by Lord Holles to M. de Lionne, about one Bailleul, who carried divers flags.

Six letters from Lord St. Albans to Sir Wm. Coventry, in 1666; not very interesting.

(6.) About 30 letters from the Countess of Ranelagh to her brother the Earl of Burlington and Cork, and from Lady Frances Jones her daughter; full of gossip.

(7.) Letter, $16\frac{4}{5}$, Jan. 5, Hague. Henry Sidney to the Earl of Sunderland; as to the projected alliance between France and the States.

$16\frac{4}{5}$, Jan. $\frac{1}{11}$. Copy of Sunderland's reply; he says that the King orders Sidney to use his utmost endeavours to prevent the alliance; the King will be impatient to hear from him.

(10.) A bundle of nearly a dozen letters of Lord Dungarvan to Mrs. Elizabeth Clifford, not of public interest.

The first entry is, "He denyed the Duchess of Mon- "mouth's request to be restored."

The last entry (under Feb. 8, 1689) is, "Did not ap- "prove Bab May for a Commissioner, because he was "no speaker."

On December 30, The King said that the Commonwealth party was the strongest in England; he had then that impression given; . . . said that at best they would have a Duke of Venice. In that perhaps, he perhaps was not so much mistaken. Said that he did not come to establish a commonwealth, and he was sure of one thing, he would not stay in England if King James came again: he said also, with the strongest asseveration, he would go if they went about to make him regent. The Bishop of Salisbury, a dangerous man and had no principles; bade me speak with those who came from Dr. Oates; said he would give him something though it went hard with him. . . . On another day he said he would have some of us talk together to see to find some expedient in Oates's matter. N.B.—This was not pursued.

There are two quarto volumes, one intituled "Memo- "randa of Conversations between King William and "George Marquis of Halifax, wrote down by that Lord "upon loose sheets of paper, some with dates and some "with none; correctly copied, to which are added "some explanatory notes by the transcriber." This copy begins, "Dec. 30, 1688. The King said he had "intercepted a letter from Lord Tirconnel to King "James, in which he persuades him to go into France "or into Ireland; but to the latter more faintly, as he "guessed by the manner of it." (This passage is at folio 4 of the original.) The text and the notes copied on the left-hand pages are more full sometimes than in the original. It seems as though Lord Halifax must have himself drawn up a full copy, of which the original here contains the rough notes. The transcriber, or perhaps Lord Halifax, in the supposed full copy, has arranged the entries according to dates. This 4to. ends as does the original at Feb. 8, 1689; but has the additional sentence, "Said Mr. Charleton did tell him four "months since that all good men were dissatisfied with "my being in employment." After which, "The fol- "lowing discourses must have passed after Lord Hali- "fax had resigned the Priy Seal," followed by seven pages, each about half full.

The other 4to. is in green parchment, and corresponds with the 4to. just described.

Two letters from Wm. Farnham to the Marquis of Halifax, one dated Stanhope Court, Aug. 11, 1683, and the other dated Spring Gardens, Christmas Day, about Lord Halifax speaking to the King for his wife and children.

Copy of Speech of Geo. Earl of Bristol in the House of Lords, 1672-3, March 15.

Biographical sketch (7 pp. 4to.) of George Marquis of Halifax.

A 4to. vol. of 103 pp. Memoir of the Earl of Bristol born at Madrid 1612, and died in 1677: at p. 43 to the end speeches of and letters to and by him (copies), temp. Charles 1st and Charles 2nd.

A large printed paper, intituled, "Impartial account "of names of Privy Council and general officers in "commission under King James." At the foot, "This "may be printed, Norfolk and Marshal, printed 1686."

Memoir of Robert 1st Baron Spencer, temp. James I. (3 leaves, 18th century.)

Memoir of Henry 1st Earl of Sunderland, born 1620, and copies of letters by him. (12 pp. 4to., 18th century.)

Copy of a letter from Margaret Countess of Cumberland to Dr. Leyfield (she was mother of the Countess of Dorset, Pembroke, and Montgomery). It is an account of her life from her birth, in 1560, at Exeter. It closes imperfectly, before the death of Prince Henry. It is very interesting, and occupies 4 folios, close writing of the 18th century.

A 4to. volume, 18th century, 151 closely written pages, contains copies of letters from Henry Savile, to his brother George Marquis of Halifax, and of a few from the Marquis to his brother. The first is dated in 1661, and the last in 1681. They are written from London, Paris, and elsewhere, and treat of home and foreign politics.

Another 4to. volume, of the 18th century, 153 pages, contains Memoirs of Countess of Shrewsbury and her descendants, with copies of various letters, 1584-1609; very interesting.

Another 4to. volume, of the 18th century, 181 pages, contains copies of 17th century letters, from Lady Thanet, Lord Clifford, Lord Clarendon, Lord Godolphin, Lord Weymouth, Mr. H. Thynne, Sir W. Coventry, Lord Sunderland, Mr. H. Savile, Mr. Sidney (afterwards Lord Romney), Dr. Burnet, Lord Preston, Sir J. Kersaley, Lord Halifax, Sir Robert Howard, Lord Nottingham, Lady Margaret Russell, Lady Rachel Russell, Lord Carleton, and others.

Another 4to. volume, of 95 pages, contains copies of letters in the 17th and 18th centuries, from Lord Halifax, Mr. Porter, Duke of Marlborough, Prince George of Denmark, Anne Duchess of York, James Duke of Queensbury, Lady Mary Hyde, Henry Earl of Rochester, Lord Somers, Lord Oxford, Edward Earl of Clarendon, Lord Bolingbroke, and others.

Another 4to. volume, 149 pages, contains Memoirs of Margaret Countess of Shrewsbury, beginning, and going on for some time, as does the life of the Countess before mentioned; but contains less in the middle and more at the end. The letters are very interesting, some being by Mary Queen of Scots, and Arabella Stuart (and some addressed to her). There is a copy of a letter from Sir R. Cecil (afterwards Earl of Salisbury) to the Earl of Essex, when he and Sir Walter Raleigh were forced back to Plymouth by storms as they were going against the Spaniards.

Another 4to. volume contains copies of letters (182 in number) from James Vernon, Secretary of State to King William, and the Duke of Shrewsbury, and a few from Robert Earl of Sunderland, Lord Somers, and Charles Earl of Halifax; 1696-1702.

A 4to. volume, of 9 leaves, contains Memoir of Charles 3rd Earl of Sunderland, who was born in 1674; written in 1780.

(12.) A few letters by the Duke of Shrewsbury to Lord Halifax, and by Sir Wm. Coventry to Lord W. Savile, of no interest. 1690 and 1697.

(13.) Twenty-two letters from Sir John Reresby to the Marquis of Halifax. 1681-1688. These are on political and social matters, and are interesting.

(14.) Letters from Lords Windsor, Plymouth, and others. 1661-1686;—

1681, April 16. Lord Windsor to the Earl of Halifax, dated Hewell; he says that when the King shall call a Parliament, the gentry are confident of ousting Sir T. Winnington in Worcester and Foley in the county. He designs suddenly for London. Heard from George Legge that the Prince was likely to die, and the constable's place of Windsor would then fall in.

These letters are on personal and domestic matters.

(15.) About 50 letters, in English, French, and Italian, from Lord Halifax's sons Henry, George, and William to their father; they are dated from Marseilles, Verona, Rome, Naples, Vienna, and Paris and Madrid, and range from 1684 to 1690.

1686, Sept. 9. William Savile (at Dover) says, "I go "off with the packet with the Duchess of Norfolk, who "is carrying her young daughter to a nunnery in "Flanders."

One of the letters (from Paris) mentions the prisoners Le Sage and Voysin, who were accused of poisoning. Le Sage denies selling poison; he put off people with harmless things. Voysin confesses having sold much; she accuses the Countess of Soissons, who in consequence of the King's threats, went to Flanders. The Duchesse de Bouillon was accused; but cleared herself.

These letters are affectionate and dutiful letters from sons to their father, containing nothing of public interest; they give now and then but rarely, some trait in point of history of the place whence written.

(16.) Letters to Lord Halifax from Mr. Thomas Sandys, Emanuel Dyas, and John Methuen from Lisbon, 1691–1694. Sandys went with Catherine, the widow of Charles 2nd, to Portugal, and was in attendance on her. The Queen travelled about; was very obstinate in her resolutions. Lisbon did not suit her; she was frequently very ill. In January 1694 she thought of going to Villa Viciosa; but the King of Portugal (her brother) dissuaded her, and the physicians told her it was subject to fevers; she desired to see the place where she was born.

In 169⅞, February, the Queen was at Euston and liked it much, and Dias gives an interesting account of her daily life. However, Euston did not suit her health. Dias attended her through France and Spain into Portugal. Lisbon suited her at first. A letter by Methuen is entertaining; noticing the convents, he says, that they are kept stricter in consequence it is said of the Duke of Grafton and some companions. The nuns could only be seen through two gratings nine feet apart, which they opened by law-suits and violence. There are many complaints about the irregularity in payment of the Queen's allowance.

1693, July ½, he alludes to an engagement between the French fleet and our Smyrna fleet, and the small success of the former.

1693, Nov. ½. Dias writes that the Queen bids him say that she is pleased with Lord Halifax's letter, and that her memory is very fresh with the kindness and love the English nation had for her, and that if they have any faults she has forgot them.

These letters (between 50 and 60) are very interesting for the information they give of the Dowager Queen and her travels and doings.

(17.) A few letters from J. Porter at Bruges in 1683. He held some command in the army and was imprisoned by the French.

1690 Apr. 26. Letter from Thomas Coventry about his being made Earl of Coventry. He does not wish his purse more than necessary to be concerned in this matter; does not wish it to be accounted a purchase.

(18.) A bundle of about 60 letters mostly by Sir G. Rooke, 1693–1699. (A few are from Mr. Crawford.)

1694, Apr. 2. On the Grafton. He is ordered to cruise north with a very good squadron, but not half manned; the "Suffolk," of 70 guns, had but 253 people on board, and out of those the captain told him he had more than 45 able seamen on his book. If he (Sir S. Rooke) gets his ships well home again, he will think he has made a happy voyage. Some are dated from the Nore, Cadiz, Jermyn Street, at Sea, Torbay.

Torbay, 1697, Aug. 3. M. Poutie has taken and plundered Carthagena to the value of one million sterling; one ship has arrived in Brest and six more are coming, and we have no ships in their way.

1629, Aug. 10. In a miserable state for want of provisions and ships.

1699, May 13. This relates to a squabble about refusing to sign the captain's commission; he was sent for by the King to Windsor; relates their conversation.

Lady Rooke died of small-pox in 1699. These letters do not contain very much of public interest.

1685, Nov. 6. A long letter about resigning his office.

1686, July 24. To Lord Halifax on being about to be made Lord Treasurer; lauds him, quotes a distich from Dryden. If Parliament sit any time, and such as the Duke of Newcastle, Lord Rutland, Lord Kingston, and Lord Weymouth and most of the Protestant peers of all counties would go up and unanimously appear for the preservation of their religion and the laws, he should think that his inconsiderable name deserved to be blotted out from the book of life if he stayed behind. But if a few or none go up, what hope of doing any good?

1688, Dec. 10. The princess of Denmark being at Nottingham without any retinue suitable to her quality, made him go and offer his services. Lord Ferrers and he attended her with most of the gentlemen of the county and above 100 horse to Warwick, where her highness hearing that the King was gone and his army disbanded, thought herself in great security, which made him (Lord C.) take his leave. In their march her highness desired him to be in Council for regulating the little army that was with her. Being yet of the King's Council, he excused himself.

1689, Nov 6. Mr. Speaker of the House of Lords has sent to him to come to Parliament or send two persons to swear that he was not able to come. He was not well, but he would not obey; he thinks an oath a solemn thing, and will rather submit to such fine as the House will lay upon him.

1696, Nov. 21. Hears that the House of Lords has ordered that peers who do not attend shall be sent in custody; explains that he is sick.

On the 29th he says that the House has given him further time: he would not have come but for Lord Halifax.

(20.) Eight letters from Lords Sunderland, Cowper, and others in 1680 and later years;—

168⅝, March ¼, from Lord Sunderland; about the late king, and he denies the reports of himself being a Papist, of having had a priest in his house, and of having bred his children as Papists.

1688, Dec. 19. (He and Halifax had quarrelled); he asks that his wife may call on Lord Halifax; he has never prospered since they ceased to be friends.

(21.) Letters from Lord Strafford and Lord Sydney, 1681–1694.

April 13, no year. A stiff letter from Algernon Sydney requesting Halifax to read the enclosed. Sir Nicholas Stroughton's case, and deliver his petition; he (Sir Nicholas) desires the protection of the House while his cause is depending before them.

Several letters from Henry (afterwards Lord) Sydney from the Hague, and one from the camp two miles from Cassels, Aug. 5, 1690; he says that the King is within 20 miles of Limerick; to-morrow he marches towards it to attack it, "but if what we hear of the French's "quitting it be true, I believe we shall not find much "difficulty in taking it and passing the river. As soon "as that is done, I believe the King will make what "haste he can towards England where I hear he is "wished for as much as the people desire to have him "continue here."

Lord Strafford's letters begin in 1671 and end in 1694, about 60 in number.

1681, Oct. 15. About the Duke of York and Popery.

1684, Feb. 10. Mentions proclamations of the new king and death of the late king.

1687, Feb. 6. The post brings news of Lord Shrewsbury and Lord Dorset having had threatening letters of destruction if not complying with certain things.

No date, Leicester Fields, 2 o'clock. I went yesterday to Windsor and came back but this morning, and being told the Duke of Monmouth had some advantage of the King's forces, killed 400 and lost but 50, and that the King sent for the Maire here, who told him he would not answer for the City, for if there was one for, there were three against, him. The King threatened to beat down the City from the Tower if they stirred.

1694, June 16. Is resolved not to defer marrying; has fixed on Lady Henrietta de Roye. Begs Lord Halifax to arrange for him; offers a jointure of 1,500*l.* (and 2,000*l.* if she remain a widow).

1694, Sept. 19. He announces his marriage. (He died a month or two afterwards.)

(22.) Seventeen letters from Mr. Francis Gwinn (in one of the letters spelt Gwyn) Lord Abbey, 1695–1699. In one dated London, Aug. 3, he details a proposition, and failure of it, for a land bank to be granted by a patent in consideration of a subscription to the Government.

(23.) Twenty letters, some from Mr. Edward Southwell and others, 1696–1699. Ten are in French from Le Baron De Villermin at Naples, 1696–1698; in one he says that from 25 April to 25 Sept. they had not a drop of water.

1688, March 6. In this letter it appears that he was a prisoner in the castle of Castelnovo.

Digitized by Google

1688, Aug. 3, Naples. Cardinal Howard and Ch. Licot made great fetes on the birth of the Prince of Wales; fountains of wine and oxen roasted whole.

Some of Edward Southwell's letters are from the Hague; at the end of 1696 he was in England.

1696, Sept. 24. Sir John Fenwick's tryal is put off from to-morrow sine die, or till after the King's return, which is imputed to a desire he has of not coming upon the stage a prisoner.

1699, May 11. Windsor.—The King has bestowed on him the vacancy in the Council by Mr. Bridgman's death.

These letters contain a little political news, but not much.

(24.) About 50 letters from Lord Weymouth, at Longheat. 1682–1700. A little, but not much of politics;—

1682–3, March 9. Chimney money is strictly enforced; 40s. penalty for every chimney not down in the list.

(25.) Between 50 and 60 letters from Sir William Coventry. 1669–1686. Gossipping letters; nothing of great interest.

(27.) Six letters from Lord Feversham (four are in French).

(28.) 1665. Copy of a letter from the Duke of York to the Earl of Burlington, saying that Laurye Hyde wishes to marry the Earl's daughter; that the Lord Chancellor is not in a condition to give much, but that he (the Duke) will befriend them.

Three letters from the Duchess of York to the Countess.

(29.) 1744, Oct. 4. David Mallet to the Duchess of Marlborough; about the life of the Duke, on which he professed to write; is at present employed on the first volume of the Duke's letters, which are very badly transcribed; incloses a list of the books he wants.

Another letter by Mallet to the Duchess; two to (apparently) the second Duke; and one to Jas. Stephens.

A paper of instructions for beginning the Duke's history; the writer gives his collections to those who are to write it; he speaks very highly of the Duke, who, he says, never sold any commission or place; he says the Duke allowed pensions out of his own pocket.

Between 50 and 60 letters mostly from and to the Earl of Burlington (1680–1692) to and from Henry Brown at Londesborough (very few by the latter).

A few are from Ireland 1685. One is from Robert Cooke to the Earl of Burlington, whom he always addresses by thou and thee; and some by Richard Graham.

June 22, London. Things in confusion; the Dutch in the river, and the French expected to land; but we hear they are employed in Flanders, and until they make peace with Spain we do not fear their coming here.

June 29. Parliament to meet on the 25th of next month; on Wednesday the Dutch fleet, about 80 sail, came up as far as the Hope, but have now fallen down again as low as the Boy of the Nore. They say the Duke of Buckingham yesterday rendered himself a prisoner to the Tower; Wednesday, in the afternoon, he was at Newport House.

July 27. Articles of peace brought over last night signed by Sir J. Coventry; nothing known; only for 20 days we may do each other all the mischief we can; then hostilities are to cease. We were in great hopes last night to have burned good part of their fleet. Sir Joseph Jorden, with five men-of-war and 15 fire ships, had a fair wind to come up the river to them; when he came up the men aboard the fire-ships would do nothing, except two who set fire to one of their guard ships; the men aboard her put it out.

July 30. The King came to the House and prorogued Parliament till the 10th October; he promised to disband the new raised forces speedily; when in print he will send it. Lord Bristol sate in the House on Monday without his robes; he withdrew when the King came in; as soon as the King went out he came in again.

(33.) Letter by King Charles I. (holograph). "Oxford, "Nov. 13. Will Savill, this is to assure you that what- "soever tales may be told you (never age being so full "of leyes as this is), I have ever been and am your "assured frend, Charles R."

(34.) About 30 letters by the Duke of Newcastle and his son, Lord Ogle. The contents are chiefly of a local and personal nature.

1664, March 7. H. Mansfield (Lord Ogle) tells Sir George Savile that the King had sent him a paper sealed with his own seal and superscribed with his own hand, containing a warrant to make his father Duke of Newcastle.

1665. Lord Ogle tells Sir Geo. Savile that the King sent for him and said, "He wanted him to serve on "land whenever he wanted to go to sea."

1684, Jan. 14. W. Ogle has the charter of Berwick, and the surrender thereof, to present to the King.

1684, Feb. 10. The Duke of Newcastle writes that he is grieved at the death of his dear master (King Charles II.). Sir E. Nevile going up with the charter of Rettford surrendered it to His Majesty.

1686, Jan. 30. The Duke is sorry about Lord George Savile, hurt in the furious attack on Buda.

1686, Jan. 17. The Duke wants to marry one of his daughters to Mr. Fitz-James, which the King is pleased to take kindly; says he can give his estate to whom he pleases; will keep up the memory of his father, in spite of his wife.

(35.) Many letters to the Earls of Cumberland and Lord Clifford, tempp. Henry 8th, and Elizabeth.

Thomas Lowther, at Carlisle, to Lord Cumberland;—The town and castle to be fortified; there is no horse-mill or hand-mill in the castle; no one who has skill in gunnery; recommends a horse-mill to be made; at the first setting of the siege the mill dam will be pulled down. Entreats the Earl not to spare the King's money, lest he be blamed. The King's purse is full of French gold, and the common voice of Scotland is war.

Thomas Clifford (at London) to the Earl of Cumberland. News that the Pope is defeated by Duke Fernando and the Emperor, and kept in captivity, and the church of St. Peter at Rome robbed by soldiers; and that the Bishop of Bath and Mr. Winter, who were going to the Pope with great riches, were taken and kept prisoners until the King's pleasure was known. The Grand Duke has besieged the King of Hungary and slain him. After the said news came to London the King was sent for to haste out of the country from Amphill, and continued at Westminster with his Council for five or six days.

A joint letter by Thomas Clifford and John Lowther to the Earl of Cumberland, is very entertaining for the illustration it gives of border warfare, and the notice of the Armstrongs. The writers, with Jack Musgrave, fell in with four of the Armstrongs, who begged for the safety and life of Christopher (brother of Antony) Armstrong, who was in prison. In return they offered to manage to get five or six of the outlaws, who climbed Carlisle walls, on to English ground, so that they might be taken prisoners. They give news of the movements and doings of the King of Scots.

A letter from Thomas Clifford (at Berwick) to the Earl, gives an account of an expedition of eight score of the garrison soldiers intending to take a town in Scotland, and then falling in with 400 Scots, and defeating them.

In another letter (dated Warkworth, 27 Oct.) he says there is news that there was then with my Lord of Northumberland a pursuivant of Scotland, who hath brought letters from the King of Scots unto the said Lord, by the tenour whereof, as may be perceived, the said King is very loth and in a high fear of war, and offering and demanding a meeting to be had very largely and humbly for the avoiding thereof.

A letter from N. Carnaby; he sends the Lord Privy Seal's letter ordered by the King, to propose of the rebellion of the Commons in Lincolnshire. The Earls of Northumberland, Rutland, and Huntingdon were at Nottingham on Sunday night last with a number of men, reckoned above 40,000, marching forward against the King's rebels the Commons of Lincolnshire which are thought to be about Newark; so they may [meet] them about Thursday next, if the Commons withdraw them not some other day.

Several letters from Thomas Wharton (dated from London, Wharton, Castle of Carlisle, and elsewhere) on Scottish and Northern affairs and frays. One from London gives an account of a great defeat of the Irish; the northern men did well, and overthrew many of Garratt's power. He notices the Act giving first-fruits and tenths to the King; and a report that the King is going to France in April to meet the French King.

A letter (temp. Eliz.), signed Jo. Weadley, says that a watch was still kept at Court, but he could not learn the cause: "It is thought there is some little Irre "between Sir Ro. C. and Sir Walter R. My Lord of "Shrewsburie, my Lord of Worcester, and Sir John "Stanhope are all sworne of the Privie Councell, and "this day setteth in the Star Chamber. Some think " that Sir Walter Ra. is not well pleased that he made " not the fourth. This day sennit, at night, search was " made throughout London; divers gentlemen and " others with women were taken together in bed; " some were released, some sent to prison, and the " women to Bridewell; some of the gentlemen in- " nocent were of our countrie. Besides them were " taken 14, all thought to be Seminaries.

1613. Jan. 18. Letter by John Tailor to the Lord of Cumberland. Gives an account of Somerset's marriage. The King declared himself plainly that no man did love him that did not show his love to my Lord of Somerset at this time, and so Mr. Dackomb and Mr. Ashton took up 100*l.* worth of plate in silver dishes and presented them to him in your Lordship's name; . . . never so many and great gifts to a subject before. The Lord of Salisbury gave a suit of hangings which cost his father 1,500*l.*

There are many more letters by John Tailor in London to the Earl, from 1600.

In a letter, dated 8 March 1602, to Francis Clifford, John Tailor gives an account of the proceedings before the Queen in Council about the differences between the Earl and the Merchant Adventurers.

1616. June 7. Copy of a Council letter to the Lord Warden, Deputy Lieutenant, and Justices of the Peace of Westmoreland, regarding quarrels between the Earl of Cumberland and the Earl of Dorset, about the castles of Brougham and Appleby, on the death of the Dowager Countess of Cumberland.

1617, August 8. A letter from Thomas Littell (at Brougham Castle) mentions the King being at Kendale—a great feast there, and six knights made.

1623, July 9. Copy letter of King James to the Archbishop of York and the Earl of Cumberland, directing them to convene all holders of lands and tithes formerly of the church of Selby, and induce them to contribute to the repair of the church.

1623, July 18. Draft of letter by the Earl to the Archbishop, on his receipt of the King's letter, offering to convene the meeting either at York or Selby, and to aid to his power.

1623, August 17. Copy letter of the Archbishop (Toby Matthews), and the Earl to owners of land, requiring them to meet at York Cathedral on the 17th Sept., between 8 and 10 in the forenoon (but the letter does not state for what purpose).

(35a.) Two petitions to Henry 8th by John Spencer of Wormleighton, against the order for putting land to tillage. (Four brief sheets, argumentative and interesting.)

Copy of Crammer's long letter to Queen Mary (the substance of it is given by Burnet); and of a second letter to the Queen, about two dozen lines; and of his letter to Dr. Story and Martin, the Queen's proctors. These copies are in small folio, bookwise.

1560. Order by the Justices of the Peace for the County of Northampton, settling the rate of wages and the condition of labourers.

A defence (unsigned) addressed to Sir Robert Lane and Sir Richard Knightley, by some person, in answer to slanderous words spread abroad of him. The Earl of Warwick had sent for him and appointed him Master of the Queen's carriages in her journey against the Northern rebels in the three shires of Northampton, Leicester, and Nottingham.

Copy of address by the Commons to King James I., stating his absence from town, and complaining of various things, especially popery.

And the King's answer, dated at Newmarket 1621, rebuking them, and forbidding anyone to disparage the Spanish match.

1635, Sept. 15. Copy of letter by John Driden, Sheriff of Northampton to the Chief Constable of the Hundred of Netotle Grove, County Northampton, the King having ordered the county to furnish a ship of 600 tons; he tells him to bring copies of the last levies of rates and taxes for the relief of the poor, to enable him to lay an equal charge.

(36.) About two dozen letters from Mr. William Hickman to the Earl of Halifax; 1678-1681; mostly on political matters, perhaps a Worcestershire man; in a letter dated 8th May 1680, he mentions that the authorities are enquiring into the Papists' estates, to return to the Exchequer; and an angry speech of Abbingdon, who bade him remember Johnson (a priest who was executed); that a warrant was out to take Abbingdon, who absented himself, but would re-appear.

(37.) Letters from Mr. and Mrs. Anthony Eyre to Sir Wm. Coventry; 1673, &c. Mr. Eyre seems to have farmed the Excise, and to have let contracts for sailcloth.—Letter from Gen. Eyre to Lord Halifax.

(38.) Letters from John Millington 1681-1688; news local and political from various parts of the country; but nothing on death of Charles II. or the Revolution.

(40.) Letters from R. Rigby to Lady Spencer. One about his political conduct occupies three large sheets of paper. One is dated March 20, 1782, 1 past 4, Wednesday; Lord North is this instant going down to the House to give the Thing up.

Copy of letter by Lord Roehampton to Lord Shelburne, dated Sunday, p.m. 6 o'clock, 24 March 1782, about forming a new Cabinet. A list of the cabinet accompanies.

Letters from Mr. Minchin, 1781-1782;—

1783, Feb. 19. A letter giving an account of a speech by Charles Fox, and the answer by Pitt.

All the letters in this packet are interesting; some were written in the House of Commons.

(41.) Letters from Sir C. Musgrave, Col. J. Granville, and others, written in the last 10 years of the 17th century.

A letter from Wm. Penn, dated 28 June 1689, in which he laments his losses; has just got to Sussex; is torn from his family; asks Lord Halifax's protection.

1683, July 20. Copy of paper sent by Jo. Tillotson to Lord Russell (signed by Tillotson).

1681, May 3. Letter by J. Tillotson to the Earl of Halifax, about the mysterious business of Fitz-Harris, and the Popish plot.

Saviliana by George Savile, late Marquis of Halifax, in four tracts. The Character of a Trimmer; a Letter to a Dissenter; the Anatomy of an Equivalent; Advice to a Daughter. (Some account of the books and their author 9 pp. 4to.)

Relation of the fight at the island of Ree, by a soldier then present. Fol., 2 pp.

Copies of letters from the wife of James II. to the Princess of Orange; in 1688. 4to., 8 pp. The last is dated Windsor, and complains that the Princess had not in her letters noticed her (the Queen's) son once since she had been brought to bed.

Copies (9 fols.) of letters apparently by the Princess of Orange, to her brother, about the Queen and her child; interesting.

1602, April 27 and 29. Two council letters for supplies of men for Ireland; addressed to the High Sheriff and the Commissioners for Musters. And copies of two others in 1601.

1679. April 12, 1679, Paris. Draft of a letter to the King, giving an Account of the Duchess of Cleveland's life there.

A discussion upon the occasion of a Bill proposed to the High Court of Parliament, requiring free liberty of trade with all kingdoms and countries; by the Company of Merchant Adventurers, whom that Bill seemeth most especially to concern. Title and 6 leaves, large 4to; begins (after table of contents), The present Bill confesseth trewlie that the Merchant Adventurers are of long continuance.

A number of letters by the Spencers and others, of the 17th century.

(45.) A few letters by the Earl of Orrery to the Earl of Burlington, 1667.

(47.) Letters from the Earl of Nottingham to his son-in-law, the Marquis of Halifax, 1697-1699.

(50.) Letters and papers to George, the last Earl of Cumberland beginning about 1600. In 1611 he was Lord Lieutenant of the Counties of Cumberland, Westmoreland, and Northumberland.

Letters and copies of letters by Wm. Hutton and by Wm. Musgrave.

George Earl of Cumberland was engaged in a lawsuit with the Company of Merchant Adventurers. A letter by him in 1601 says that they are reconciled.

A letter in 1601, by John Tailor to Francis Clifford, says that there was very heavy play at Court, and at last "my Lord joined."

Another letter in the same year, dated "York, in haste," says that Ostend is still besieged by the Spaniards; Ireland's warr not so hot as was expected, for the Spaniards would be gladly gone to their own country upon any reasonable conditions. The Scott was not so kindly entertained as he looked for, and went away discontented. Great triumphs were for two days at the sitting in the presence of the Queen, where my Lord your brother was challenger. There came not for these two days a single Scot nere the Queen; she had a scaffold made in the tilt-yard, which was marvelled at, and they not pleased.

In 1601, a man presents the Earl with one pound of citron, two oranges, and six lemons.

A letter from Archie Armstrong, the Court Fool, shews the easy confidence of a favourite. Here is a copy of it:—

"Right honoble lord,

"The cause of this my wrighting unto you, is most earnestly to request yo' lopp you would be contented that my cozen John Woolsen maye have the place of Geordy Rose, deceased, or the next that shalle fall voyd. For this is the reason of my wrighting unto yo' honor, that because I did passe my word for his mother's rent unto yo' lopp which he wilbe able to discharge if he hav that place. And moreover he shalbe an honest man to performe yo' Lopps service. For which I will pass my word & all that I have. Thank Christ for it, I have my Mt his favo' so farr that I might have had his highnes letter & my cozen Sr George, & also my Lorde of Mongomeryes if I had pleased, but my lord Chamberlaine & his Brother sede it should not neede. Therefore I have noe other thinge to wright, but to certify unto yo' honor that Sr John Grymse is dead. not forgettinge my dutye to yo' sonne, &c.

Yo' lopps to comand till death I rest,
ARCHYE ARMESTON.

From the Court at Newmkett, the 9th of Aprill 1616.

(Endorsed) To the Right honoble lord
Earl of Cumberlaynd, give theise
at Skipytaines Greane in Yorkshire, or else wheare.
To be delivered as above said."

(51). Nearly 30 letters from town and country by Sir Thomas Thynne and Henry Thynne to Viscount Halifax, 1675–1682;—

1677, Oct. 6. The Prince of Orange's visit fills us all with discourse; the vulgar proclaim love and marriage; the more discerning, treaties and peace.

1680, June 8. The King's declaration concerning his marriage with Mrs. Barlowe printed this day, which is only a recital of the examination at the Councell, with a transcript of the King's justification entered on the Council books. Mr. W. Fullenwy's second son stabbed himself, not mortally, for love of his mother's woman.

1686, May 13. The King yesterday finished the examination of the black box. Progers, Shepherd, and one Richards, a laceman, were called; the last vouched one Paul Hackett for his author, and that he heard it at Lord Chesterfield's table; whereupon the King, seeing it was only true Will talke said, I have enough of this farce, I will hear no more of it.

These letters contain notices of domestic and foreign news, the King, the Duke of Monmouth, Col. Blood, and Titus Oates.

(52.) Letters to the Earl of Burlington from Sheldon Archbishop of Canterbury, Morley bishop of Winchester, Lords Arlington and Fauconberg, Lady Clancarty, and others; but none of any importance.

(53.) Letter by Prince Rupert, dated 1644, June 29, Shipton Castle. Has taken a horse of the Earl of Cork;.....shall give satisfaction for him.

1645, Sept. 28. Katherine Duchess of Buckingham to the Countess of Cork; asks for continuance of her friendship.

(55.) 1665. Three letters from the Duke of Newcastle to the Duke of York. In one he wants to know when the Duke of York is coming to Welbeck. In another he regrets that the King's commands prevents the coming.

(56.) Miscellaneous letters of the 17th century, to the Countess of Burlington, and Lord Dungarvon; by Sir Bernard Gascoigne, Sir Philip Musgrave, and others. One by Gascoigne, dated 7 May 1680, is on the subject of the plot; but on the whole they do not seem to contain anything of importance.

Two short complimentary notes on cards, by Lavater to Lady Spencer, in 1792, with an engraved portrait of Lavater.

Copy of a letter from Count Orlow to J. J. Rousseau, inviting him to reside at his place, 60 versts from St. Petersburg. (He supposes Rousseau is in England, at the Duke of Richmond's.) The inhabitants speak neither English, French, Greek, nor Latin. The curate does not know how to preach or dispute, and his Dwailles in making the sign of the cross think that all is done.

Rousseau in his answer (dated from Wotton) declines the invitation; thinks that Orlow would expect a man of letters, and that he should pay for hospitality in wit and words.

Copy of the will of Louis XVI.

Original letter of Madame de Sévigné to her daughter, dated in 1671. (5 pp.)

The contents of this packet are chiefly copies of French poems and letters of the 18th century.

(58.) Several letters from Lord Falkland to Lady Dungarvan. In one dated Oxford, Nov. 2, he says, "I " would willingly flatter myself with an opinion of the " possibility that a treaty may yet end all: for never " to be in London or to enter it by force, are equally " dreadful to me. This filthy war, as it takes away the " joy of England, so it must utterly lose us, I re- " turned."

(60.) A bundle of papers (1645 and 1646), concerning the estates of the Earl and Countess of Cork, while under sequestration.

(61.) Five letters (temp. H. 8.), two being from Henry Clifford to his father the Earl of Cumberland, one from the same to the Prior of Mountgrace, and two not signed.

(63.) Letters (1640–1642), from Henry Lord Clifford and Earl of Cumberland to his daughter Elizabeth Lady Dungarvan, and the Countess of Cork and Burlington;—

1640, Sept. 26. The happy meeting began on Thursday; as great an assembly of Lords as ever I saw in Parliament (long account of it): a letter to be written asking the city of London to lend 200,000*l*.

1640, Oct. 8. The King wishing to see Beverly, he guided him through his park; has sent him a doe to York. He returned to York last night. Our Lords have begun the treaty with the Scots at Rippon.

1640, Oct. 9. Account of the election of Knights of the Shire at York, on Monday last. The King took out his army to exercise, to prevent trouble to the election.

1603, Aug. 8. A letter, signed E. Worcester, announcing that Lord Spencer was created a baron on the 21st July 1603, and that a fee of 10*l.* or the principal horse was due to the Earl Marshal for every such creation. He prays that it may be delivered. With this is a receipt for the 10*l.* signed by George Mynory.

1665, Oct. 24, Oxford. Ireland is like to be ruined by a bill for restraining the importation of Irish cattle.

1667, June 4. The seas are more than ordinarily infested by the Dutch.

(66). Miscellaneous letters;—B. Fairfax to ——. The French players attempted to act last night; were not suffered by the Templars; catcalls inside, butchers outside, scenes demolished, windows broken: the French ambassador did not escape insults.

Some letters by W. Kent (most likely the artist);—

1738, June 27. Pope is very busy; he last night came to me about 8 o'clock, in liquor, and would have more wine.

1738, Nov. 28. "Have not seen Pope but once these " two months before last Sunday morning; and he came " to town the night before; the next morning he came " before I was up. I would not get up, and sent him " away to disturb some one else; he came back and said " he could meet with nobody. I got dress and went with " him to Richardson, and had great diversion; he shewed " three pictures of Lord Bolingbroke . . . Another " Pope in a morning gown with a strange view of the " garden to shew the obelisk as in mourning to his " mother's death. The son of Richardson and Pope " agreed that Pope's head was Titzianesco; the old boy " grew warm and said, We have done our best. My " service to Mr. Bethell, and tell him his friend, Pope, " is the greatest glutton I know. He now talks of the " many good things he can make; he told me of a " soup that must be seven hours a making; he dinèd " with Mr. Murray and Lady Betty, and was very " drunk last Sunday night. He says if he comes to " town he'll teach him how to live and leave off his " roasted apples and water."

(66.) Computus (on paper) of Thomas Clifford, Esq., receiver for Lord Strange, 4 Eliz.: headed, "Terre et " possessiones nuper Ducis Suff."

(No. 1.) The Captain's narrative of the loss of the ship "Lord Hector," wrecked at Newfoundland, in a letter to Mr. Stephen, Secretary to the Admiralty, 23 Nov. 1782.

An original paper by Wm. Smith, Chief Justice of Canada, containing an account of French grants to religious houses of lands in Canada.

Observations (in French) on Canada, dated Quebec, 1793.

Copy letter of Lieut-Col. James Gordon, to Sir Guy Carleton, K.B., Commander-in-Chief of H.M.'s forces in N. America, 1783, about Captain Asgill, who was seized by the Americans as a sacrifice for the death of Huddy. He was released through Gordon's exertions, and Lady Asgill (mother of the Captain) wrote a letter (of which a copy is here), which did not reach New York until after Gordon's death. There are copies of letters between Capt. Asgill and Mr. Ryland, in the matter.

(4.) Copy of a letter by Oliver Cromwell to Speaker Lenthall, dated Skarborowe, June 14, 1645, giving an account of a victory over the King.

Copy of correspondence between the Duchess of Kingston and Foote (about the trip to Calais).

In 1603, King James I. sent Lord Spencer to invest Frederick, Duke of Wurtemburg, with the garter, an honour which had been promised to him by Queen Elizabeth long before. In this collection occur the following documents relating to Lord Spencer's mission :—

1603, Sept. 16. Copy of Privy Seal for allowance for diet. Lord Spencer to have 4*l.* daily, and Garter, 2*l.*

1603, Sept. 17. Letter to masters of English ships, directing them to let Lord Spencer have the use of ships on his return from Slade, Middleborough, or Hamburgh.

1603, Sept. 25. The King's passport and letters of protection to Lord Spencer and Sir Wm. Dethick, Garter, and servants and train, &c. Dated at Winchester.

1603, Oct. 18. Drafts of two letters by Lord Spencer when abroad.

1603, Nov. 14. Copy of a letter (in French) from the Duke to King James.

1603, Nov. 15. A German document of this date from Stutgard.

An abstract of the journey by Lord Spencer, noting the daily advances. This occupies six pages, and is headed, "My Jurnall to Duke Fredericke of Wer-"tenberge when I caryed him the garter from the "Kinge, 1603." He describes the places through which he passed and the persons whom he met. He left Dover on the 8th of October 1603, and after having fulfilled the object of his mission he returned to Margate on the 9th of December. Added to the journal is an account in Latin of the marriage and children of Duke Frederick; one of the children of Frederick Achilles, born 1591, April 25, is in the margin, noted as "the exceeding fatt yonge man."

Postages and transportations on the journey and back; one and a half brief sheets. The sum total was 984*l.* 16*s.* 2*d.*

A 4to book of account, in 26 leaves, signed by Spencer and J. Middleton.

There are two folio volumes of household expenses at Althorp, 1625–1630.

An inventory of personal estate on the death of a Spencer in 42 Eliz., and another in 26 Car. I.

On some of the early deeds are fine seals. There is a large one of the Abbey of Holy Cross, at Waltham, with secretum at the back. To a letter of procuration by Isabella, Prioress of Haliwell, dated 1392, is the seal in red wax, viz. the holy well, and over it John the Baptist's head in a dish. A seal of the priory of Wallingford to a deed of the 15th century.

ALFRED J. HORWOOD.

THE MANUSCRIPTS OF THE RIGHT HONOURABLE THE EARL OF MOUNT EDGCUMBE, MOUNT EDGCUMBE, CO. CORNWALL.

The letters here are full of interesting and amusing accounts of passages in the Civil War and other events in the reigns of Charles I. and Charles II.

So much obscurity still covers the adventure of Perkin Warbeck that the presence of an order signed by Henry VII. on the subject cannot fail to be gratifying.

A letter from London, temp. Henry VIII., would, I think, repay the trouble of transcription.

The papers relative to Sir Peter Edgcumbe's project under the patronage of Don Antonio (claimant to the throne of Portugal) are curious, but quite in accordance with the practice of the Elizabethan age. These papers are some in Latin and some in Portuguese; and translations by a hand of the last century are with them.

Below are given notes of such documents and letters as seemed, on a cursory inspection, to be most remarkable.

Of the early charters the following are noticeable :—

By a very early undated deed Gilbert de Ferrars grants to William fiz Offrid as a freeman, an acre of land at Wringworthy, and one small English acre (unam parvam acram terre Anglicam) and a half in his demesne; and acquits him of naifty and servitude.

22 Edw. I. Edmund son of Richard King of Germany, Earl of Cornwall, gives to Edward of Sandhowe 3 ferlings of land in Sandhowe, in the manor of Carlstok, which 3 ferlings he before this held in villenage. Large seal in green wax, 3 inches broad. The shield has a lion rampant within a bordure charged with 14 bezants, and the shield is hung round the neck of an eagle displayed. The legend is S. Edmundi de . . . . Comitis Cornubie. On the reverse is a horseman, sword in hand and shield on arm.

35 Edw. I. A grant by Thomas de Stonhouse (Thomas fiz Ralph was his grandfather). This has a seal; the shield bears a lion rampant.

A folio volume, vellum, 15th century, contains a rental of Plympton Priory. It is headed "Rentale "ibidem renovatum coram domino David Priore ibi-"dem, &c. 20 Sept., 21 Edw. IV." It begins with "Stone in Blakeworthy." The volume is of 62 leaves.

1405. A deed (in Latin) by Lady Joan Edgcumbe, relict of Sir Richard Edgcumbe, granting a piece of land in Menhynot to the cathedral of Exeter, for an anniversary for Sir John Edgcumbe, deceased, formerly a canon of the said church, and for the souls of the said lady and of her husband, and of others. The seal of the Dean and Chapter affixed.

Henry VII. Privy seal and sign manual of Henry VII. to Sir Piers Edgcumbe, one of the knights of our body and sherif of our county of Devon, Roger Holand, John Collet, and William Joham. The King states that goods and chattels and manors, lordships, lands, and tenements were forfeited and come to his hands by reason of the rebellion of such of his subjects as traitorously had offended him in the company of the Smyth Mighell Joseph and Perkyn Warbeck, and in their seditious quarrell fortuned to be slayne in playne bataill or otherwise put to execution of deth, or wilfully have absented themself contrary to his proclamation. He orders them to seize the said goods, chattels, manors, &c. to his use, and hold them till further pleasure, and receive rents and account for them. Dated at Exeter 12 November, in the 12th year of his reign.

Forest laws. A 4to. volume, paper, 16th century, of 53 leaves. The title is, "The boke of forest laws, "wherein is conteyned all matters of forest touching "vert and veneson, &c., with the judgments given in "the Gyers and Terminers as well on this side as "beyond the river of Trent, collected and gathered and "in their places, by Mr. William Fletewood, Recorder "of the Cittye of London."

After a proheme of 4 leaves, the 1st chapter begins A forest is a territory of certain ground properly bounded and meered.

The last chapter (the 84th) ends or for any other trespass which appertayneth to the Quene's Majestee to have reformation.

A Latin note at the end says that it was delivered in the year 1581 into the hands of P. Ed., esquire. (P. Ed. was doubtless Peter Edgcumbe.) I do not know that this work by Fleetwood has been printed.

A folio volume of early transcripts of the Minutes of the Prince's Council for the Duchy of Cornwall, 23 to 36 Edw. III. The entries are between 500 and 600 in number, and comprise the whole business of the Duchy property. Names, places, and dates are given. They purport to be taken from the Duchy books. The volume is imperfect; it has about 120 leaves; 30 or 40 are wanting.

Letters of the 16th century.

(1545), July 7, London. Letter from Adam Ralegh to Mr. Richard Edgcumb at Stonchouse. He gives London news: the King going to Greenwich; orders for ships to get ready for sea; the French are doing the same; "God send them male fortune." The Scotch parliament have chosen the Earl of Angus to be their protector and defender; encloses a prognostication out of an almanack, and a proclamation of the ships that go at their own adventure (2½ pp.). At the end the writer sends a bill. And a note by Richard Edgcumbe at the foot says that he sent the amount on the 14th January 1545.

A bundle of letters of the 16th century gives an illustration of the way in which at that time private gentlemen did business with foreign Sovereigns.

The first letter has no relation to the others. It is dated 1399, March 16, and is from Denis King of Portugal and Algarve to Stephen Derneford, who had sent a letter by Geoffrey Sonnel, his friend and kinsman, actually in the King's service. The King certifies that John Charldon, his proctor, has not received any part of the money due to Stephen Derneford from the King. It has the autograph (to el rey) and seal of the King.

1582, March 8. Contract between Diego Botelho, minister to the King of Portugal, and Counsellor and Chancellor of his Exchequer, and Sir —— Edgcumbe; the latter is to send ships to Pernambuco, which still held out for the King, and to go to other parts of Brazil. The king will send him letters of marque against the King of Spain, who has invaded the King of Portugal's dominions. For any Indiaman they shall bring to Terceira the King will give 30,000*l.* (crusados?) Drawn up at Mount Edgcumbe and signed by both parties.

1582, March 13. Certificate of Botelho that Captain Esperres did agree that Edgcumbe should procure Captain Estovin, who was detained in custody by an order of the Council of Queen Elizabeth, to be set free; and refit the sails of the squadron fit for sea; and that both are going in his company; that Captain Esperteus may sell the said vessels to the King his master, or make other agreements with him.

1582, May 12. Antony de Sousa to (P.) Edgcumbe. The Count his master arrived at Rochelle on Saturday last, and despatched another messenger to remind him to order Edgcumbe's letters of marque to be made out. They could not be done immediately, the Count being not yet come, being forced to remain at Rochelle to give orders for the equipment of the fleet which was then going on her Majesty's service. Edgcumbe's servant now carries it to him. The Count is much obliged by the reception which Edgcumbe and his lady gave him. The writer is much obliged himself. P.S. (on separate paper): "This was written before the arrival "of the Count," and he excuses himself for writing on the presumption that he had not come from Rochelle.

1582, May 12. Letters of marque to Sir Peter Edgcumbe. Prizes were to be adjudged at Terceira. On taking any ships from the East Indies a gratuity of 30,000 crusados was to be made for every one. Signature and seal.

1582, May 13. Latin letter of instructions from the King to Sir Peter Edgcumbe. Botelho has informed him of the kind treatment at his house, and of the squadron of ten ships equipped by Sir Peter at his own expense. Signed and sealed by the King.

1582, May 13. Latin letter from Don Diego to Mr. Edgcumbe on the same subjects on the occasion of the former despatching to the latter the above letter from Don Antonio.

1582, May 13. Letter by Diego Botelho to the Count of Torres Vedras, telling him of the worth of Sir P. Edgcumbe, and of having got letters of marque for him, which Edgcumbe will present to the Count and take his directions.

1582, May 24. Latin letter from Diego to Edgcumbe on the purchase of a ship. Captain Spretus, although a friend of the Earl of Leicester, has not appeared before the King, but has stopped short at Rochelle. "I told him that the Earl of Leicester had assured me "that the ship was his, and that he had appropriated "it to the service of his Majesty." Spretus (Esperteus) ought to have brought letters to that effect from the Earl, with a power to receive the purchase money.

Letters of the 17th and 18th centuries.

A large folio lettered A. contains upwards of 220 letters, mostly from Philip Edgcumbe. Among these are:—

1641, Jan. 4. William Glanvill to Piers Edgcumbe, his brother. The apprentices' insolence; the King has trained bands for guards; the House of Commons asks the King for a guard against the malignants.

1641, Jan. 11. From William Glanvill. Account of proceedings in the House of Commons on the articles against Pym; the King's doings. (Four pages, interesting.)

1641, Dec. Petition and protestation of the Bishops and Prelates about the insults to them by the mob. (A printed paper, one page.)

1645, March 30. Copy of letter by Richard Grenville (at Cullomblin) to Capt. Symon Cottell.

1645, Dec. 25. Prince Charles (at Truro) to the same. Desires him to attend, with friends, neighbours, tenants, and servants.

1668, Oct. 31. Philip Edgcumbe (at London), to Sir Richard Edgcumbe (at Mount Edgcumbe). Hears that the King intends to ride Lord Gerrard's horse at Newmarket.

1668, Nov. 12. The same to the same. The Dutch grow insolent in the Straits.

1668, Dec. 3. The same to the same. News about the Emperors of Morocco and Mexico.

1668, Dec. 8. The same to the same. Hears that the Dutch intend to bring over abundance of gold; and the guines (guineas) ere Lady Day will not pass for above 20*s.*

9, March 4. The Reader of the Inner Temple invited the Lord Mayor to dinner; he wanted to come with the sword before him, but was not allowed; he waited three or four hours and returned dinnerless; there were no blows. Sir W. Coventry sent to the Tower for challenging the Duke of Buckingham.

1668
9, March 23. On Sunday Sir W. Coventry kissed hands and was released.

1669, March 30. The Duke of Tuscany,* it is supposed, will have the garter.

April 6. Reception of the Duke of Tuscany by the Lords.

May 8. Report that Her Majesty is with child; from her own month she is three months gone.

May 13. Went to a review in Hyde Park of all the forces of England not in garrison; the King, the Duke of York, Prince Rupert, French ambassador, and Prince of Tuscany were there.

May 20. The report of the Queen being with child still holds, and, as I heard, was drunk by Haunce in Keldert by His Majesty. Sends a list of the French King's ships, 97 in all; 85 were built since 1668.

June 24. Indictment against Mr. Charles Progers and Col. William Legge's son (page of honour to His Majesty) and the porters at Whitehall for whipping the bailiffs that arrested Sir Alexander Fraser at the suit of Sir E. Godfrey.

Sept. 14. Mr. Blandford has letters from France that the Duke of Beaufort is a prisoner in the Grand Signior's Court, and led up and down in chains; 600,000*l.* demanded for ransom.

1670, Feb. 11. The Duchess was brought to bed of a girl on Thursday.

1670, Sept. 15. The Commissioners for the Union met yesterday in the Exchequer Chamber; they adjourned to Saturday at Somerset House, where a four-square table is to be for the fifty Commissioners.

Sept. 20. The Prince of Orange is coming over; he will land at Harwich, and thence go to Newmarket. I am told his coming is not so much a compliment to His Majesty as to get in a debt of 200,000*l.* lent by his father to the late King, and interest ever since, which will make the sum double.

Oct. 11. The Castle of Elsinore fired on one of His Majesty's yatches for not striking flag; His Majesty resents it.

Oct. 13. Col. W. Legge, Groom of the Bedchamber and Lord of the Ordnance, died this morning.

1671, Aug. 19. The Dutch refused to strike to His Majesty's yacht, whereof one Crowe was master; he fired. Van Gent, the Admiral, sent to know why; he said he had orders. Fired again; was told he might return, as he had done his duty. Crowe gave an account to the Duke, but was sent to the Tower. (He had been ordered to sink the Dutch.)

Sept. 12. Great hail-storm last week; the stones as large as pigeons' eggs. Account of His Majesty taking and cancelling the patent of the farmers of Customs who complained of defalcations.

Sept. 18. Thinks that the cancelling was to facilitate the way of a Lord Treasurer; thought Lord Ashley to be the man.

Sept. 19. A yacht was sent out yesterday to the Dutch fleet; all struck their flags to her, so he believes there will be no break with them. Gives the names of the new Commissioners for Customs, who kissed hands yesterday.

Sept. 20. The Duke of Richmond is going to Denmark; some fancy to treat of a match between the Duke of York and that King's sister; that of Innspruck being off.

Oct. 14. The Dutch are now victualling a fleet of 60 sail.

1671 $\frac{1}{2}$. Jan. 13. Report that the Earl of Essex is to be Lord Lieut. of Ireland.

Jan. 20. The Duke of Monmouth is to have a regiment of 24 companies, each company of 100 foot; it is said he is to be made General of all the English, Scotch, and Irish in France.

Jan. 23. The Dutch are in such distraction as never was since Queen Elizabeth's days; divided amongst themselves, some are for the Prince of Orange and some against him.

Jan. 27. A fire at the King's play-house between 7 and 8 on Thursday evening last, which half burned down the house and all their scones and wardrobe; and all the houses from the Rose Tavern in Russell Street on that side of the way to Drury Lane are burned and blown up, with many in Vinegar Yard; 20,000*l.* damage. The fire began under the stairs where Orange Moll keeps her fruit. Bell the player was blown up.

1672, April 6. Capt. Digby has returned from France; he was presented with a jewel of 1,000*l.* The French fleet will be ready in a fortnight.

April 30. List of the ships at the Nore, and fire-ships, against the Dutch.

May 4. The Dutch embassador was refused a passport by the King; he is refused by his Majesty the offers he had orders to make from his masters, which, as was said, was twice a blank for his Majesty to make or set down his own demands. His Majesty answered that it was now too late, he being engaged otherways.

June 1. An engagement on Tuesday last; the Royal James lost most of her men and Lord Sandwich; the ship was burnt. The Dutch had the weather-gage till 1 p.m.; then Harman and Kempthorne got it and made the Dutch nine bonefires of their best ships. About 4 the Dutch fled, fighting still, and got to the Weilings yesterday; and our fleet at Sole Bay. The Dutch burned all their own disabled ships.

June 11. Richard Darey (at Whitehall) to Sir R. Edgcumbe; news that the Earl of Sandwich's body was found.

June 11. A letter from Harwich describing the finding of the body of the Earl of Sandwich yesterday in his clothes, the star and George on them, with 13 diamonds; a gold watch; three rings, which my Lord had taken off his finger and tied them in his blue garter which he wore about his leg, and put them in his pocket; a large tear-blue sapphire ring, &c.

Copy of Letter by Charles II. to the Duke of York, recommending him to absent himself for some time beyond seas.

1684, July 6 and July 8. Letters from the Earl of Feversham to the Duke of Albemarle, about the Monmouth rebellion.

1684, Feb. 3, at night. Letter by L. Jenkins (at Doctors' Commons). Account of King Charles's illness.

1685, July 6. Copy of Lord Feversham's letter from the camp at Weston; and a letter from the Earl of Bath (dated Exeter) sending the above.

A folio, lettered C., contains numerous letters from 1622 to 1646.

The first is a paper dated 1622, Feb. 17, containing 28 questions to the authorities at Liskeard; how many persons every householder had in his house; how many lodgers; &c. &c.

1640, Sept. Edward Reed to Thomas Coteel, Esq., at Titchfield, Hants. He refers to the battle of Newburn (28 Aug. 1640), and the losses there. The letter calls the place Newbiggin ford, in the way from Alnwick to Newcastle. (2½ pp.)

1640, Sept. 8. The same to the same. The King and his army are at York; about 40,000 horse and foot; the Scots remain at Newcastle; Sir J. Digby and Mr. Wilmot were taken prisoners in the last fight; mentions the Scots' petition.

1640, Sept. 15. The same (at London) to the same. Wishes of peace are generate, and the hopes of it are the summons that the King has given to the Lords of his Council; all but six, which are the two bishops of Canterbury and London, the Earls of Arundel and Dorset, the Lord Cottington, and Mr. Secretary Windebank; these are to stay here and attend the rest of the lords of the kingdom to advise of the way to give answer and satisfaction to the petition of the Scots, here enclosed. Almost all the lords are for peace and a parliament, unto which purpose I hear the General has written to the King. The city of London is framing a petition to the King to the same purpose that the Lords' petition was to the King; that is, for peace, a parliament, and justice on those that counselled the King for war. The Scots fortified Newark and Tinmouth; they got 2,000 arms from them that ran away at the fight.

1640, Sept. 22. The same to the same. The King's army increases daily.

Sept. 25. News from York and the North.

Sept. 27. This day a warrant to the clerk of the Crown to send out writs for a Parliament for the 3rd of September.

Oct. 2. About the intended Parliament.

1642, Jan. 23. Ralph Hopton certifies that 300*l.* for which a bond had been given had been taken for the King's service.

Nov. 15. Ralph Hopton to Piers Edgcumbe about the money.

1646, Nov. 30. Copy of order for payment of 50*l.* per annum out of profits of the impropriate rectory of Newchurch, in the Isle of Wight, sequestered from Piers Edgcumbe, a delinquent.

1643, April 18. Plate brought in at Liskeard; at Killaton April 24; gives the names of persons and number of ounces, and the value.

1643, April 29, Launceston. Order to Piers Edgcumbe and the rest of the Commissioners, concerning the plate, by the Earl of Warwick, Lord Mohun, Ralph Hopton, and others, "to take into your hands what is "to be gotten beyond what is already come in and "speed it to Sir Richard Vivyan."

1643. Answers Sir Samuel Rolle that the timber sold, of which he complains, was for his Majesty's use.

1645, Oct. Note of moneys paid to the soldiers' garrison of Milbroke.

1646, Jan. 13. Copy of Commons Journals about Francis Godolphin suing out his pardon.

Feb. 4. Authority to seize the estates of delinquents (Piers Edgcumbe is among them).

1646. Receipt to P. Edgcumbe for 1,256*l.* 10*s.*, half of a fine of 2,500*l.*

Other papers regarding his delinquency and fine.

A paper about the rectory of Newchurch, Isle of Wight. (The parish is said to be 8 miles long from north to south.)

Another folio contains many manuscript (and printed) papers relating to the fine on Piers Edgcumbe; and passes to him during the Protectorate. A letter from Portsmouth, dated Feb. 4, 167½, says, "We are fitting "all the ships here with all the expedition imaginable; "if men are to be had all will be well enough; at pre- "sent they come down but slowly; we find great "difficulty to get men to fill our companies, this gar- "rison having got such an ill name, fearing to be "drawn ont or sicking of the place, which frights all "young men coming for soldiers.

A PACKET of LETTERS marked A.

1644, May 15. Original summons by Robert Marten to the Governor of Mount Edgcumbe to deliver it up, to prevent the effusion of Christian blood. (This is a small slip of paper containing 4 or 5 lines.)

1644, July 30. A summons (on a folio sheet) by Robert Earl of Warwick to the same effect. Dated from Plymouth Sound.

Same day. Henry Bourne answers that he keeps Mount Edgcumbe for his master Colonel Edgcumbe, till his return, to whom he conceives it doth justly belong.

1644, the last of July. Order, signed by the Earl of Essex, to send to Bodmin, his head quarters, by Friday night, 20 bushels of good and sweet meal, 8 galons to the bushel; whereof one 3rd was to be bread for the use of his army.

1645, March 4 and 5. Copies of Fairfax's orders for taking Mount Edgcumbe on the surrender thereof.

1645, March 5. Original by Fairfax, saying that on laying down their arms they may reside at home peaceably.

A PACKET marked B.

Copy of Secretary Jenkins's letter sent by the Earl of Bath, about the attempt on the King's life on his return from Newmarket, March 1685.

36 Ed. III., Monday after the feast of St. Katherine the Virgin. Charter by William de Montacute, Earl of Salisbury and Lord of Man, granting to his beloved nephew and godson William, son of Guy de Bryone, the reversion in fee of the manor of Dunheved, &c., which Thomas Waryn held for life and for one year after his death. Tested at Dunyate. The seal is a very large one of red wax; the horse and man and trappings and armorial bearings are of beautiful execution; it is a counterpart of one in the collection of the Duke of Manchester at Kimbolton Castle, mentioned in the Appendix to the first Report of this Commission.

There are some letters from Sir Horace Mann and others to Capt. Geo. Edgcumbe, dated in 1744, 1745, and 1757; a few of these are from the Prince Lobkowitz who commanded part of an army.

1745, April 17, N. S. Sir Horace Mann writes that the Spaniards were in pursuit of the Austrian army which was retiring into a strong place called the Seraglio of Mantua. "The Spanish and Neapolitan "troops have crossed the Parasо, which obliged Prince "Lobkowitz to take the above resolution in order "to wait secure till his army is reinforced from "Germany." He says that he fears the slowness of the Court at Vienna will prove fatal in the beginning of the campaign by the loss of Modena and the Duchy of Parma; that the last winter was the severest ever known in Tuscany; it killed all his orange trees.

1745, April 21, N. S. Quotes part of a letter from the Admiral, about the movements of part of the fleet for intercepting the Spaniards.

1745, April 24. The Spanish and Neapolitan army decamped from the situation it was in on the 22nd, and is to march on the 1st. This surprised every body.

1745, May 5. About the movements then near Pisa. The avant garde of the Austrians now at Pontremoli, 3,000 in number, will harass them extremely in their rear when they enter the State of Genoa; can not find where the large train of artillery imbarked at Naples is going.

1745, May 8. This is a long letter about Stuart, a painter, who had been in Capt. Edgcumbe's ship, and had been a friend of the Pretender.

Seven very interesting letters from Charles Jones, six being addressed to Captain Geo. Edgcumbe, and one to the Honble. Charles Stanhope. They are dated in 1753 and 1754 from White's Chocolate House, and give court and town news, notices of gaming, &c.

1789. Account of a royal visit to Mount Edgcumbe.
1674. Two letters from Saml. Pepys.
1669. Two letters from Bernard Gascon at London; he was with the Prince of Florence, and Sir R. Edgcumbe had lent him some harness.

1775, April 18. Description of a subterranean cavern at Stonehouse, by F. Geath.

Two letters from David Garrick (one at Hagley, past 6 and a cloudy morning) to Lord Mount Edgcumbe.

1789, July 26. A letter (unsigned) dated from Brussels, describing scenes at Paris, the King and Queen, and doings of the mob, and their treatment of the King and Queen. (4 pp. very interesting.)

1794, Nov. 29. Letter by Lord Orford (Horace Walpole) to Lady Mount Edgcumbe, on the birth of her grandson.

Several bundles of papers on navy matters, 1743–1764. Among these are Admiral Byng's line of battle, 1756, and his orders and signals. Captain Martin's orders about the escape of the Pretender's son, in 1746, from Scotland. Admiral Hawke's orders and line of battle, 10 July 1756.

Mount Edgcumbe is famous for situation and beauty. It is said that the Commander of the Spanish Armada had marked it for his own possession. He should have consulted the Portuguese Count Botelho, whose letters are noticed above. He would then have landed as a visitor, and have felt, while a guest of Sir Piers Edgcumbe, gratification as great as that, which by Lord Mount Edgcumbe's kindness, I experienced during my visit to his house.

ALFRED J. HORWOOD.

THE MANUSCRIPTS OF THE RIGHT HONOURABLE THE EARL OF CATHCART, FROM CATHCART AND EDINBURGH, NOW AT THORNTON-LE-STREET, CO. YORK.

The Cathcarts, in a direct male descent of more than 600 years, have given to their Sovereigns good servants in court and in camp. Three of their house fell at the fatal field of Flodden.

In the 18th century the chiefs and cadets of this house filled many offices of trust and command; and the many hundreds of letters and papers in Lord Cathcart's possession well illustrate their services.

Among these documents are many which illustrate the rebellions of 1715 and 1745, the American rebellion, the government of India, the English military expeditions to Holland, and other important events in the last century; and numerous letters throwing light on court and town life during the same period. Some extracts below will well show the varied and interesting nature of this large collection.

There is a large folio volume, in which are laid down numerous deeds and documents, from the 13th century downwards, relating to the family of Cathcart and their possessions.

And there are other charters from the 14th century downwards; some of the early ones have heraldic seals including the arms of Cathcart.

There are a few business letters of the 16th century.

A folio volume, containing letters selected by Lord Cathcart as specimens.

1746, March 27. Letter by William Wentworth, Lord Strafford. He mentions the first appearance of the new dancer Violetti (afterwards Mrs. Garrick). "She surprised the audience at her first appearance on the stage; for at her beginning to caper she shewed a neat pair of black velvet breeches with roll'd stockings; but finding they were unusual in England, she changed them the next time for a pair of white drawers."

1746, May 3. Lord Strafford writes that "Vauxhall and Ranelagh are the present diversions, which one may be easily tired of, I think; for they are always the same, and one's pleasure depends on the party."

1746, June 26. Lord Strafford writes: "The Prince of Hesse has shown himself in London; everybody agreed in his character of drunkenness and stupidity."

Letters from Hester Pitt, wife of Lord Chatham, to Lady Cathcart; 1759–1770. In one dated Sept. 7, 1759, from abroad, she mentions the success of Prince Ferdinand, and the reverses of the King of Prussia; Boscawen's victory over the French fleet. "Good news from America; Mr. Pitt reserves himself the pleasure of telling it me at his return this evening from London."

1776, May 30. Lord North (at Downing Street) writes that Lord Holderness, for illness, desires to cease to be governor to the Prince of Wales and the Bishop of Osnaburgh. The King has nominated Lord Bruce in his room. In Lord Bruce's place the King makes Lord Carmarthen a Lord of the Bedchamber; and he thinks Lord Cathcart will be one before Christmas.

1711, March 27. Order signed by the Duke of Marlborough (at the Hague), to the commanding officer of the Britannic Dragoons, to observe the accompanying rules of "leurs Hautes Puissances" in the march from winter quarters.

Several letters from Elizabeth Countess of Sutherland (about A.D. 1745) at Dunrobin, to Lord Cathcart at the camp at Fort Augustus. In one she asks for a pass between the North and Edinburgh from the Duke of Cumberland's secretary. She appears to have obtained it. In another she explains her conduct in regard to the passage of troops.

1766. Two letters from David Allan (the Scottish Hogarth).

1770. Letter from Catherine Duchess of Queensbury, at Ambresbury: "The Duke is stept to Salisbury; I "suppose to see if it rains there as much as here."

1718. A letter from Lord Lovat, not important.

1779, Nov. 13. Letter from Major John André to Lord Cathcart; as to moving a regiment by reason of sickness.

1807. Letter by Sir John Sinclair. In the island of Zealand is a flock of several hundred Spanish sheep of the best quality; wants specimens sent over; the price, if not unreasonable, is no object.

Letter by Sir Walter Scott, and one by Lord Chatham.

Letter from Louis Drummond de Melfort to the Duke of Cumberland. Has been hit in the foot by a ball; asks for Mr. Barret, his surgeon; gave his parole d'honneur to follow his Royal Highness's command.

1712, March 17, O.S. Colonel Gardiner (at London) writes: "Prince Eugene left this at 2 this morning." [c. 1730] May 4. The Duke of Argyle and Greenwich writes to Lord Cathcart to ask his father to vote for Lord Eglintoun against Lord Aberdeen.

1732, March 30. Letter from William Duke of Cumberland when a boy. Sends to Colonel Cathcart copy of a prologue from a private play acted by Lady Caroline Lenox, Lord Lempster, and others, at Mr. Conduit's, in the presence of the Duke, the Princess Mary, and the Princess Louisa. (The play was The Indian Emperor.)

1697. Letter from Robert Alexander to the Master of Cathcart, on literary subjects.

1740. List of staff on the expedition to the West Indies under Lord Cathcart; giving the names and amount of pay; and the characters of many of them.

1729, Dec. 25. Letter from Thomas Dalrymple, at Edinborough, to Charles Cathcart. Last night Lord Balmerinoch's son M'Alexander, killed one Lieutenant Swift in a duel; and though wounded he made his escape even after he was in custody.

Major Hamilton's claim on the Earl of Hyndford (regimental matters, soon after 1713). 4 pages.

1713, June 6. Letter by James Craig on the Earl of Findlater's speech in the House of Lords for the dissolution of the Union.

Letters from the army in Flanders, 1709; price of hay; difficulty of getting lodging for the men, &c., &c.

1711. Regimental orders from A. Cardonnel at the Hague, and from W. Cadogan at Brussels, to Major Cathcart.

1711, March 12. March route signed by the Duke of Marlborough at the Hague, for the regiment of Royal Scotch Dragoons to march from Gorcum to St. Quintin to join the troops of Brabant, &c.

1711, July 10. Dispositions for foraging for the right wing, on the 11th July, on the plain between Houdain and Bethune. The numbers of troops which were to be at different places; rules for action and retiring.

1710, June 16. A letter dated at Coupar, giving an account of a hoax on the Commander-in-Chief. It was said that ships were in sight and that the Pretender was coming. Accordingly, troops were assembled and the horses were shod, and an express was sent to the castle. After a time the hoax was discovered, but the express was gone. The Commander-in-Chief was enraged; was bled and purged, and he recovered.

Several papers in 1711 and 1712 of the duties of the officers' commissions in the Royal British Dragoons (commanded by the Earl of Stair).

Letters from Thomas Dalrymple, David Dalrymple (at Edinburgh), 1710, John Campbell (at London), 1712, Ninian Boyd.

The letters in this packet are chiefly in the period 1710–1713, and comprise many to Major Cathcart while serving abroad under the Duke of Marlborough.

II. 1715, July 28. James Cathcart to Lord Cathcart, at Ayr. The Pretender designs to come to Scotland, invited by a great number of people; the French seem resolved not to assist him openly.

This packet contains about 150 letters from James Cathcart to his brother Major Cathcart, and his father Lord Cathcart, at Ayr; many in 1709, 1714, 1715, and 1716; the earlier are from the army abroad, and of the others nearly all are from London, giving court news, accounts of proceedings in the two Houses of Parliament, and regimental and army news.

1716, March 16. The French are arming; why, is not known. Lord Bolingbroke is turned out of being Secretary of State to the Pretender; the Earl of Marr in his place. The Regent declares that he will keep the treaty, and if the Pretender comes into France, the King may seize and carry him off.

1709, Sept. 19, n.s., at Ghent. On the last of August the French made a march to attack the invesiers of Mons. The Duke of Marlborough came up at 5 o'clock; the armies cannonaded till dark; several attacks; Wednesday morning our army attacked them intrenched to the teeth, and were beat back. Prince Eugene and the Duke of Marlborough put themselves at the head of the troops, attacked a fourth time, and beat them to the devill all at once.

1713. June 3, Edinburgh. Monday was eight days the Duke of Argyle with the Earl of Marr in the name of the Scots Peers, and Carnewalh and Mr. Cockburn in the name of the Commons, went to the Queen and told Her they were willing to serve her as loyal subjects in a separate state; but impositions on the nation were so heavy they could no longer bear them; and asked leave to bring in a Bill to dissolve the Union. The Queen's reply.

1715, July 7. The articles of impeachment carried up to the Commons.

1715, August 28. The Pretender has left Bar le Duc, and it is not doubted he has landed in Scotland.

1715, Nov. 17. The meeting of Parliament. The King and the Prince of Wales. The Princess and two Princesses were there incog. The Tories had intended to make Sir Thomas Hanmer Speaker, but Mr. Compton was chosen without dispute.

1715, Nov. 24, Stirling. The rebels continue at Perth, endeavouring to make a second attack; expects every day to hear of the Dutch landing at Leith.

III. Letters of Charles, eighth Lord Cathcart, 1702–1740. Between 60 and 70 letters from Flanders (while he was with the army there) and elsewhere, giving accounts of military proceedings. There are a few letters addressed to him.

Six small volumes contain copies of general orders in 1707, 1708, and 1709.

Several smaller volumes contain copies of general orders in 1747.

Under the date 11th July 1708 is an account of the battle of Oudenarde.

Under the date of Sept. 1709 are accounts of preparations for, and general orders for the battle of Malplaquet.

Sixteen pocket books of diaries for 1709 and 1710, (in camp and in an embassy to Poland), 1714 (London), 1717–1721 (London); 1725–1736. Lord Cathcart was groom of the bedchamber to the Prince of Wales. These diaries contain entries of his visits, his dinners, his general doings, and Court news.

A folio of nine pages contains a journal of a ten days' journey, beginning 29th June 1722, by the Lord Cathcart and the Earl of Orkney. They started from Chiefden and went through Hampshire and Wiltshire. He describes Stanstead, near Portsemouth, the seat of the Earl of Scarborough; the avenue through the forest was three miles long. Winchester; the King's house, built for a hunting box by King Charles II., was left unfinished; the cathedral, Salisbury; describes the cathedral; saw the Bishop; describes Wilton, the seat of the Earl of Pembroke, &c.

Journals of Jane (Hamilton), wife of Charles, ninth Lord Cathcart, 1745–1771. These occupy 23 8vo. and 4to. volumes, and are written in French, and contain nothing of public interest.

Two 4to. volumes contain memoranda about Russia and her voyage to and residence at St. Petersburgh in 1769. These are in English.

A 4to. volume contains an account of a journey from St. Petersburgh in 1772.

Two other 4to. volumes contain memoranda in English made at St. Petersburgh in 1768 and 1769.

These memoranda by Lady Cathcart contain notices of the Empress of Russia; an account of a supper at the Hermitage; character of the Empress and the Russian women; notes of excursions, fairs, fêtes, Easter Sunday ceremonies; and of a conversation with the Archbishop and Bishops about schismatics. She says that a rouble (nominally worth 4s.) only went as far as one shilling in England.

1746. Engraved ticket signed by the Duke of Ancaster, the Great Chamberlain, for admission to the trials of the Lords Kilmarnock, Cromartie, and Balmerino.

1746, Aug. 21. Letter from Rachel Hamilton to her sister, giving an interesting account of the execution of the rebel Lords. She had the account from her brother, who had it from Lord Hume's brother. It contains nothing new.

Copies of the last speeches of Lords Derwentwater and Balmerino; and copy of a letter to the King asking for mercy for the three Lords.

1748, May 11. Letter by Lord Catheart giving an account of the battle of Fontenoy. Yesterday we attaqued the French, and after the most bloody engagement I believe ever happened we were obliged to quit the field with very great loss both of men and officers. . . . From 2 in the morning till 3 in the afternoon exposed to constant fire of cannon and well served artillerie, which flanked us from all quarters. His Royal Highness was always in the thickest of the fire. He (Lord C.) was struck by a shot which entered at his temples near his eye, came out at his cheek, and grazed on his nose without damaging the bone. This letter is in a bundle of letters addressed by Lord C. to his grandfather, Sir John Shaw, of Greenock, and others.

A bundle of letters to Lord Cathcart and his daughter Jane. In one, dated Mosco, 1771, is a notice of the plagne there. Persons went about in black robes and hoods with holes for the eyes, having pikes to drag the corpses for burial.

1771. Recipe against the plague, invented by the Commission at Mosco.

Many letters from Catherine, Duchess of Queensbury, between 1750 and 1760.

Two letters from William Beckford, at Fonthill, 1770, to Lady Cathcart, at St. Petersburg. In one he says that his son's fortune will be 40,000*l.* per annum, besides many thousands in cash. If he die under 21 it will go to the eldest natural son.

David Allan was a painter of repute; he was a protégé of the Cathcarts', and much assisted by them. A letter by him to Charles, ninth Lord C., dated Leghorn, Aug. 24, 1767, says that he left Gravesend on the 19th of June. On the 11th July, in the Mediterranean, their vessel was boarded by a Turkish xebec; one of their officers was sent on board, but only for information as to their enemies the Spaniards and French. David Allan stole a pencil sketch of him as he was leaving the ship. In quarantine for 17 days at Genoa; so the gentlemen passengers made him paint the Turk in oil on a piece of black marble in the Mole, on the wall. half lifesize; he painted him chained to the wall. Arrived at Genoa July 22, and at Leghorn August 23; he will immediately set out for Rome.

A letter from Sir William Hamilton, dated Rome, March 19, 1768, says that he has been with Lady Cathcart's little painter Allan, one of the greatest geniuses he ever met with; he was indefatigable.

Letters from Sir John Shaw of Greenock, M.P., to his wife.

1723, March 30. Yesterday were hot debates in our House, where we divided amongst ourselves, and the Torryes lay by; the question was whether we should [or should not] inflict pains and penalties on Harry [John?] Plunket. Mr. Walpole and his friends were for the first, and the other party were for the last, of a design to baffle him; but we carryed it in a division of 291 to 91.

1723, April 2, 11 o'clock. Just come from the House; have been there since 10 upon Kelly alias Johnston; the bill against him for pains and penalties will pass our House to-morrow, notwithstanding the birth-day; so he is like to be a jayl-bird for the rest of his tyme. We are to be on the Bishop [Atterbury] on Thursday, who probably will be banished. So soon as the bill has past our House we are to adjourn for 8 days.

1723, April 9. We are this day to try the Bishop, and I count we shall be done with him to-morrow, for we sit down sometimes at 9 o'clock in the morning and does not raise until 10 o'clock. We adjourn on Friday se'nnight for 10 days, being Easter holidays.

In one of his letters Sir John Shaw alludes to Col. Charteris having obtained pardon for a rape, notwithstanding an assurance given that the King's pardon should not be asked.

1722, Dec. 4. Letter to Lord Cathcart giving an account of night frolics with the Duke of Wharton. He and his friends were drunk, and adjourned to a committee of the whole House. "We met with the Duke " of Wharton, as well refreshed as I. He proposed to " survey all the ladies in the galleries; I was for turn- " ing them all up, but he declined. He proposed to " knock up Argyle; I proposed the King." They knocked up the Duke of Argyle, who received them well.

A letter dated Inverary, Oct. 30, 5 afternoon (no year) from Islay to Sir John Shaw, of Greenock, says: " Fanab (?) is with 400 men in Lorn, and was yesterday " morning within a few miles of Breadalbane's rogues. " I have got from Campbeltown 60 men well armed. " Sir Duncan governs in your absence. The town " people mounted guard the other night; on Tuesday " or Wednesday I shall order them to mount again."

Stirling, Dec. 11. The same to the same. Written with the left hand, he (Ilay) being wounded in the right hand.

1715, Oct. 30—Stirling. Copy of letter from the Duke of Argyle to the Magistrates of Glasgow. I am assured that the rebels are in motion towards the Forth; I am ready and shall not lose a moment's opportunity of attacking them. I have taken all the care for your town in writing to the Lieutenancy in the neighbourhood to bring in the Militia and Fencible men for your defense till I come neere to you. He says he expects the regiments from Ireland.

Several letters from Bointon of Airdock to Lady Shaw at Greenock.

1715, Oct. 31. News, true. This morning came in to the Duke of Argyle a trumpet from Marr, who is said to have letters with him to the Duke, which being told the Duke, his answer was that Marr acting in rebellion, he neither could nor would treat with him as a foreign prince. The Duke caused lay up the man in prison. (He gives the line of the rebels' march, and says that watch fires are seen.) We are told the clans are at Aberfoyl. Marr sent a letter to Capt. Robertson commanding a troop of Scotch dragoons at Stirling inviting him to come over, and, for reward, offered to make him colonel of horse; he told the Duke. The messenger (Mrs. Ruthven, aunt to the laird of Bannockbrae,) was imprisoned. We are to be ready to march at two hours' notice.

Nov. 12. The enemy is plundering. I hear they have got a ship into Dandee with arms.

Nov. 15—Stirling. On Sabath night Sir John having come to Striveling returned yesterday morning to the Duke at the town of Dunblane, where he kept that part of the army he brought off the action with what could be rallied at Striveling bridge with those who retired from the field; being resolved to see the enemy next morning. But having intelligence of their being gone the length of Ashton Ardock, marched the army in here with a great many prisoners, 13 stand of colours, and a standard. Some of the colours were my Lord Drummond's and the Earl of Seaforth's. The hors standard bears on it a castle, but is not known to whom it belongs; likewise three brass field pieces and other small guns not worth bringing. (A P.S. says that the horse standard was the Earl of Marshal's, thought to be mortally wounded.) Lord Forfar is here dangerously wounded in 17 places, a great many whereof he had given after he was made prisoner. There were two regiments only; if the five had been present the enemy would have been totally defeated.

1715, Nov. 21—Airdoch. Little news since the defeat of the rebels, both Scots and English, at Preston by Generals Wils and Carpenter, whereof I doubt not your Ladyship has accounts by this tyme as full as we. The latest advices from Marr's camp, both by speys and deserters, bring account that the most he hath with him at Parrth does not much exceed 3,000 futt and hors, at which place he has put each day 200 men to work for fortifying it, and has sent out parties to gather in the men who deserted him in battle. The Earl of Panmure is said to have died last Wednesday of his wounds.

1721. Letters from Charles Cathcart and from William Stewart (at London) about the best means for preventing Irish victuals from being run upon the Scotch coasts; think the best way will be for Sir John Shaw to be a Commissioner of Customs, and have the direction of the execution of the several powers vested by Acts of Parliament in officers of Custom and Excise.

1721, Nov. 25. Letter from G. Cook to Sir John Shaw. Lord Warwick is to succeed the unfortunate Lord Belhaven in the Prince's family, and Mr. Worsley (to succeed) as Governor of Barbadoes. (Lord Belhaven was accidentally drowned.)

1721. Charles Cathcart writes to Mr. Furlong, nursery-man on Stephen's Green, for a further supply of 30,000 thorns for quickset hedges from Dublin.

1721. Charles Cathcart writes to ask Lord Stair to use his influence with Walpole to manage Sir John Shaw's wishes. There is nothing Sir John would so much like as to restrain Irish importation.

1721, Nov. 1. Alexander Porterfield (in Limerick Gaol) writes to his brother William Porterfield, Esq., near Glasgow, that he went on Sunday to a house for a dram, where there was a scuffle, and he drew his sword in self-defence; a man was killed; there was an inquest; he was found guilty. Asks his brother to send him money or it will go hard with him.

A curious letter from Lady Shaw (about 1721) concerning the appointment of Peter Haldane to the Bench.

A bundle of letters from George Shaw, brother to Sir John Shaw of Greenock, 1702 and later.

1713, July 29—Edinburgh. Letter from David Dalrymple to Sir John Shaw, asking him to ask the Earl of Glencairn to look into family papers about Reformation affairs; as a work is in progress in which he wishes the Earl's family as well as the subject to shine.

Letters from Lady Shaw, wife of Sir John Shaw of Greenock. Iu one dated 17 Dec. 1714, she says that an express came yesterday to the Justice Clerk at Greenock to prosecute all the ministers that had not taken the oath. Lady Shaw's letters are very good.

Letters from Geo. Abercromby, 1736, &c., from Robert Dalrymple, 1737, &c., the Duke of Argyle, 1736, to Sir John Shaw.

1738, June 15—Edinburgh. Letter from Robert Dalrymple to Lady Shaw. Yesternight our magistrates gave a grand entertainment to Col. Warburton when they made him a burgess, but the Duke was not with them. They gave the Colonel the not very usual compliment of the Town Guard's firing at every health; he is a friend of his Grace.

1738—Edinburgh. Letter from Robert Dalrymple. Ross of Killiack and Ogilvie of Rothienay are both courting Miss Betty Dalrymple at the same time. I heard that Commissary Snollett's son was also making his addresses to her; but either of the two first have better estates, though it is said that the Baron by the influence of his man, Ja. Scot, is much inclined to favour Mr. Smollett's pretensions; but I much question if Miss favours him too; hitherto she seems to favour none.

1745, Dec. 27. Letter from John Buchanan (at Sauchy) to Lady Shaw. I wrote to your Ladyship by Wednesday's post, when I gave an account of the Highlander's demand of 10 bolls of meal and 60 loads of coall on Sir John, and on other gentlemen here. . . . They sent a party yesterday and carried off from here four horses and all the horse furniture about the house of Tullibodie. As I found no way to prevent the Highlanders from executing military execution, threatened in case of refusal, I thought it proper to send them their whole demand.

1744, Aug. 21. From London, about election of Peers for Scotland.

1745 (?), May 11—London. Acknowledges letters of the 6th and 13th, the last giving an account of the unhappy action near Tournay; is glad of the great glory H. R. H. the Duke of Cumberland has acquired by his personal bravery and all his conduct in that unhappy affair; gives notice that the Duke will soon receive reinforcements.

1745, December—London. Notices Lord C.'s intended march to Northampton; hopes that he will arrive before the rebels can undertake anything; a camp to be marked out to-morrow above Highgate; there are accounts of great preparations in France for invasion of this country; is persuaded it will come to nothing.

1745, Dec. 4—London. News that the rebels were making hot haste to get into North Wales. On this side we had a disposition at least to have been able to retard them till the Duke's arrival, in case they had given slip to H. R. H.'s army.

1745, Dec. 21—London. The nation has great obligations to the Duke of Cumberland who has pressed the rebels with so much vigour. Regrets that the Duke's career was stopped; no fault of his (Lord Stair's) that the Duke was restrained. On this side, we yesterday morning have taken and forced on shore several French transport ships set out from Dunkirk on their way to Calais and Boulogne to take in troops for the invasion of England. Mentions movements of troops to the Kentish coast for defence; wants news of the Duke's doings about Carlisle.

1745, Dec. 23—London. Acknowledges letters; the rebels are shut up in Carlisle; expresses obligations to the Duke; hopes he will not expose himself. Prussia has signed peace with the Queen of Hungary. Preparations by France for the invasion of England.

1745/6, Feb. 11—London. Has cough and cold; is very ill. No other man but the Duke could have forced the rebels to abandon Stirling Castle without a battle. The Duke has Hessian troops at his disposal. In a postscript he exculpates Lord Charles Elphinstone from being in correspondence with the rebels. (From another paper it appears that Lord C. E. was arrested for being drunk on parade, and drinking in some State prisoner's rooms.

Narrative of the battle of Culloden, April 16, 1745. Four pages, with plan on the third.

1746, April 16—London. Recommends the forts to secure the quiet of the Highlands to be put into a better state than Marshal Wade left them in.

1746, April 24—London. Thanks for news of the Duke's victory over the rebels; the King's joy. Advises that the King should have weight in the affairs of Europe; 50 battalions and 50 squadrons well employed can cast the balance which way his Majesty pleases.

1746, May 27—London. News that the young Pretender has gone; he gives joy of the rebellion being finished.

1746, June 17—London. Lauds the Duke of Cumberland for suppressing the rebellion. This morning a courier arrived at Mr. D. Wesaner's with copy of a letter from Prince Lieghtenstein to the Minister at the Hague, giving an account that at night between the 15th and 16th n. s. M. de Gagu joined by the French attacked the Austrian army investing Placienela; the attack lasted from 11 at night till 10 in the morning of the 16th, when the Spaniards were totally repulsed and the Austrians remained in possession of 3,000 prisoners, 30 colours and standards, and 10 pieces of cannon. The Austrians lost about 3,000 men. Gives his opinion of the political and military consequences of this affair, and his advice about our invasion of France. (3 sheets.)

1746, Nov. 29—Newliston. The Duke has appointed Lord Cathcart of his bedchamber. News of the Duke being about to go to Holland with troops against France.

1746, Dec. 19—Edinburgh. Is sick of Edinburgh; eating and drinking and no exercise; wants to get back to Newliston and rural affairs. . . The Duke is gone. Says he would accept assistance of the King of Prussia; it would be a good thing for him to get Silesia, and Austria might be indemnified.

1747, Jan. 17—Edinburgh. Comments on the military proceedings in Holland. Again advises an invasion of France; his plan for it.

1747, Jan. 22—Edinburgh. Short opinion on the war in Holland; thinks the French will not wait for an attack.

In this packet there is a letter dated at Edinburgh, 21 Jan. 1746, from William Cunningham to Lord Cathcart giving an account of the battle of Falkirk (four pages). And another account, undated, of the battle of Culloden.

1710, May 2 — Warsaw. Original passport by Augustus, King of Poland, to Lord Stair on his embassy to Poland.

Letters (17) from Lord Stair (at Paris in 1715–1716) to the Honourable Charles Cathcart (afterwards eighth Lord C.)

1716, April 22. Bolingbroke is entirely broke with the court of St. Germains; they call him traitor everywhere in the most cruel manner. He despises his last new master and comforts himself with his first love.

1716, July 10. The noble Duke of Leeds is gone today to Rouen in order to embark for England, to put some very wise project of his own contrivance into execution. The Pretender and his court have given in to it, and the party in England are ready to assist him. I fancy the design is upon Sheerness.—After some more about this expedition, Lord Stair adds that he thought it better to let him go than stop him.

1716, July 15. The Duke of Leeds is laid up. A hackney coach had like to have broke his leg tother night when he was got drunk. About the regency, he thinks that the Prince was right not to struggle about his powers; the less he (the Prince) affects to have, the more he will have in reality.

1716, Dec. 15—London. His going to Poland is again proposed; but nothing had been yet done for his extraordinary expenses for the last expedition.—In another part of the collection is an order signed Warwick, at Aberdeen, 27 March 1716, directing Francis Williamson, major in Lieut.-General Willis's regiment, commanding Her Majesty's forces at Aberdeen, to seize the Marquis of Huntly, Lord Kellow, Sir Thomas Calder, and Gulloch of Tanochy, and take them to Dundee and deliver them to the commanding officer there who will send them on. At the foot of this is an order in French by Charles Cathcart, colonel commandant, to receive the prisoners and take them to Edinborough Castle.

Many letters from Lord Stair to Lord Cathcart, dated from London, Edinburgh, and Culhorn in the years 1717, 1729, and 1730, and letters to which the year is not added. They treat of home and foreign affairs and his own rural doings.

Dec. 29, (no year). About his taking office: Sir Robert Walpole's kind behaviour. Against reduction of the army; it lessens our power; and in an emergency there is a great expense to get it up. His own expenses were great; the Paris expedition crippled him; he was obliged to sell his house in London and his plate. His views of the state of Europe.

1729, Dec. 8. Copy letter by Lord Stair to Sir Robert Walpole. The King has made him Admiral of Scotland. Lord Stair speaks well of the Duke of Marlborough.

LETTERS to Charles, ninth Lord Cathcart.

1740, Oct. 15. The Torbay at Spithead. His Majesty arrived safely, no matter when or whence. His first question was if we were sailed; this being answered in the negative prodnced a positive order to sail to-morrow. (They were ordered to the West Indies, but the real destination was Carthagena. Lord Cathcart was on board as commander-in-chief of the land forces. He died at Dominica. See Smollett's account of the expedition to Carthagena.)

1746, July 4—Edinburgh. Thomas Craigie asks Lord Cathcart's interest for the place of Professor of Mathematics, vacant by the death of Maclaurin. He says that he was one of the three whom Maclaurin, a little before his death, mentioned as most worthy to succeed him.

1752, June. Idée de la personne, de la manière et de la cour du roy de Prusse (four pages in writing of the 18th century). It describes the person of the King (he was 5 feet 2 inches in height), his dress and meals, the hours which he kept, his mode of transacting business, his mother, his wife and his children, and gives anecdotes of him. (The writer's name is not given; it does not seem intended as a memorandum for an ambassador.)

1759, Sept. 1—London. Letter from J. Smith (who had been aide-de-camp to Lord Geo. Sackville) to Lord Cathcart. The writer notices the affair of the 1st of August 1759 (the battle of Minden); says that Lord George had done nothing for him, therefore he is not to be suspected of being partial. Encloses a copy of Lord George Sackville's narrative which, he says, sticks closely to truth. Col. Ligonier and Col. Fitzroy had seen and approved it.

The narrative (3¼ leaves) gives Lord Geo. Sackville's account of the battle, and of the orders which he received and what he did. Ligonier brought the Duke's order that the whole cavalry should advance. Fitzroy brought the Duke's order that the British cavalry only should advance. Lord George hesitated for a few minutes.

Copy of Lord Chatham's plan for settling America and asserting the Sovereignty of Great Britain over her colonies; reduced into a bill; presented to the House of Lords; read a first time and rejected 1 Feb. 1775.

(The congress was to admit the sovereignty, and the King's right to keep standing armies in the colonies without their assent; and was to make a perpetual free gift of 300,000*l.* towards payment of the national debt, which sum was to be applied by Parliament. England was not to employ the forces contrary to law, or to levy taxes without the consent of the colonies. The judges were to be appointed quamdiu, &c.; charters were not to be revoked unless misused. All acts complained of were to be suspended at once, and repealed when America had done her part by her delegates in general congress.)

A letter states that news had arrived from America that a grand jury had presented the British Parliament as a nuisance.

A 4to. volume contains a journal of Col. Charles Cathcart in 1781. (He left England in the Pondicherry for India in that year.) He describes Johanna, one of the Comore islands, and his trips inland. Zeane is a lake where consecrated birds reside, whose sentiments are oracular and are interpreted by the priests. The town of Zamuda. King's town, description of the King; he governed 30,000 people. Anchored in Moribal bay on the coast of Arabia Felix; description of the people. Goes to Bombay and Ceylon; has a naval engagement with the French; touches at Madras; arrives at Calcutta.

Two volumes, the first of which contains a journal by Charles Cathcart during his voyage to, and while in India. It begins at Spithead 13 March 1781, and has notices of naval actions and of the proceedings of Tippoo Sahib. The second volume is occupied by official documents and letters in aid of the first volume.

There are a great many letters and papers connected with Charles Cathcart's employment in India. He was Lieut.-General of the King's troops there. He died in 1788 on his voyage to China.

1787, November 30. Appointment of Charles Cathcart to be ambassador to China. Secret instructions, and other papers on the matter.

Lady Archibald Hamilton was, as is well known, a great friend and adviser of Frederick, Prince of Wales; she superintended the nursery of the Prince's children. There are two folio volumes, shewing the receipts and expenses of this lady from 1736 to 1745, each page being signed by Augusta, the Princess; and another folio volume from 1737 shewing payment of bills; each quarterly account being signed by the Prince. There are other interesting volumes and papers relating to this lady during the time of her connexion with the royal family.

1745. Account of the battle of Preston (6 pp.).

1750, Dec. 27. Letter from Andrew Fletcher, of Saltoun to Lord Cathcart. Soon after the battle of Culloden when the naval squadron under the command of Commodore Smith, was by the Duke's command bound for Murray Frith for subduing the rebels, he advised Benjamin Moodie, a lieutenant in Col. Murray's regiment, to go along with Admiral Smith, and advised him to be recommended to the Duke as a fit person to clear the Orkneys, because of the differences between Murray and Sir James Stewart, of Burray, the chief of the rebels there, who was accessory to killing Moodie's father, which would sharpen Moodie's invention to get Sir James apprehended. Moodie did good service, and his house was ransacked and burnt by the rebels; recommends him for advancement.

1750. Letter in French from M. de St. George, congratulating Lord Cathcart on his appointment to be Adjutant General of Scotland.

1753, Oct. 4. Letter by Lord Cathcart. Again with Mr. Reynolds [afterwards Sir Joshua], and was disagreeably surprised with the figure; after some reasoning he came to be of opinion that it would not do. I breakfasted with him, and stood to him a good while. I thought it was much improved, and he was extremely satisfied 1795. Letters about the expedition to Bremen. Two 4to. cases full of letters from Lord Cathcart to his wife, being in fact a journal. He wrote every two or three days, giving minute accounts of the military proceedings.

1798, Oct. 25—Downing Street. A letter from Naples of the 18th Sept. says that the whole of the French force, 2,000 in number, are shut up in Valetta and St. Elmo besieged by the inhabitants; those in Valetta twice offered to capitulate, but their offers were refused, they were to surrender at discretion. The French were in want of provisions, and the water was cut off from Valetta.

Copy of a draft of a will of Mary Queen of Scots in Nau's hand.

A paper folio, 14 pp., the Réveur. Edinburgh, Friday, 20 January 1738. (An address to the King or the Prince.)

1718, August 26. Relation de ce que s'est passé au Palais des Tuileries hier vendredy, 26 Août 1718. (About the Duc du Maine and the Comte de Toulouse.)

A folio volume is labelled "Major General Clark's" account of Rochefort expedition." It contains an account of the naval expedition to St. Hellier by Sir John Mordaunt, 8 Sept 1757; orders by Sir Edward Hawke, Admiral of the Blue; copy of letter by Col. Robert Clerk to Pitt, Earl of Chatham, applying for employment; Chatham's autograph reply (1766) refers him to Lord Granby; Observations sur l'état actuel de l'infanterie Française. At the other end of the volume are,—copy of letter by Clerk, July 1757, to Sir John Ligonier about Rochefort; a paper in French on 10-inch bombs (1 page); Clerk's account of experiments in 1769 (a rifle could be got at Coblentz for 2 guineas); copies of letters by Clerk to Lord Shelburne in 1766 on American affairs; to Lord North in 1779 on the projected alliance with Prussia; and to Lord Macartney at Madras 1784, about Indian affairs.

A folio volume contains "Journal de l'expédition "contre Quebec, 1759" (344 pp.); it extends from the 1st of May to the 16th of May. At the other end of the volume is "Journal du siége de Bergenopsoom. (M. de "Lowendalk was in command of the attack, and he was "opposed by M. le Prince de Saxe Hilbourghausen)."

A folio volume contains "Journal du siége de "Schwerdnitz par M. de Tribeauval, Major Général "dans le service de l'Impératrice de Hongrie à ce "siége, et il a été fait Lieut.-Général après le siége et "à present (1767) est Lieut.-Général dans le service de "France, &c." The siege was by the troops of the King of Prussia, under the orders of M. Tavengier during the first seven weeks, and by the King in person during the last 15 days. The place was defended by the Comte de Guasco, Lieut.-Général of the Imperial and Royal troops. This occupies 153 pages. In the same volume is another account, also in French, sent to the Court of Vienna by Count Guasco. This occupies 47 pages.

A folio volume, date about 1700, contains a list, by regiments, of the troops, cavalry and infantry, of the King's German Soldiers, with the names of the officers at various times, from 1670, posted up to 1759. It has large, well-drawn, and well-coloured figures of horse and foot for each regiment, showing costume and equipments.

Lord Cathcart freely imparted his full knowledge of the various portions of his large collections, and thus completed the pleasure of my visit to his Lordship, to whose hospitality and courtesy I am so much indebted, and which I beg to be allowed gratefully to acknowledge.

ALFRED J. HORWOOD.

THE MANUSCRIPTS OF THE RIGHT HONOURABLE THE EARL OF BRADFORD, BELGRAVE SQUARE.

This collection consists exclusively of the correspondence of Lord Torrington, while he was ambassador at Brussels.

The correspondence ranges from 1782 to 1792, and is contained in 14 folio volumes.

1. Copies of letters from Lord Torrington and to him while he was ambassador at Brussels. The volume commences with a short narrative by himself (4¼ pages) of his undertaking office on 31st July 1782; it ends in 1786. Then begin the letters; the first is dated 2nd August 1782, from Brussels. They are chiefly between Lord Torrington, and Lord Grantham, C. J. Fox, Lord Temple, and Lord Carmarthen.

2. This volume begins on 27th January 1784. In a letter dated 7th April 1784, addressed to Lord Carmarthen, Lord Torrington explains the way in which, by means of letters addressed to persons with feigned names, he gets information. Some were in cypher.

3. The volume begins 9th August, and ends 31st December 1784. It contains a copy of the secret articles between France and the States General.

4. The letters here are from 1st January 1785 to 10th February 1786.

5. From 17th February 1786 to 5th June 1792. In one addressed by Lord Carmarthen to Lord Torrington he sends from Whitehall a description of the flying weavil and Hessian fly; and says that the former were very destructive in France 25 years ago, and that the latter lately caused such ravages in the United States that the King prohibited the importation of wheat.

On the 11th November 1788 Lord Carmarthen tells him that the King had been indisposed for more than three weeks past; he did not mention it before, because he thought it would not be of long continuance. On the 21st of the same month he says that the King could not prorogue or even issue his commands. On this subject Lord Torrington seems to have written a letter to some person, in which he said that all hopes of the King's recovery were at an end, and that the symptoms which threatened insanity were converted into a decided state of idiotism. On hearing this Lord Carmarthen, on the 24th February 1789, wrote a "secret and separate" note, scolding Lord Torrington. On 6th March Lord Torrington made reply, explaining the circumstances under which the above expressions were used.

6. The sixth volume is labelled Papers of Intelligence, vol. 1. 1st January 1787 to 13th June 1788.

7. This is labelled Papers of Intelligence, vol. 2. 17th January 1788 to 24th October 1788.

8. This is labelled Papers of Intelligence, vol. 3. 25th October 1788 to 27th March 1789.

9. This is labelled Papers of Intelligence, vol. 4. 31st March 1789 to 4th September 1789.

10. This is labelled Papers of Intelligence, vol. 5. 8th September 1789 to 27th October 1789. Only 130 pages are filled.

These 5 volumes contain copies of letters from various correspondents in different parts of Europe. All are in French, and are dated from Brussels; the writer or writers from Brussels give copies of letters from persons at other places. None are signed. In the fifth is an account of the siege of Belgrade.

11. This is labelled vol. 1, Private Official Correspondence. From 9th August 1782 to 13th March 1785; with a table at the beginning in alphabetical order. These are letters from all sorts of people, English and foreign; some from the Imperial minister at Brussels, Lord Carmarthen, and English ministers at home and at foreign Courts.

12. This is vol. 2 of the Private Official Correspondence. From 8th April 1785 to 24th November 1787. On the 10th March 1786, Wedgwood writes to Lord Torrington, sending a set of cameo buttons (only the Prince of Wales had another set), and asks him to introduce them, and, if a good sale is likely, to recommend him a good house as agents. To this volume is a table and short statement of the contents of the letters.

13. This is vol. 3 of Private Official Correspondence. From 29th November 1787 to 21st July 1789.

14. Memoranda and transactions at the Court of Brussels, from 21st August 1782. It contains copies of letters (all in French) and of memorials to and by our Government on divers private official matters, that is, matters affecting individuals.

15. This is labelled Index Volume. It contains précis of the official letters. 1782 to 1788.

Besides the 15 folio volumes there are two quarto volumes, labelled Notes of what passed in the Austrian Netherlands in 1787, copied from the original letters of Lord Viscount Torrington, and, copied in 1788 from the original letters to Lord Torrington, to his two eldest daughters, and Lord J. Russell, a Nice, Montpelier, Baqueres, Bourdeaux, and Paris in 1787. Only about 10 pages of the second volume are filled up.

In addition there are a folio and quarto volumes containing a register of all the letters, with the names of the writers in alphabetical order, stating the dates, names, and subject, and what course was taken thereon.

GENEALOGICAL MSS. DEPOSITED BY THE RIGHT HONOURABLE THE EARL OF CAWDOR IN THE PUBLIC RECORD OFFICE.

These volumes are four in number, three of them containing the genealogies, and the fourth containing two indices.

The first volume is lettered A—C, the second is lettered D—I, and the third is lettered K—N. These letters indicate the books contained in the three volumes. The indices in the fourth volume contain an alphabetical list of all the names in the three volumes, showing that a particular name occurs at a certain page of the book bearing the letter A, or any other letter up to N.

The books are lettered A, B, C, D, G, I, K, L, M, and N.

Each of the books is separately paged, but there is a red ink pagination for the entire series, 1–2103.

On a page at the commencement of each of the books A, B, D, G, I, and K is a short statement of its contents.

All the genealogies are Welsh; C relates entirely to Glamorganshire families.

Each of the books, A and B, is divided into two parts; the first relating to native families, the second to Adventa, or Adventurers, as the books call them. In A are the Advenæ of Carmarthenshire; in B are the Advenæ of Pembrokeshire. G consists of the Advenæ of the shires of Glamorgan, Brecon, Monmouth, Radnor, Cardigan, Hereford, Carmarthen, and Pembroke. I contains pedigrees for Denbigh, Carnarvon, Anglesea, and Merioneth.

There are in the pedigrees various cross references, so that the ramifications from matches can be traced.

Generally, the armorial bearings are blazoned at the head of each genealogy.

Throughout the volumes, dates or references to Kings' reigns rarely occur.

No authorities are given, except that at p. 1. of vol. 1. is a list of abbreviations of the names of the heralds and genealogists referred to in the book. These are 30 in number; a few others are left unexplained.

Each leaf of the books A, B, G, and L is marked at the bottom "examined."

At the bottom of the recto of the leaf preceding p. 1. of vol. 1. is the note "Carmarthen, 20 July 1765, E.E." At the top of p. 1372 (the last written page of vol. 2) the compiler or examiner has written "ended 20 Nov. "1760."

These volumes are known as the Golden Grove Book. They were compiled in the early part of the 18th century by Hugh Thomas, deputy to Garter King-at-Arms in 1705.

The notes by a later hand in these volumes are believed to be by Thoophilus Jones, the historian of Brecknockshire, with whom the volumes were allowed to remain for several years. The additions are chiefly, if not entirely, from Edmondson's work on heraldry; but some are from the writer's own information.

ALFRED J. HORWOOD.

THE MANUSCRIPTS OF THE RIGHT HONOURABLE VISCOUNT DILLON, DITCHLEY, CO. OXFORD.

Some interesting manuscripts, though few in number, are preserved at Dytchley.

A large folio volume, vellum, written at the end of the 14th century, contains Wiclif's translation of the Gospels of St. Matthew and St. Mark with commentaries in English. Mr. Macray of Oxford has placed a note in the volume, and I cannot do better than adopt his account. He says that the version of the Gospels is the earlier of the two Wiclifite versions issued about 1380. In some verses, however, it has words which occur in the later version. The commentary is of peculiar interest and value. That on Matthew is in other MSS., but this copy has the peculiar interest of having the insertion of several passages of considerable length from the Sermons of Grostête condemning the abuses of the Papal system, which, as far as Mr. Macray is aware, are not found in other copies. The commentary on St. Mark appears to be unknown; it is not mentioned in Mr. Shirley's list of Wiclif's works.

It has a request to "pray for the soule of Master "John Crowland felowe of the Quene's College of Cam- "brigge, and Parson of South Wokyngton in Essex, "gyver of this boke," and a Latin memorandum that Master Geoffrey Downes desired that after the death of James Downes, the volume should be given to the Chapel of Pottiford, Co. Salop. At the beginning and end of the volume is a request to pray for the soul of Hugh Blyth.

A small folio, vellum, written about A.D. 1400, Wiclif's translation of the New Testament. The prologue begins "Mathew of Jewerie born, as he is putt "first in order," &c., and ends "worthy to be under- "stonden." It is in very beautiful English binding of the early part of the 17th century and has the initials R.S.

A 4to. volume, paper, end of 16th century. "The "discovery and recovery of Ireland with the author's "apology." This was written by Thomas Lee, an account of whose trial and execution in 1600 is found in the State trials. The work occupies about 180 leaves, and treats of the then state of Ireland. It begins "Before I shall enter into this discourse, Right Honour- "able" . . . . .

A 4to. volume, paper, 16th century. Begins "I do "here present the notes of the maner and fashion of "levyinge of armes in this our nation of England." On the fifth leaf, All the names of all the officers; the duties of the different officers. Instructions by me A.B. Admiral of the fleet. The work occupies about 50 pages. The prologue states that the author wrote it after long peace; that whenever he executed an office he noted the particulars of it, and gave it to Sir Oswald Wolsthorpe at such time as he (the writer) was Captain of Roxborough in Scotland.

"Brian Leaselles 1588" is written on the flyleaf.

A 4to. volume, paper, 16th century. History by Cælius Secundus of the wars of Malta (60 leaves). Begins "Those which doe complaine." At the end is a copy of a letter, dated Malta, 9th Oct. 1565 from Fr. John Valeto of the hospital at Hierusalem to the Rev. &c. George of Hohenheim called Bombaste, prior of our priory in Almain.

Leicester's Commonwealth, 4to., 17th century, imperfect at the beginning. (This tract has been printed.)

The statutes of the order of the Garter on vellum, written for Sir Henry Lee, knight, of Dytchley.

A small folio volume of prayers in Latin and English, the latter being at the end of the volume. The MS. is on vellum, and of the 15th century, and contains some pictures and illuminated letters. It seems to have been executed for one of the Beaufort family.

Sir Edwin Sandys' relation of the state of religion in several parts of the western world. A 4to. volume of about 80 leaves in writing of the 17th century. (This work has been printed in English, and also in French and Italian translations.)

A 4to. volume containing an account of the establishment for Ireland in 1709. The courts and their officers, &c., &c.

A 12mo. volume, paper, 17th century, contains catalogue of marshals. The ordering and placing of all estates according to their degrees (from a Duke downwards). Order and manner of apparel for mourners. Ordinances of John Tiptoft, Earl of Worcester and Constable of England, dated Windsor 24 May, 6 Ed. 4. List of Peers in order, 1577. Proceedings at the funeral of a knight in London. Allowances of servants and blacks at the funeral of Mary, Queen of Scots, Tuesday, 1 Aug. 1587 (on 8 Feb.). The marshalling of the King's attendance when he rode to St. Paul's Church, the 28 March 1629, as it was entered and set down by the Earl Marshal and Heralds.

There are court rolls for the Manor of Spellysbury, of the times of Henry VII., and Henry VIII., and Elizabeth.

LETTERS.

There are several volumes containing letters and papers, by and to members of the families of Lee and Dillon.

Sir Henry Lee, by a letter to the Lord Treasurer in Nov. 158–, mentions disorders in the affairs of the army since the death of Sir Geo. Howard.

Copy of a return made of "the several parcels of arms "that were found in the several armories hereafter "following after the death of Mr. John Lee, which were "numbered the 4th, 5th, and 6th days of Jan. 1603, and "committed to the charge of John Cowper by Sir Henry "Lee, K.G., Master of His Highness's armories:—

with wear in the old hall:—At Woodstock as in the former remain:—At Woolwich as in the former remain. The document was signed by S. Benion, J. Cowper, H. Lee, and . . . Symondes.

Many of the letters are from King Charles II. to his daughter the Countess of Lichfield, and from the Duke of York, afterwards James II., to the same lady, who was a great favourite with her father and uncle. These letters are not of political or historical value, but, nevertheless, they contain some very curious and characteristic remarks. Horse-racing was one of Charles's many amusements, and as his visits to Newmarket were frequent, it is not surprising to read in a letter, dated Whitehall, Oct. 22 (no year), that he has been to Newmarket and has much business now.

At Winchester (5 Sept.) Charles tells his daughter that her brother was there, and would go in a few days to see Holland, and by the time he returned would have worn out in some measure the redness of his face, so as not to fright the most part of the ladies; that his face was not changed, though he would be marked very much. He says that he will give orders for the 200*l.* for her buildings; the reason she has not had it before is "the change he has made in the Treasury, which now "in a little time will be settled."

James, Duke of York, in a letter dated London Dec. 4 (not addressed, but most likely to his niece), says that by the Duke of Monmouth being come back he had much business. "As for news, Col. Alg. Sidney is to "be beheaded on Tower Hill on Friday. Sure this "bad weather will drive you out of the country."

In a letter from Edinburgh, in December, the Duke tells his niece that the Duchess had had a great fall, that she could not move although she was better, and in another dated Edinburgh Jan. 11, the Duke tells his niece "the Duchess plays often at bassett, my daughter "dances country dances, which the Duchess cannot yet "do, her leg not being quite well enough for that."

From Edinburgh on the 19 Feb., the Duke writes to his niece: "The letters of this day brought the news of "Tom Thynne having been assassinated, and how ready "some people are to lay it on the poor Catholics, and "'tis well the murderers were soon found out. We "have plays twice a week here in this house, the "Duchess not caring to stir out. When Lent comes we "shall have no more plays, so that bassett will be the "chief diversion within doors."

From [Edinburgh] June 6, he tells her "things are "very quiet and like to continue so, for here false "witnesses dare not come, perjury being death; if it "had been so in England, so many innocent people in "England had not suffered." [Here perhaps he alludes to Oates's plot.]

From Edinburgh on the 18 July [1681] he tells her that his daughter arrived yesterday. "This town be-"gins to fill with company again, the meeting of Par-"liament being to be soon, which I am confident will "behave themselves better than those of late have done "in England. Cargill the great covenanting field "preacher is taken, he has been once examined before "the council and will be again to morow, after which "he will be soon tried, and I believe condemned." [Cargill was executed on the 26 July 1681.]

From Edinburgh on the 25 of August, he writes that he is busy by reason of the sitting of Parliament. Although not so troublesome as the English ones of late, yet it takes up all one's time.

And from Edinburgh, January 31 (no year) he writes that there is no Morocco or Russian Ambassador to divert them, nor, God be thanked, such disorderly young men as Mr. Harry Wharton to disturb the play-houses or kill horses. He plays at Goffe. They have plays, bassett, and billards.

From Windsor, April 29, he writes to her that he is about to go to Scotland on Wednesday, by a ship from Portsmouth.

From Edinburgh, May 9, he tells her of his safe arrival, though the frigate in which he was, was lost on a sand call the Lemmon. He and most of the people of quality got off, but Lord Roxborow, Lord O'Brian, and two or three gentlemen were drowned, and many of his under-servants, but this accident has not discouraged the Duchess from going by sea. Hopes to set out hence on Monday next [for Windsor].

On June 21 he dates from Windsor.

Newmarket, March 22. The Duke to his niece. Was fox hunting yesterday. Very little company till the last day or two. The Duchess and his daughter had been twice to see the cock-fighting. Her Majesty had not yet played at bassets, which made the drawing room very dull. The Duchess played.

Newmarket, March 13. Cock-fighting; that for the most part we have twice a day. Had been fox-hunting thrice; good sport; tomorrow he is to go to it again. The Duchess of Portsmouth not well; was let blood. His Majesty says he will go to Euston, but has not yet named his day.

St. James, 2 July. Is travelling about with the King: his Majesty will not stay here longer than Wednesday next; and till then he will stay, being the day for the election of Sheriff.

Windsor, 9 August. "It is charitable of you to "write so in favour of old Col. Legge as you have "done. I immediately went and spoke to His Majesty "in his favour, and sent to Lord Clarendon whose gift "it seems it is, who tho' he had an engagement upon "him, for an old servant of the family, will see what "he can do to let Jack Legge have it."

Windsor, August 15. Bassett almost every night at the Queen's and Duchess's. Crimp at the Duchess of Portsmouth's. The King hunted on Monday in Cranbourne.

Windsor, 25 August. The Duchess likes hunting; stays with his daughter this day to see the fair.

London, August 28. Lady Henrietta Berkeley has run away from her father; not known whither or with whom. A report that she has drowned herself, but he can't believe she has such a temper.

From London, Sept. 27. He says that he cannot say when the King goes to Newmarket; that depends on the affair of the City Charter which will be ended one way or another by Wednesday next.

1682, Sept. 29—London. Affairs have gone well in the city yesterday, where the two loyal sheriffs, North and Rich, were sworn; great satisfaction to the Whigs.

Newmarket, 8 October. Horse races; the horses and their doings. It rained every day, so that the King could not hawk. The Duchess of Portsmouth was ill of the colick yesterday.

St. James, Oct. 28. "At last the two combatants "that had such long swords this summer, I mean "Prince Philip and Bannier, have fought; the last is "run into the thy; I do not hear he is in danger. P.S. "I am just now told that Bannier is dead."

1682, Nov. 26. Edinburgh is not so dull as she thinks; they have plays and bassett.

1683, July 19—London. Thanks God for a great discovery of the horrid conspiracy; and some of them, as she knows, are condemned and will be executed. The Prince of Denmark is come into the river and will be here, he believes, this evening.

1688, June 10. Original council letter, signed by Lord Chancellor Jeffries and many others, to the Earl of Lichfield, announcing the birth of a son to the King and Queen.

1688, December 29. A printed paper signed by the Prince of Orange asking the Earl of Lichfield to sit in the Convention Parliament.

The Dillon Papers.

The Dillons remained faithful to the Stuarts, and entered the service of the King of France.

1706, Sept. 24—Marly. Chamillard (Ministre d'état) notifies that the King (Louis XIV) has made Dillon a Lieut.-General for his conduct in the battle of Castiglione.

A letter from the Maréchal duc de Villars giving Dillon orders of march.

1707, Aug. 23. Chamillard (ministre d'état) thanks Dillon for his good service in the attack on the heights of Croisfaron and St. Catherine.

In 1709 the King of France by letter to the Duke of Berwick, thanked Dillon for his military services.

Down to 1713 are a good many letters and copies of letters relating to the military operations by France, by Voysin, the Duke of Berwick, and copies of letters by Dillon to the Count de Médars, M. de Broglie, M. d'Angevilliers, the Duke of Berwick, Lieut.-Gen. Richard Hamilton, and Voysin. Those from Dillon in 1711 and 1712 are mostly dated from Briançon.

In 1713 Dillon writes to Madame de Maintenon that peace is coming, and he asks for a place.

In 1725 the Duc de Bourbon tells Dillon that he is glad to hear of the exertions of M. de Saules for the reunion of the two crowns [France and Spain].—There are several letters by the Duke on this subject.

1768, April 8. Lord Bute to Lord Dillon. An interesting letter of three pages, in strong terms. He protests that he only resigned office from bad health; he begs Lord Dillon not to resign.

The Dillons were accustomed to write to their exiled Prince on New Year's day. At Dytchley are many letters from James and his Princess Clementine returning thanks. A number of these are of the years 1726, 1733, 1736, 1739, 1744, and 1745.

In 1733 General Dillon died, and on the 4th of March 1733 James writes asking that such of the general's papers as related to Him might be at his disposal; and desires that they may be put up in the presence of Mr. Dicconson, and then be sent to the Scots' College at Paris, there to remain at his disposal.

On the 22d of March 1733, W. Dicconson gives a receipt to Mrs. Dillon for two packets of papers, one of which was superscribed, "Lettres du Roy d'Angleterre à "Monsieur Dillon," and the other was superscribed, "Five packets of papers from the king of England." An indorsement says, "Received from the executors of "G. Dillon, to be deposited in the Scotch College."

On the 15th of April 1733 James (at Rome) thanks Mrs. Dillon for having delivered so speedily to Mr. Dicconson the papers which related to Him.

In 1733 is a letter from Sarah, Duchess of Marlborough, but is only on family affairs.

In 1736 is a letter from Prince Charles.

Dillon's regiment was famous in the French service. Striking passages of history have been recorded on silk, and a good many pages of this kind may be seen in St Paul's Cathedral, and at Greenwich and Chelsea. There is one leaf of it at Dytchley which makes the blood of him who seeth it to tingle; it is the banner "pierced by the lances, and torn by the shot" borne by Dillon's regiment at the battle of Fontenoy.

Lord Dillon placed no limitation on the examination of his collection; and his Lordship's hospitality is not the least of the pleasant memories of Dytchley which his kind invitation enabled me to bear away.

ALFRED J. HORWOOD.

A MANUSCRIPT IN THE LIBRARY OF THE RIGHT HONOURABLE LORD CAMOYS.

The library of Lord Camoys at Stonor Park, Henley-on-Thames (besides several volumes of a devotional and controversial nature) contains one manuscript which is worthy of especial notice. His Lordship having kindly permitted it to be inspected, the following notes have been made for the purpose of the Commission.

This MS., a noble folio volume upon vellum, in the original oaken boards, is of the early part of the 15th century. Unfortunately it is imperfect at the beginning, all being lost prior to the 21st chapter of the first book. The mutilation, however, is as early as the reign of Henry VIII., the signature A. 1 at the bottom of folio 1 being written by a hand at least as old as that period. Of its history previous to its acquisition by the family of Lord Camoys nothing is known beyond the fact that in the year 1674 it was in the possession of John Butler, whose name occurs on several of the margins.

The first treatise is apparently "The Ladder of Perfection; or, a Treatise upon the Contemplative Life." As already mentioned, it is imperfect at the beginning, several chapters having been lost from the MS.

The 21st chapter of book I. begins thus: "The secund "ping whiche þe behovep to have." Book I. ends with these words: "but to þe or to anoþer whiche haþ state "of lyf contemplatyf, þe grace of our Lord Ihu. be wt "þe. Amen."

Book II. begins: "Qui timetis . . . þat is, ȝe þt "dredyn God hope smale and grete."

The second treatise professes to be a translation into English, by Walter Hilton, of a treatise by St. Bonaventura, entitled Stimulus Amoris.* It must be observed, however, that the version here given does not correspond with the original which it cites; and further, that no such version occurs among the writings of Hilton as recorded by Bishop Tanner in his list of the works of that author. (See, however, upon this subject the remarks of Warton in his History of English Poetry, vol. ii. p. 99, edit. 1824.)

"Iste liber sequens primo fuit compositus in Latino "sermone per quendam Fratrem Minorem, cardinalem, "nobilem doctorem, Bonaventuram nomine. Postea "translatus est in linguam Anglicanam pro Minoribus "Latinum non intelligentibus per quendam canonicum, "Walterum Hilton nomine, in amore Dei valde "devotum."

The first chapter (which treats "How a man schal "have Cristis Passyone in mynde") begins, "Forwondred "of oure selfe oughte us to ben." And it concludes with these words, "And so mote our tretys endyn in "prisyng of God, so þat alle blissed spiritys mote prisyn "onre Lord in þe blisse of heveue. Amen."

"Here endiþ þe tretys þat is called Prickyng of Love, "maad by a Frere Mencure, a cardinal of the court of "Rome; Bonaventure he his name."

A treatise upon the Love of God.

The titles to the following treatise, prefixed to which is the following rubric: "þis schort pistil þat folwep "is devyded in sundrie maneris, eche matere be hymself "in titlys as þis kalendere makiþ mencioun." "In þe "begynnyng and endyng of alle goode werkys, worschepe, "and þankyng."

It ends with these words: "On þis maner mayst þ" "kepe þe and þi fyve wittys fro synne, and oeupie þe "in þe servyse of God; and þerto God ȝive þe grace. "Amen."

"Explicit tractatus qui vocatur Amor Dei."

A poem, in English, by Richard Hampole, called the "Pricke of Conscience,"* upon the religious life, "what is to be believed, what practised, &c.

The poem at present consists of only 13 leaves. It begins thus:—

"Þe miȝt of þ" Fadre Almiȝty,
"Þe wisdom of þe Son Alwitty,
"Þe grace of þe Holy Gost,
"A God and Lord, of mi3tes most."

In the course of the exhortation the author inveighs in the following terms upon the degenerate taste and growing indifference of the age in which he lived:—

"Man is now more lef to here
"Of Rowland and of Olyvere,
"And of Alexandyr þe conquerowr,
"And of Julius Cesar þe emperowr,
"And of Sir Gy of Warwike,
"And of vanitees þ" þam wil like,
"And of rymes, japes, and oþer folyes
"þat turnen vertu in to vices,
"þan þai have for to lere here
"Of Holy Writt in bokes sere."

The poem ends twenty lines from the beginning of the chapter which comments upon the words, "Et iden "ambulate dum lucem habetis." The concluding couplet is the following:—

"þat bene ifounde in syn,
"þ" wold nou3t hem self do."

Lord Camoys authorises me to state that he will permit this manuscript to be examined under such conditions as he may consider consistent with its safety.

JOSEPH STEVENSON.

THE MANUSCRIPTS OF THE RIGHT HONOURABLE THE LORD ARUNDELL OF WARDOUR, AT WARDOUR CASTLE.

By the liberality of Lord Arundell of Wardour, I have had the privilege of examining at my leisure the vast collection of early Charters, Papers, and Manuscripts belonging to his Lordship, which are now deposited in the Muniment Room at Wardour Castle.

The collection is both extensive and important, and will probably require a more minute examination at some subsequent period than I thought myself justified in bestowing upon it during my recent visit. I am permitted by his Lordship to state that, under due restrictions, he will afford the Commissioners for the investigation of Historical MSS., every facility towards a more detailed inspection of his collections.

The Charters, Rolls, and Papers are at present deposited in eighteen boxes, in seven presses, and in various drawers. These are filled to overflowing with documents of all dates, from the twelfth century to a comparatively recent period. Many of the later papers relate to transactions of a purely family character, and consequently do not come within the scope of the present inquiry. The remainder may be conveniently arranged under the following classification:—

ANCIENT MANUSCRIPTS IN VOLUMES.

1. A magnificent copy of the Latin Psalter, in folio, upon vellum, written in the 13th century, ornamented with six illuminations, each of the full size of the page.

* Printed in the works of that writer, tom. vii. pars. iij. p. 206. Edit. Rom., 1596.

* See Tanner's Bibl. p. 375, col. 1.

Digitized by Google

The initial letter B, with which the first Psalm begins ("Beatus Vir "), corresponds in size and beauty with these illuminations, occupying an entire page. Besides these, there are nine illuminated letters, each filling one-third of a page. No tradition exists as to the manner in which this remarkable volume came into the possession of the family of Arundell.

2. Fragments of a Latin Bible, in folio, upon vellum, of the 12th century, which when complete must have been a very sumptuous volume. The beginning of the Old Testament and the end of the New alone remain.

3. A large volume in folio, upon vellum, of the 15th century, formerly belonging to a Canon of St. Stephen's, Westminster, whose name, however, has been carefully erased. It consists of the Sermons of Henry Herp upon the Ten Commandments.

4. A thick folio, also upon vellum, written in the 14th century, imperfect at beginning and end, containing a commentary upon the Gospel of St. John.

5. The Hours of the Blessed Virgin Mary, with five illuminations, of the 16th century. It contains a Litany, in which occur the names of many Saxon Saints. Here also are entered various memoranda connected with the families of Heneage of Houghton, Thimelby of Irnham, and Billersby of Billersby, all within the county of Lincoln.

Besides these, the library contains several manuscript copies of the Psalter, the office of the Blessed Virgin Mary, and other books of devotion, written in the 15th and 16th centuries.

Ancient original Charters and Rolls.

These form the most prominent portion of the Wardour collection, and amount probably to 8,000 or 10,000 separate documents. They relate chiefly to lands within the county of Cornwall, and to personages connected therewith; the series, however, embraces localities within several of the neighbouring counties. I have attempted to form an alphabetical list of the principal manors and lands to which these charters refer; specifying also the period at which (as far as it was possible to ascertain during a hasty inspection) each sub-division commences. This list is appended to the present Report.

Running parallel with these charters is a very large collection of Court Rolls, Rentals, Surveys, and other rolls connected with the localities indicated in the charters mentioned above. These rolls extend from about the reign of Richard II. to that of Henry VIII. The series is too bulky to be dealt with as it deserves in a preliminary inspection, and it is desirable that it should be examined more carefully hereafter. It is probable that interspersed with it will be found documents possessing more than a mere local interest. In the course of a hasty survey the following articles were noticed:—

Household Roll of the expenses of the family of Dyneham, from 41 Edward III.

Similar rolls, with notices of journies to London and Oxford, 3, 4, 6, 8, and 9 Richard II.

Bill for provisions supplied in London for one of the family of Dyneham, in 1382.

A parchment roll, without date, containing an account, day by day, of the expenses incurred by Sir John Dyneham while on his way from Hurland, co. Devon, to Harblington, co. Hants.

Mercers bill for the same Sir John Dynebam. No date.

Expenses of the same, at Christmas 1381, on going to London to be present at the marriage of King Richard II.

Tailor's bill for the same person on the same occasion.

Roll of expenses of John de Dyneham, the younger, going to London from Brightley on the marriage of King Richard II.

Subsidiary bills of parcels connected with the same accounts.

Inventory of arrows and other articles connected with archery, delivered by Sir John Dyneham to his servant William Mytchell, 25 March, 10 Hen. V.

Expenses of John Rolle, Esq., steward to Lord Dyneham, on his journeys to and from London, 2 Hen. IV. A roll of vellum.

A large collection of charters and other ancient documents ranging from the twelfth century to the period of the Dissolution, connected with the monastery of Tywardreth. Among these occurs a charter dated 25th May, 21 Hen. VIII., appended to which is an impression of the seal representing the Laocoon, (discovered by Sir Edward Smirke), which has excited so much interest in the antiquarian world. See Oliver's Supplement to his History of the Diocese of Exeter, and more especially "The Archæological Journal," for 1867, No. 93, p. 46, where will be found an Essay by the Rev. C. W. King upon this Intaglio.

Miscellaneous Charters, Letters, and other Documents.

A bundle of 18 documents, consisting of Letters of Confraternity, Papal Bulls, and other ecclesiastical documents, printed and in manuscript, from 1450 to 1637, granted to, or connected with, the family of Arundell.

A Bull of Pope Eugenius IV. to the Abbot of Oseney, relative to the appointment of John Brantingham to the priory of Tywardreth. Original.

The will of Katherine Lady Arundell, A.D. 1479.

Twelve letters from Thomas Arundell, second son of Sir J. Arundell of Lanhern (co. Cornwall), to his father, from A.D. 1536–1544. He refers to the political transactions of the period, and mentions Lord Cromwell.

Two letters of Sir John Arundell of Lanherne to his second wife, Katherine, daughter of Sir T. Grenfield; upon family matters. No date, but before the suppression of the monastery of Forde.

Various papers connected with the priory of Tywardreth, from A.D. 1506.

Resignation of Richard Martyn, prior of Tywardreth, and appointment of Thomas Colyn [1506?].

Cardinal Wolsey to Thomas Coleyns, prior of Tywardreth, urging him to resign. A contemporaneous copy, signed T. Card. Ebor., dated More, 26th September [1528?].

Letter from Tho. Colyns to Weston, sub-dean of Exeter, asking assistance against his enforced resignation [1528?].

Tho. Colyns to Pope Leo X. Two letters in English.

Tho. Colyns to Wolsey, complains of the poverty of Tywardreth. Contemporaneous copy.

Robert Hamlyn, Monk of Tavistock, to Colyns. Has not attempted to oust him. Orig. Hol.

Another letter from the same to the same, much to the same effect.

Henry Courtney, earl of Devon, to Tho. Colyns, asking him to resign his priory, the King having granted the next avoidance to the writer. He shall have a pension on compliance.

John Voysey, bishop of Exeter, to Henry, marquis of Exeter, on the next presentation to the monastery of Tywardreth. Orig.

The Sheriff of Cornwall and others to Wolsey, on the threatened invasion of that county by a great army of the French. They request that a subpœna directed to John Wyett to appear in the Court of Chancery might be postponed, no man being so meet to command the forces. Truro, 6 Oct. Contemporary copy. At this time John Kyllygrow was Sheriff.

Various inventories of furniture, household books, &c., from 1547.

Account by John Tregoz, receiver general for Sir John Arundell, 36 Hen. VIII.

Letter from H. earl of Northumberland to Sir John Arundell, temp. Edw. VI.

Original letter (signed) from Queen Elizabeth to Rudolph, emperor of the Romans, recommending to his good offices Thomas Arundel, the bearer of the letter, a young nobleman of great acquirements and high character, who is on his travels through Germany and Italy. Dated at Westm. 10 Feb. 1579, 22 Eliz.

Original Articles of Surrender of Wardour Castle by Lady Blanche Arundell, 8 May 1643, after five days siege.

Letters and accounts of Sir Richard Bellings, Controller of the Household of Queen Catherine, wife of Charles II., from 1679 to 1703.

Correspondence of Sir John Arundell of Lanherne with Sir Richard and Lady Bellings, his daughter and son-in-law, from 1665 to 1688.

Various letters to Sir Richard and Lady Bellinges, 1684 to 1718. Among these is one giving a detailed and interesting account of the reception of the Duke of York at his landing at Yarmouth, 13 March 1682.

Correspondence of the Rev. Cornelius Nary of Dublin, from 1706 to 1718.

Two letters from Cardinal Howard, 5 Oct. 1685 and 24 Aug. 1688.

Letters of Edward Butler, sixth Viscount Montgerald.

Notes by Lord Arundell for his defence on the plot of France, Oates, and others.

In the Appendix is a letter dated 1654, January 5, from Robert Hope to Secretary Thurloe (about searching for arms in Worcestershire); he received the order the last day of December to take Sir Henry Lyttelton, the High Sheriff, and Sir John Pakington; both were taken and sent to London. Then follow the information of the carrier's brother (the boxes were addressed to Sir Henry Lyttelton). Examination of Charles (Sir Henry's son), and examination of Sir Henry taken by Thurloe, 29th January 1654; (he said that he got the arms because of his appointment as High Sheriff,) and examinations of other persons.

1662, Aug. 26. Katherine Lyttelton to her husband Sir Charles; written on her arrival at Sleeton. She describes her company on the journey: "If I had not "had Cyrus,* I had been undone, for I never had three "such wearisome days in my life."

1663. Feb. 22. Henry Bennett (Secretary of State) to Sir C. Lyttelton at Jamaica; sends the King's instructions.

1664. Feb. 24. Charles II. to Sir C. Lyttelton. He has appointed Sir Thomas Muddiford Governor; gives Sir C. leave to come home, being unwell; to deliver up the seal, records, &c., belonging to him as Chancellor of the island to Sir Thos. Muddiford.

1678. May 10. J. Churchill (at London) to Sir C. Lyttelton; army matters.

1678. July 12. The same to the same. "We are "again very furious upon the war; so that I hope it "will not be long before I have orders to come over."

1678. July 18. The same to the same. It is generally believed we shall have war; notices changes in offices.

In an undated letter, the Duke of Monmouth writing to Sir C. Lyttelton at Bruges, says, "Let me know how "strong every regiment can march out on Thursday, "for I can give you no longer time." Does not intend that all regiments there shall march, nor can he say which shall stay behind until he see him.

In a letter from the Camp at Dundalk, Nov. 6th (no year), Sir H. Lyttelton gives in account of his shipwreck near Dublin; he says that the men died like rotten sheep; they could get no strong liquors. (It appears from the letter, that the writer had served under a commission from King William, whom he had joined when Prince of Orange, soon after his landing.)

A folio of 27 leaves contains copies of letters from Sir Henry Sidney to Sir John Lyttelton and of several from Mrs. Muriel Lyttelton and others, chiefly relating to proceedings in Worcestershire during the Civil War; also of letters of the Lyttletons after the Restoration. (A note of the transcriber says that he has transcribed them fair into a 4to volume.) Among these are:—

Letter from Lord Falkland at Beverley to Sir Thomas Lyttelton, in the King's service.

1642. June 25. Charles I. to Sir Thomas Lyttelton. Confines him to Worcestershire, notwithstanding the orders of both or either house of Parliament.

There is a letter from Sir Thomas to Viscount Fielding, Ambassador Extraordinary at Venice, but it is not important.

1642. Aug. 17. Lord Dunsmore, at Warwick, writes to Sir T. Lyttelton: "We are told that great forces are "coming down to us under the command of Hali, Hamden, and Lord Brooke, but out of the appearance we "have of the assistance of your county and the rest of "our neighbouring country's, we are not much affrighted "with it. We have here already nine troops of horse, "to-morrow shall have five more, besides 200 firelocks "and 300 dragooners. These are of the King's forces. "Then we have the force of the county besides, and "this night the forces of Leicestershire will be with "us. To-morrow we shall have the King with us at "Killingworth," i.e., Kenilworth.

18 Car. I., June 22. Royal instructions from York for Prince Charles, Edward Lord Dudley, and Lord Coventry, and the rest of the Commissioners of Array for the county of Worcester.

1672, January 2. An unsigned letter and paper giving an account of the great storm at Guernsey, the damage to Cornet Castle; Lord Hatton's wife and mother were among the killed, and he was blown out of his room into a well at a distance.

In 1675 John Williamson writes to Lord Lockhart, Ambassador in France, recommending the widow of

* Madame de Scudéry's ponderous romance.

The Manuscripts of the Right Honourable Lord Lyttelton, Hagley, Co. Worcester.

The Manuscripts consist chiefly of letters (and copies of letters) of the 17th and 18th centuries. There are a few letters and papers of the end of the 16th century.

Some of the letters of the 17th century illustrate the Civil War.

Those of the 18th century are interesting; a great number being addressed to George Lord Lyttelton, well known as the historian of King Henry II. of England. In this century there are letters by the Duchess of Marlborough, Swift, Pope, Fielding, Voltaire, Dr. Johnson, Lord Monboddo, and others.

In the 16th century is a holograph letter by Queen Elizabeth; and there are some Star Chamber papers.

A great number of the letters have been printed in Sir Robert Phillimore's Life of Lord Lyttelton.

Some letters and papers relating to South Carolina and Jamaica in the middle of the last century may be useful for Colonial history.

In rapidly looking over this collection, I made notes of what seemed to present points of interest.

A 4to volume of 142 pages contains copies by Charles Lyttelton (President of the Society of Antiquaries, and Bishop of Carlisle) of letters at Hagley chiefly written by the heads of the family. They are of the 16th and 17th centuries, and include letters from Sir John Lyttelton, Mrs. Muriel Lyttelton, Sir Thomas Lyttelton, Sir Henry Lyttelton, Sir Charles Lyttelton, and their wives during the Civil War and the Revolution; a few are from Capt. Churchill, afterwards Duke of Marlborough; one from the Duke of Monmouth.

In this volume are copies of records of a suit in the Star Chamber, 34 Eliz., wherein Gilbert Lyttelton and Humphry Pakington, Esq., were Plaintiffs as Executors of Sir John Lyttelton, and Lord Dudley, and many other persons were Defendants regarding an estate which had been purchased by Sir John from Lord Dudley.

At page 45 is copy of a letter by John Lyttelton to Sir Walter Raleigh, in dignified language, deprecating his hostility, and two letters by him to his wife Muriel; one is dated from Newgate, and in the second he directs certain letters in a painted casket to be burned.

1642. Aug. 20. Letter by Edward Nicholas (Secretary of State) to the Commissioners of Array for Worcestershire.

1642. Sept. 19. Lord Falkland (at Stafford) to Sir Thomas Lyttelton. The King is satisfied with him; desires to advise with him, and for that purpose commands him to come to Shrewsbury. In a P.S. he says that eight troops of horse, and 10 of dragooners, are coming to Worcester, and that ordnance shall be sent from Shrewsbury by water.

16 . . Sept. 30. Phil. Cary to Sir Henry Lyttelton. Alludes to the change in the ceremony of marriage made by the Parliament: "The Protector was yester- "day overturned in his coach, and so bruised in his "belly and his thigh, that he cannot stir himself in his "bed, and his secretary's leg is broken. How the "accident came is a great secret, because of the dis- "honour of it; for he would needs drive his coach "himself, and the horses, ran away and threw him "amongst them."

A funny letter by the Duke of Monmouth (not dated), to Lady Phil. Lyttelton about "your sister, my niece."

Four petitions to Oliver Cromwell, by Sir Henry Lyttelton. He was imprisoned for providing arms without license. In the third, he says that he had been in prison near 17 months.

Mr. Lyttelton,—" he that was killed at the battle near " Strasburg."

In 1701, Sept. 21, Chas. Lyttelton writes to Sir Charles L. at Hagley, giving an account of the visit of Louis XIV. to James II. at St. Germain.

A 4to volume of nearly 70 leaves contains extracts from the Tower Records, and from the original letters of the Visitors of Monasteries (at the time of their suppression), and several curious small pieces extracted from MSS. in the Bodleian Library and elsewhere, and which have never been printed. These seem to have been made by the Bishop in 1749. The volume contains curiosa from the Close, Patent, and Liberate Rolls; Extracts regarding the Monasteries, from Dodsworth's Collections. (Some of these may be found in the Camden Society's volume on the suppression of the Monasteries); at p. 18 is an account of an odd despoilment of Bishop Braybroke's corpse in St. Paul's, by a lady, the Duchess of Cleveland. (Signed H. Colraine, Dec. 10, 1675, who had it from those who saw it.)

1617, June 20.—Leith. Letter from Scotland to a friend in England, at King James being there in 1617 (from Dodsworth's Collections); the writer gives an account of the country and people, and of the reception of the King and his people.

The letter from Queen Elizabeth which is copied below.

Letter from Queen Anne (wife of James I.) to the Duke of Buckingham, beginning " Very kind dogge."

At p. 41 are some extracts from the Ashmolean and Harleian MSS.

A 4to volume contains observations on the reign and character of Queen Elizabeth, made in the year 1735, by George Lord Lyttelton (61 pages). A note adds, " Not to be printed unless any false copy of it should " be printed, G. L." Begins " It was now a consider- " able time that King James I. had reigned in Eng- " land, with a conduct very different from that of his " predecessor, when Sir Walter Raleigh was released " from the confinement under which he had languished " for several years." . . .—(The piece assumes the form of a conversation between Sir Francis Bacon and Sir Henry Wotton.) Ends " I don't know how to end " that conversation better than by repeating a saying " of Lord Burleigh that Queen Elizabeth was the " wisest woman that ever was; for she understood the " interests and dispositions of all the princes in her " time, and was so perfect in the knowledge of her " own realm, that no counsellor she had could tell her " anything she did not know before."

A 12mo volume contains a voyage from Plymouth to New York in the Galatea, written in French (17 leaves). Begins " Le 9 de Juillet 1776 nous levames " l'ancre de la sonde de Plymouth." The last date is the 7th of August. It ends before they reached New York. The second leaf and the last leaf but one are torn out. The writer received his commission the 30th of March 1776, and hoisted his pennant at Deptford on the Galatea. The name W. A. Merrick is on the first page.

A 12mo log book of the proceedings of the British fleet under Sir Charles Hardy, Kt., from the return of the fleet to Spithead on the 4th of September to the end of the campaign, November 24, 1779, kept by Capt. William Augustus Merrick of the Incendiary fire ship.

Do. in the summer of the year 1779, kept by Lieut. W. A. Merrick of the Victory. Begins on Wednesday, 16 June, and ends on September 2nd.

Poetical epitaph by Geo. Lord Lyttelton on Captain Thomas Grenville, Commander of the ship Defiance, wounded in fight with the French, died 3 May 1747.

Some other poems by Lord Lyttelton.

Copy of letter by Lord Lyttelton to Stanislaus, King of Poland, on his accession, dated Nov. 26, 1771; and of the answer by the King's own hand, dated at Warsaw, Janry. 18, 1772.

Papers about the death of Thomas Lord Lyttelton in 1779. Relation of Miles Peter Andrews, formerly M.P. for Bewdley, about Lord Lyttelton's ghost appearing to him.

Account (six folio leaves) of the naval engagement with the French off Mahon, May 20, 1756. The writer thinks that had they all engaged, that day might have been recorded with a similar glory as May 19, 1692 (La Hogue).

A letter by Major J. Cockburn to J. Lyttelton, Esq., at Wimbledon Park. Ho tells of Lord (Thomas) Lyttelton having written Dialogues of the Dead in imitation and ridicule of his father; remembers three of them, and has them somewhere. If he recollects right they are replete with wit, spirit, blasphemy, and patriotism. The parties were King David and Cæsar Borgia, the Saviour of the world and Socrates, and Epaminondas and General Wolfe; gives an account of Mr. Coombe and the Lyttelton letters.

Letters from Thomas Lyttelton, while abroad, to his father.

There are several portfolios of letters. Among these are:—

Autograph letter by Queen Elizabeth to Lady Paget, on the death of Lady Compton, as follows:—" E. R., " cal to your mynde, good Kate, how hardly we princes " can bruke a crossing of our commandes; how vrofitl " will the hiest power be (may you be sure) whan " murmur shal be made of his pleasingst wyl. Let " nature therfor not hurt your selfe, but give place to " the Giver, and thogh this lesson be from a sely " Vikar, yet it is sent from a loving Souveraine."

1659, Oct. 25. Edward Hyde (at Brussels) to Mr. Charles Lyttelton; he can not advise him to depart from the post where he is until he (Hyde) knows what the King is like to do.

1660, January 3. King Charles II. at Brussels; recollects and will reward the sufferings of him and his relations.

Letters from Pope, Fielding, Garrick, Voltaire, Johnson, Swift, Warburton, Phelps, Horace Walpole.

A letter from Dr. Johnson, dated Bolt Court, July 28, 1780, contains thanks for offers regarding Lord Lyttelton's life (for the " Lives of the Poets "), but he has no need. Asks for information concerning West, about whom he is quite at a loss.

In another letter dated July 27, Dr. Johnson says that his desire is to avoid offence and to be wholly out of danger, and he proposes that the historical part should be written by a friend under Lord Lyttelton's direction, and that he (Johnson) will only examine the poetry.*

A political letter from Pope (in the autumn of 1735), addressed to Mr. Lyttelton, Secretary to His Royal Highness, at Bath (5 pages).

A letter from Voltaire, dated Paris, 1750, contains a criticism on Thomson.

A letter from Richard Phelps in 1761 is about Voltaire.

A letter from Warburton in 1741 is about Dr. Middleton's work on the Roman religion, and another in 1768 is laudatory of Lord Lyttelton's Life of Henry II.

A letter from Swift, dated Dublin Deanery House, 5 June 1739, says that in a letter to Pope he had recommended Mr. M'Aulty to Lord Lyttelton's favour; perceives he has interceded with the Prince to prevail with the University to choose him for a member to represent that body in Parliament; has been informed that some of the Fellows have sent a remonstrance to the Prince of Wales pretending an engagement to Mr. Pindal; protests his respect, &c. for the Prince.

A letter from Horace Walpole, dated 25 August 1757 (4 pages) contains notices of Gray's poems and criticisms of his phrases.

Letter of George Lord Lyttelton to Lord Monboddo (6 pages) on the origin of the human race. Lord Monboddo's answer to the above (9 pages).

Draft of letter (in French) to the secretary of the King of Prussia, on his sending a book of poems published by his master. Wishes he had omitted the letter to Lord Keith. Laments his materialism.

Copy of letter in 1735 to the Prince of Wales on the notion that an increased public grant might be proposed on the occasion of his marriage (printed).

Copy of another letter to the Prince, asking to be allowed to serve him for nothing (printed).

Letter from Frederick Prince of Wales.

Letter from the King of Poland, 1772 (printed).

Letter from Lord Monboddo, 1773, in reply to Lord Lyttelton's comments on his book.

Cards were (if not sent by post) at least used as missives in the last century. Here is one by Lord Chesterfield thanking Lord Lyttelton for the first two volumes of his history (of Henry II.), and begging for the third which he hungers for.

Letters by H. S. Conway in 1752, 1755, and 1757.

A letter from Lord Mansfield in 1759 dated from Kenwood, says there are no chances of getting the bishoprick for the son. (But Lord Lyttelton's son Charles got the bishoprick of Carlisle in 1762.)

Letters from Geo. Grenville, Thos. Whately his private secretary, Lord Temple, Lord Rodney, Lord Hardwicke, in the middle of the last century: some of these are printed.

Letters from Lord Lyttelton to W. H. Lyttelton, governor of South Carolina, from 1756 to 1765; seventeen letters, eight or nine of which are printed. Lord L. told him all the memorable events in the political world until he returned from America.

Letters to Governor Lyttelton from Bishop Lyttelton and Sir R. Lyttelton, chiefly in 1756, 1757, 1758, and 1759. They contain political news and gossip.

About 26 letters from Lord Chatham to George Lord Lyttelton, and Governor Lyttelton.

A large collection of papers and letters including those from Secretaries of State to Wm. H. Lyttelton while Governor of South Carolina, and afterwards while Governor of Jamaica.

Letters by and relating to Thomson the poet, and correspondence between Lord Lyttelton and Dr. Doddridge.

Among these are some verses in Thomson's handwriting, and a letter by him to Lord Lyttelton dated 14 December 1747, in which he praises a lady whom apparently they wanted him to marry, but he says that she does not take his fancy, and that he is too old to marry; and,

A letter by Lord Lyttelton in 1738 to Dr. Doddridge, excusing himself from applying to the Prince on Doddridge's behalf because the latter is a Dissenter.

In the last letter to Doddridge, dated 19 Sept. 1751, Lord Lyttelton says that he hears from the Bishop of Worcester that Doddridge had gone to Bristol in an ill state of health.

A part only of this correspondence is printed.

Letters by various members of the Lyttelton family at the end of the 17th century and during the 18th century, and by other persons; among these are,

A letter by John Hough Bishop of Worcester to Sir Thomas Lyttelton, acknowledging the receipt of Warburton's "Divine Legation of Moses;" he would have preferred observations on the "Life of Cicero," as the author is as intimate with Cicero as Middleton is.

A letter from R. Lyttelton to his father, dated at Ghent 19 Nov. 1742. Orders from His Majesty to march by way of Aix-la-Chapelle towards the Rhine. Don d'Arenberg has this moment arrived and is in consultation with Lord Stair. The army is in great spirits, if we have frost we shall do very well.

A letter from Sarah Duchess of Marlborough, dated 26 August 1733, to Dr. Sandby, prebendary of Worcester. A patriotic letter, about voting for members at the next parliament.

A letter from Geo. Lyttelton to his father, dated 25 April 1747, about his last speech; news from Holland. The Prince of Orange is declared full stadtholder of the seven provinces. The Duke at the head of 110,000 brave men is within 10 miles of Antwerp; he cannot stay there two days for want of forage without either taking the town or beating the French.

A letter from George Lyttelton to Miss West (1751) about the regency. The King is very kind to the Princess and his grandchildren.

Extracts from a MS. of Mr. Doraston of West Felton, co. Salop. During the civil war Prince Rupert made Wellescourt his head quarters for some time. It gives an account of a singular escape of Prince Rupert from a trooper.

Letters to George Lord Lyttelton from Henry Pelham (5), Lord Chesterfield (12), H. Fox, Lords Bolingbroke, Bath, Egremont, Marchmont, Rockingham, and the Duke of Newcastle (mostly printed).

A letter by Bolingbroke, dated 29 Nov. 1740, is about Windham's death (not printed).

A letter from Lord Lyttelton to Lord Bolingbroke, dated 14 April 1748, about the "Idea of a Patriot King." Asks him to leave out all about him (Lyttelton) and not to publish it yet. (A note says that "it was "originally writ in the form of a letter to Lord Lyttelton, "being then in the Prince's service. I have it in MS. "and it was writ in my Lord's own hand.")

A letter by Lord Rockingham, dated 28th February 1772, about the Royal Marriage Act; what is meant by Royal family; is going to have good law advice.

A letter by Holles-Newcastle (i.e., the Duke of Newcastle the Prime Minister) to Lord L., dated 14th Oct. 1760, on the reduction of the Canadas.

Letters from Richard Lyttelton to his father Sir Thomas, 1744, &c.; some while he was in service in Flanders where he was wounded. In a letter of 1744 he says that he went to Ranelagh and had a long talk with the prince and princess.

A few letters from William Lyttelton to his father in 1746–8, from the Temple and from Berlin.

A bundle of letters from George Lyttelton to his father, 1729 and 1730, from France, Italy, and Venice.

Letter by Samuel Hood (Sir Samuel Hood the Admiral) at Philadelphia, dated 10th Sept. 1754, addressed to Admiral Smith at Hagley, telling that he has now possession of Jamaica.

Among the numerous early deeds preserved at Hagley, the following may be thought deserving of notice.

King John by his Charter tested at Clarendon on the 8th of August, in the 17th year of his reign grants the manor of Hales to God and St. Mary at Hales. The seal is pendent.

King Henry III. by his charter dated the 5th of April, in the 11th year of his reign, confirms the above grant by King John; the exemptions are very full. Among the witnesses is Herbert de Burgh, Earl of Kent. The seal remains.

King Henry III. by charter, dated the 18th of October, in the 31st year of his reign, grants the church of Walsehale, Walsall in Staffordshire, to the Abbey of Hales. The seal remains.

Of the date of 14th of the Kalends of November, 1282, is an appointment by the Bishop of Worcester of a vicar to the church of Hales by virtue of a Papal Bull recited. Part of the seal in green wax remains.

King Edward III., by letters patent dated the 2nd of May, in the 11th year of his reign, and tested at the town of London, licenses Joan Buttetourt to alienate Wyrneley in Worcestershire to the abbat and convent of Hales Owen. A large part of the seal in green wax remains.

By deed dated Friday after the feast of St. Mark 11 Edward III., Richard Fekenham grants to Lady Joan Botetourt, one half of the manor of Wernelegh with the appurtenances, which he held of the inheritance of John de Sutton of Dudley.

On the 4th of January 1331 Adam, Bishop of Worcester confirms various grants by Bishops of Worcester the founders and several Popes regarding the appropriation of the church of Hales Owen.

There are other ancient deeds relating to the monastery of Hales Owen; and bailiff's accounts for the abbey 34 & 35 Edw. III.; and a Cartulary of the Abbey in the shape of a roll three or four feet long, and—

A hundred roll of the burgh of Hales, 6 Edw. I.

Deeds of the 13th and 14th centuries relating to lands at Frankley, co. Worcester.

By charter of Edward I. tested at the tower of London, 5 Oct., 2 Edwd., the King grants to his beloved valet Licard de Henyn in tail the manor of Arncleye which John de Burgh the elder held of King Henry III., in capite, and which the said John gave to Robert Burnell (bishop of Bath and Wells), and which Robert surrendered to the King (Edward). The seal of green wax remains.

By charter tested at Westminster, 4th June, 4 Edw. I., the King recites the above grant and licenses Licard to alienate the manor to Roger de Mortimer in fee, and licenses Roger to purchase it, under the service of one knight's fee.

The grant by Licard to Mortimer is there.

Attached to a grant of land by Hubert de Burgh, Earl of Kent (temp. Hen. III.), is part of the seal in green wax, the arms are three lozenges in fess; the lozenges seem to be vairy.

A grant, 20th December, 27 Hen. VI., by Richard Duke of York to Ralph Lord Cromwell and others, as feoffees in trust, of the manor and vill. of Cressege, co. Salop, bears not only the seal but the autograph E. York.

To a deed temp. Richard III. is the seal of the town of Bristol, William Wykeham being mayor.

To a deed of the 16 Hen. VII. is the seal of William Cretyng as dean of the collegiate church of Westbury.

There is a roll of the taxation of the temporalities of the archdeaconry of Worcester, 29 Edw. III.

By a deed of the 44th of Edward III., John de Buttetourt, lord of Weleigh and Haygeleye (i.e., Hagley), states that there is a custom in the manor of Haygeleye, called Beolawe and Bodelsilver, viz., each tenant pays to the lord 2*s.* yearly or one sheep for the said customs. By this deed he releases a tenant for ever. There is a fine seal, the arms are a saltire of lozenges.

There are two petitions, not addressed but indorsed "about the prisoners at Brasen." One is dated 12th November 1798, and is by Mary Bedingfield, prioress of Nazareth, praying for the pardon of "some soldiers, "prisoners of our nation, condemned to die." The other is by Susannah Brinkhurst, abbess.

ALFRED J. HORWOOD.

P.S.—The edition of the Treatise on Tenures by Sir Thomas Lyttelton (ancestor of Lord Lyttelton) printed by Machlinia in the 15th century is as valuable as a manuscript; of this his Lordship possesses a very fine copy.

THE MANUSCRIPTS OF THE RIGHT HONOURABLE LORD CALTHORPE, GROSVENOR SQUARE, LONDON.

This most important and valuable collection is contained in upwards of 190 volumes, mostly in folio. All but a few were formerly known as the Yelvertou Manuscripts, and a catalogue of the original collection is in the 2nd volume of "Catalogi librorum manuscriptorum Angliæ et Hiberniæ," printed, in folio, at Oxford, in 1697, and it occupies 62 pages of double columns, and describes 187 volumes.

This original collection seems to have been mainly formed by Robert Beale (one of the ancestors of Lord Calthorpe), who was Clerk of the Council to Queen Elizabeth, and was employed by her in various missions, notably to the Low Countries, and to Mary Queen of Scots while a prisoner in England. He was at the trial and at the death of the Scottish Queen. He collected and retained and preserved many important original documents of his own and earlier times. Those regarding the Hanse Towns, English intervention in the affairs of the Low Countries, and the affair of the Queen of Scots may be specially mentioned.

The printed catalogue was evidently taken from the manuscript catalogue* now in the possession of Lord Calthorpe, and is very copious; but although generally nearly every item in each volume is given, yet in some cases there are very important omissions, and some inaccuracies, excusable, if, as I suspect, the catalogue was made by a foreigner.

Of this original collection 17 volumes, namely, those numbered 15, 18, 22, 23, 28, 41, 56, 83, 94, 97, 112, 113, 114, 124, 126, 127, and 167 have been for many years, and still are, and a few others are, missing. The volumes were numbered consecutively from 1 to 187, and the volumes which remain still bear the proper numbers. Thirteen of the volumes were some years ago lent to late Sir Francis Palgrave, and were duly returned by him. They were borrowed with a view to the then projected new edition of Rymer's Fœdera, and works in execution by the Record Commission.

The descriptions in the existing catalogue are very brief; the majority of the volumes are of such a nature that a new and fuller description of them would be very desirable. In the preliminary examination which I made, the extent of the collection and the fact of the existence of a printed catalogue precluded me from doing much more than noting omissions and inaccuracies which were patent; nevertheless I have given most of Beale's notes, he having peculiar sources of information; and have amplified some of the descriptions, and, as the printed catalogue can be only in few hands, have endeavoured to give a general idea of the contents of the volumes.

Where a volume is not noticed, either it is missing or appears not to contain anything relating to this country.

Volumes I., II., III., and IV. contain copies of treaties between England and foreign powers in the 15th and 16th centuries.

In Vol. II., fo. 360, is a copy of an exemplification by Philip and Mary of a record of pleas before Spigornel and Denham, justices for the examination of records, processes, and correction of crimes, 17 Edw. II. It is translated into English. It concerns Guernsey and Jersey. At fo. 370 is a copy of charter by Queen Elizabeth, in 1568, to Guernsey, Alderney, and Sark. Then follow Orders in Council for Guernsey, 1580 and 1581; and instructions to commissioners for Jersey, 1582, appointed on the complaint of the islanders; and at fo. 388 are orders (April 1583) set down between Sir Thomas Leighton and Monsieur de Centone in the matter between Sir T. Leighton, Captain of the Isle of Guernsey, and P. De Carteret, Seigneur de St. Omer. At 393*b* are set out Customs of Guernsey, differing from the customs of Normandy.

At fo. 409-412 of Vol. III. is a copy of the treaty of marriage between Queen Elizabeth and the Duc d'Anjou, &c. This is a copy certified by "Pinart, Conseiller du "Roi, Secrétaire d'état et des finances de sa Majesté."

Vol. IV., fo. 6 to fo. 97. A declaration of the trewe and dewe title of the Right high, &c. Henry, by the grace of God, King of England and of France, and Lord of Ireland to the Crowns of France and Navarre, and to the Duchies of Normandy and of Guyan and Gascoyn, and to the counties and countries of Angeo, Mayn, and Torayn, Peytow, Ponthieu, and Champayn, and of the province with the superioritie and dominion of Bretayn, by dewe succession of heritage, and answering to the false objections, surmises, and imaginations made and put in preyte by the Fronshmen against the said title, grounded upon a surmited law called Lawo Salique.—It contains 25 chapters, and is in a hand of the 16th century.

At fo. 100 are Latin statutes and regulations for the army of Henry 6th. All were to wear a white band with a red cross or crosses; if any did not wear such, and were killed by our own men, it would be his own fault. Any enemy wearing it was to be killed.

The Declaration by Henry 6th of his right to the crown of France, fo. 105, is in English, and dated at Westminster, 14th June, in the eighth year of his reign.

The charter, of which a copy is given at fo. 110, is dated A.D. 1156. By it King Stephen gives the manor of Sutton to God and the church of St. Peter of Winchester in exchange for the manor of Morden, which he gave to Walleran, Earl of Mellent, and which the church long possessed. A great part of the barons and magnates assented.

In this volume, loose, are 3½ leaves in a hand of the 15th century, of Sir John Fortescue's English treatise in favour of Henry 6th and against Edward 4th's right to the throne. It is the same, within a few words, with the fragment printed by Lord Clermont in his "Life "and Works of Sir John Fortescue," p. 497, from the Cotton MS., Julius, F. vi. The Cotton MS. begins with the words "That the Kinges of Englande." Lord Calthorpe's begins "Wisdome of sadde clerkes and of othro "that the Kinges of Englande." The Cotton MS. ends "when he was not fully eight yeares olde." Lord Calthorpe's ends with the same words. (See the Report on the Countess Cowper's MSS. in this Appendix for a sixteenth century copy of the same fragment.)

Vol. VII., part 1,† contains an account, by way of journal, of the doings at the Diet or Conference of Utrecht, 1473. The orators for England were Wm. Hatteclyffe, the King's secretary, and John Russell, Doctor of Decrees, Archdeacon of Berks and Diocese of Sarum, and William Rosse. It is about the Hanse Towns.

At fo. 82-114 is a diary of the proceedings by one of the commissioners.

At fo. 132 is part (5 leaves) of a treatise advocating war with France, temp. Henry 8th.

At fo. 140 is a Latin proposition of Peter de Monte, collector in England for Pope Eugenius 4th, made in the Parliament at Westminster, 14 Hen. VI.

At fo. 164 is a requisition made by Henry 5th to his adversary of France on giving up his claim to the crown of France. (Nearly all the volume is in English.)

Vol. VII., part 2.—The colloquy at Bruges. This volume, like the first portion of the last, seems all about rates and merchandize. There are proofs by the English, refutations by the Belgians, council letters, and instructions. At fo. 313 are Negotiations at Brussels by Dr. Dale, sent to the Archduchess of Parma by Queen Elizabeth. The speech of the envoy begins in French, but breaks into Latin, he being only an apprentice in the French tongue. At fo. 317 is an original letter from the Archduchess to the Queen, 2nd Feb. 1563, with her autograph.

Vol. VIII. is an index to Negotiations and Treaties between England and other countries.

Vol. IX. is a very large collection of copies (16th century) of documents relating to trade between England and foreign countries and the Hanse Towns in the 14th, 15th, and 16th centuries, and controversies arising thereout.

Vol. X. A similar collection, including some documents (copies) of the 13th century. The defence of the London merchants against the writing exhibited by the Hanse towns, at fo. 266, is by Walter Haddon. The defence at fo. 338 begins with proofs from the time of Henry 3rd.

Vol. XI. A similar but smaller collection. This volume contains a printed quarto—The Answer made by the noble lords the States unto the ambassadors of Polonia. Imprinted at Amsterdam by Peter Gevaerts, 1597; London, John Windet, 1597; and a printed broadside in Latin, containing an address by the people of Cologne to the English against Spain; and reply of the English. London, John Wolff, 1598.

Vol. XII. A very curious volume of forms used in the Ecclesiastical Courts. It was written apparently by Thomas Argall, notary public. At fo. 44 is a copy of the protest made by the Archbishop of Canterbury on the 24th Feb. 1536, against consenting to the statute passed to the prejudice of the ecclesiastical power. It states that in an upper chamber without a window, in William (Warham) Archbishop of Canterbury's manor of Lambeth, the Archbishop made and interposed a protestation in writing, and openly and publicly propounded, &c., in the terms of a paper schedule held in his hand, and publicly read, thus:—William, by Divine, &c., protest we will not conform to any statute in the present Parliament, held at the Friars Preachers in London, 3rd Nov. 1529, 21 Henry 8th, and thence prorogued and continued, enacted or to be enacted, in prejudice of the ecclesiastical power or the rights of our Metropolitan Church, but do dissent. Before notaries public, John Cooke, LL.D., and three others named. (See Appendix to Burnet's History of the Reformation.)

The volume contains documents, with names, from the beginning of the reign of Henry 8th to the early part of the reign of Elizabeth. At fo. 103 is pinned one leaf of the 15th century, being a copy of proceedings in a divorce at the end of the 14th century. The parties were Sir Adam Fraunceys and Margery Greene, his wife.

Vols. XIII. and XIV. Copies of the 16th century of treaties and other documents and orations about trade matters between England and the Low Countries in the 16th century, and England's military assistance to the States.

Vol. XV. The Discovery and Recovery of Ireland, and the author's apology. On paper, 16th century. (A similar copy is in the possession of Viscount Dillon, at Dytchley. See report on his MSS. in this Appendix. The author was Thomas Lee, executed for treason in 1600.)

Vol. XVI. The first 20 leaves contain Miscellanea about Wales; the remainder of the volume consists of notes and treatises on Ireland, including two books of Ireland's History by Edward Campion—A breviate of the Conquest of Ireland and the decay of the same, made by Finglasse (see this in the Countess Cowper's Collection); A short treatise by Patrick Sherlock; and one by William Gerrard, Lord Chancellor of Ireland. There are also copies of letters by the Earl of Essex and Sir Henry Sidney, &c. A paper for the reformation of Munster, by Sir Humphry Gilbert, Kt., 1573; A conference between the Lord Deputy and the Council of the Nobility, &c. of the English Pale., by Sir William Drury, Lord Justice.

Vol. XVII. Collections on Irish affairs, temp. Elizabeth. The paper at fo. 127, "The advice of a subject "to her Majesty, the confusion of rebellion, and ready "way to reformation in Ireland," is by Swethin Johnson.

Vol. XVIII. is absent. It consisted of the work by Sir John Davies on the state of Ireland, which has been several times printed.

Vol. XIX. This is a collection of official forms (oaths, patents, passports, instructions, &c.) It was made by Robert Beale himself, and is interesting because he has copied actual documents, with the names and dates.

Vol. XX. A collection of the 16th century, chiefly relating to trade, the Merchant Adventurers, and municipal laws of London and Norwich; there are papers concerning ordnance and soldiers, the swanmoote and the old forest laws. At fo. 49 is John Johnson's discourse for the repairing the decayed state of the merchants of the Staple and the erection of a certain new Staple. At fo. 65 is a Proclamation by King Edw. 6 "lycenceyng the Ex- "changes and Rechauges to be frequented and used in "all parts of his highnesses realm and dominions." (It is a copy of one printed by Grafton in 1552.) At fo. 167 are "Orders to be observed in the city of London in time of infection;" and Beale in a marginal note says that it is "in the hand of the Lord Tresorer." At fo. 180 is De officio Admiralitatis Angliæ (10 or 11 leaves, the beginning and end are absent). This, Beale says, is from a printed book lent to him by Dr. Cæsar, Judge of the Admiralty. The paper on the Swanmoote is said to be out of an old roll touching swannery delivered to R. Thomson by Matthew Naylor, then officer of swannery under Mr. Secretary (Cecil), June 1570.

Vol. XXI. A folio of the 16th century. It begins with the treatise of Sir John Fortescue upon certain writings sent out of Scotland against the King's title to his realm of England. (It seems to agree with the copy printed by Lord Clermont in his Life and Works of Sir J. Fortescue, p. 523.) The Modus tenendi parliamentum, in English; and John Yowell's treatise on Parliament in Elizabeth's time; papers and letters on Border matters; Sir Thomas Wint's declaration of his innocency, fo. 160. (This is said to be on the accusation of Dr. Bonarde unto the Council, and contains an account of what passed while he was at the Emperor's Court, and at Nice and Villafranca. The regulations for the household of Henry 8th seem to be a Bouche of Court like that in Mr. Puleston's collection, described in another part of this Appendix, and like that printed by the Antiquarian Society in 1790. At fo. 176 is a treatise on Traffic and Exchange; and, loose, is a letter by Thomas Lupton to Queen Elizabeth, "touching the making of small money." The letter at fo. 224 from Antony to the Lords of the Council is against Exchange, and is dated 1550. At fo. 259 are Reasons to buy in small monies of base alloy, and for the passing of the same above their value. At fo. 285, Certain notes given to Mr. Secretary Smithe for a device of making small moneys, by Mr. Wickliff, goldsmith, in London. At fo. 287, A discourse given to Thomas Smith for maintaining mines at Cockermouth, 1572. The discourse for establishing of traffick at Embden (fo. 296) is addressed to the Earl of Friezeland, 1572; it refers to "the making of the preceding book in 1562." The Device for erecting a Mart Town in England (fo. 331) is addressed to the Queen (Ipswich appears to be the town proposed. The tract was composed by John Johnson and Christopher Goodwin, and their object was to ruin Philip of Spain by diverting the trade of the Low Countries to England). The book touching vintners (344-359) contains the names of persons of various trades licensed to sell wine temp. Hen. 6 and Hen. 8. Other papers on Trade and Assurance.

Vol. XXIV. General description and several maps of the maritimo coasts of France as they lie upon our English seas. This is in French, and of the 17th century.

Vol. XXV. The first 48 leaves are of the 15th century; the remainder of the volume of the 16th century. The contents are copies of early Charters to the Cinque Ports (in Latin). At fo. 8, These be the maletotes of the towne and porte of Hethe (Hythe) Rules for keeping a Court Baron, and numerous forms in civil and ecclesiastical matters, including Royal Commissions. The Tree of Commonwealth, by Edmond Dudley, 1 Hen. 8, is at fo. 51. (This was printed at Manchester in 1859). The letter by Henry 8th to the Archdeacon of Lincoln is said to be "out of an old book which I borrowed of "Mr. Saye, whose father was principal register for "Ecclesiastical Courts."

Vol. XXVI. This volume (nearly all of the 16th century) contains many papers touching plots by the Kings of France and Spain, the Queen of Scots, and the Duke of Norfolk against Queen Elizabeth, and some papers on trade and on religious matters. The volume opens with copies of three letters in French against the introduction of the Inquisition into this country. A writ in Latin, 8 Henry 6, ordering observance of the treaty of friendship between Henry 5th and Charles of France, which is given in full in English. (This paper is of the 15th century.) There are copies of a letter by Thomas Norton, a prisoner in the Tower in 1580, to the Lord Treasurer, and of letters by him to his wife, and a diary of him of his doings in London, and on his journey to Rome in 1579, where he lodged, and notices of the Englishmen he met there: it is continued to his return to London, 18th March 1580.

At fol. 110, The names and dwelling places of papists at whose houses I have been since my coming into England at Midsummer last. (Apparently by Robert Woodward.)

A treatise in French against the Queen of Scots, fol. 137–145.

A Latin declaration of the causes which moved some of Her Majesty's navy coming from Portugal to seize some ships laden with wheat sent to Lisbon. The Latin has been corrected by Beale. This is followed by an English translation printed in 4to, 1589. At fol. 282 is The View of France in the method of travaile.

From fol. 350 to fol. 369 the catalogue gives a "Brief chronology of occurrences in England, 1559 to 1562." Begins The marriage between the two duckes at Shene. How Northumberland suspected he should have been betraied there, and therefore came not thither. Ends December 1562. Letters sent for the lending of hundred pounds throughout the realm. (It may be an abstract of some book.)

Vol. XXVII. Copies of divers treaties of peace and amity between foreign sovereigns; the first is between James, King of Scotland, and Charles VIII. of France. The volume contains other papers, mostly on French, Flemish, and Dutch affairs. The Demand for Calais by the Queen of England and the Answer of Charles IX. of France, 1579; this is in French.

Vol. XXIX. This volume contains, amongst other things, some papers on the Star Chamber. The notes and collections on it (fol. 11) are dated 1589, and were sent by Walsyngham to William Mylls, clerk of the Star Chamber. At fol. 17 are notes by Beale. At fols. 52 and 57 are extracts from the books of the Court of Requests, 2 Henry VIII. and 12–14 Henry VIII. At fol. 118 is a tract in French concerning officers at Court, their several offices and allowances from the King. From the names—Barth. de Badlesmere, Hugh Despenser, and the Bishop of Ely, Chancellor—I think the original was of or refers to the time of Edward II. At fol. 154 is a letter from John Vowel, Chamberlain of Exeter, to the Mayor and Senators there, sending them a translation of the Modus tenendi parliamentum, which translation follows.

Vol. XXX. Copies of two papers on the State of France. Treaties and papers concerning Turkey and Spain. At fol. 256 is a list of presents sent to the Grand Signor by W. Harborne. They were sent in the Susan of London for the Grand Signor and various officers of his Court; the total amount was £1,913. 19*s.* 1*d.*

Vol. XXXI. This important volume is, with two or three exceptions, occupied with letters and papers some original, about Mary Queen of Scots and various conspiracies by the Duke of Norfolk and others on her behalf. At fol. 45–70 is The discourse of the proceedings of the Queen of Scots' affairs in England since 11th April 1571 to 26th March 1572. A note by Beale says that the original was found in the study of the Lord Henry Howard, brother to the late Duke of Norfolk, in his house beside Ivy Bridge, when he was apprehended after the departure of the Lord Paget and Charles Arundell; and Lord Henry confessed before . . and Robert Beale that, on the departure of the Bishop of Ross from England, he sent this book unto him by a fellow that sometime was servant to a stationer dwelling at the sign of the "Olifant," in Fleet Street.

At fol. 74 and 75 are extracts from lives of the Archbishops of Canterbury. The notes of the evil demeanour of the Queen of Scots after death of Lord Darnley, and the examples for the execution of Queens (fol. 76–78), are in the hand of Beale. The form of a petition to Her Majesty for executing the Duke of Norfolk, is said to be "provided by N." of The Duke's apparell to the scaffold, fol. 112. In the margin is the name L. Cheyne, and on the margin of 117 is the name of Glemham. At 129, A Declaration of the just causes moving the Nobility of Scotland to abide with the King when Religion was opposed; this is said to be licensed to be printed, 1582. At fol. 135 is The sum of all the conferences between the Earl of Morton and John Dury and Mr. Walter Balgangwall, and the chief things which they heard of him the day the Earl suffered, which was the 2nd July 1581.—At 140, a Copy of a proclamation from Holyrood House, the last of Feb. 1583, against false rumours and rictous behavour.—The discovery of a gaping gulfe, fol. 149, is a printed tract, 4to, 1579; it is by W. Stubbes; An answer in MS. to it, by Lord Hen. Howard (or by Francis Throgmorton), follows. Before 176 is a copy of a letter of six leaves, dated Sheffield, 14 Nov., 1581, to Mr. Secretary, by some person (perhaps Beale) who had been sent to have an interview with Queen Mary of Scotland, wherein he gives an account of the interview. At 190 is an account of Parry's execution, by Vaughan. At the back of fol. 191 is a poetical epitaph on Parry.—The copy of Mary's adherence to the Association is in French, and certified as true, the original having been seen by Beale in the hands of Walsingham. At p. 209, The execution of five traitors, Ballard, Babington, Savage, Tichert and Erawell, and Chidiock Tichborne. An unpaged copy of Examination (in French) of Nicholas Lambert, 1569. Copy of marriage contract between the Queen of Scots and Bothwell. Letter of the Earl of Shrewsbury to the Earl of Kent, Sir Amias Powlet, Sir D. Drury, and R. Beale, 1 July, 1588.—A defence of the honor of the right high right mighty and noble Princesse Marie Quene of Scotlande and Dowager of Fraunce, &c.; imprinted, 1569. This is a 4to of 8 leaves, ending imperfectly, with signature B 4.—A confession of Nicholas Haubert, 9 August 1569, about the death of Darnley (in French, 4 leaves).—Beale's Conferences, various. Among the letters to and from the Queen of Scots are some to Mendoza, 27 July, 1586, to the Archbishop of Glasgow, Sir Francis Englefield, Lord Paget, (in French); and others in French, for the deliverance of the Queen of Scots by the King of Spain, and letter by C. Paget to the Queen. Letters between Mary and Babington and others, and extracts of intercepted letters to Mary. At 272, Instructions given to Mr. Wood, sent to the King of France. This has the autograph of Elizabeth (or an imitation, but it has not the usual flourish) and Davison. At 296 is an original letter by Walsingham to Beale.—Defence of the Common Civil Law (fol. 301). Beale's note says "written by Dr. Hammond," before the going of the Lords and other of H.M. Commissioners to Fotheringay.—The proclamation declaring the sentence against the Queen of Scots is printed in black letter on 3 pieces of paper fitted together, in all a yard long.—Fol. 363, A discourse touching the full execution of the Queen of Scots. A note by Beale says that this book was made by Geo. Puttenham. The work begins, "It has not happened since the memorie of man;" "ends, in the defence of truth itself there is a certain "measure to be used." (Quere whether the same as Harl. MS., 831.)—The printed letter to the Earl of Leicester, in French, is 4to, Londres, par. C. B., 1587. It is on Low Country affairs.—A vellum document signed by Henry Earl of Kent, Amias Powlet, D. Drury, Thomas Andrew, "then Shryve," Robert Beale. It is an address by the Earl of Shrewsbury (not signed by him), the Earl of Kent, and others defending themselves about the execution of Mary, and praying that the Commission to them might be recorded. It is cut through by scissors. After this comes a large pen and ink drawing of the trial of Mary at Fotheringay; the figures are numbered, and Beale gives the names at the back. At the end of the note of the proceedings at Fotheringay is a note by Beale. At 476 is a note by Beale of what he heard the Spanish Ambassador Mendoza say, Dec. 1587, about the papers implicating Mary, found after her death. At 477–506 is a Defence of the honourable sentence and execution of the Queen of Scots, &c., &c.; at London, printed by John Windet. A note by Beale says, It is commonly thought that the book was made by Thomas Martin, D.C.L.; and being printed, the books were suppressed by the Archbishop of Canterbury. (In a bookseller's catalogue, about a year ago, I saw what seemed to be the original or copy prepared for the press of this work; the name of the author was carefully obliterated from the title, and certain passages and words were marked as to be omitted.) Fol. 525. Touching the Commission for the execution of the Scottish Queen. This has notes by Beale.—Fol. 534. Copy of the Queen's Commission for executing Mary, signed. 535*b*. Beale's letter from Fotheringay giving an account of his journey and the execution of Mary. 540. A pen and ink drawing of the execution of Mary. Papers on the proceedings in the Star Chamber against Davison.

Vol. XXXII. Copies of charters to London, and other papers relating to London, Yarmouth, and the Cinque Ports, &c. At 185, A treatise on the Admiralty; the first part is in French.

Vol. XXXIII. The volume seems to be chiefly about conspiracies against Elizabeth, where Spaniards were concerned. At fol. 51, a letter from Dr. Sanders, in Madrid, to Dr. Allen, 1577.—By Sanders's hand, but in the name of James FitzMaurice, is a copy of a letter from one of the rebel lords to the Earl of Kildare. Fol. 64, A practice of the Q. of Scots and others to invade England. On the back of this is written, "Thomas Norton's chain of treasons." Fol. 73, A collection touching the attainder of Philip Earl of Arundel. Beale in a note says that this was gathered by Mr. William Waad, one of the clerks of the Council, who was used in the said examination to attend upon Thomas Heneage and other H.M. councillors appointed for the purpose.—Fol. 122, A general discourse of the Pope's Holiness's devices (this seems to be a repetition of the Diary and Discovery of priests contained in vol. 26).—Account of Dr. Lopez's treasons; and confessions of various Spaniards.

Vol. XXXIV. A treatise "Of the civil law in case of divorce, whether either party may marry again. Begins There hath been and yet is no small doubt among the learned. (39 leaves in large writing.)

Vol. XXXV. After a few pages relating to Godfrey of Bologne's expedition to the Holy Land and early English history, come copies of writs and petitions for privy seals, and patents, and copies of such. Copies of various documents, and passages in English history in the reigns of Edw. 2, and Hen. 6. An account of the deposition of Richard 2nd. Surrender of various fortresses in France.—Fol. 131. The title and claim of the crown by Richard Duke of York, and replication thereto; an agreement between Heu. 6 and the D. of York. 39 Hen. 6.—Fol. 159, Articles of the commissioners of Kent, 1460, and those of Yorkshire, 1469–1486. Fortescue's Treatise on the difference between an absolute and a limited monarchy.—Fol. 165–175. Here endeth the cronycle of Julius Cæsar, &c., translated by John Lidgate, monk of Bury St. Edmund, 1400. (Beale has given to this the title of the Serpeut of Division.)

Vol. XXXVI. Copies of the Old Scoth Laws, Regiam Majestatem, &c. Before the alphabetical table are 10 latin hexameters and pentameters, signed G. B. They are beautifully written like large printed italics; begin Cuncta tuo cum colla jugo det sponte juventus. They may be possibly by Buchanan to James 6th.

Vol. XXXVII. Low Country Genealogies, beginning with the house of Luxembourg; coloured arms in the margin. A large volume of the 16th century, in French. At fol. 263. Miroir des fleurs de la Noblesse du pays bas collégé par Corneille Domburg fitz de Martin Zelandoir en l'an 1586. The vol. ends with fol. 344.

Vol. XXXIX. Copies of various papers regarding truce between England and Spain; and one original letter from R. Sidney to Bealo, dated Ostend, 18 June 1600. Before fol. 127 are several pages of notes by Beale.—Fol. 141. Copy of a device for alteration of religion, 1 Eliz., out of a book by Sir Thomas Smith. Some papers regarding ecclesiastical matters in England.—Fol. 175. A letter by Philip and Mary to the shires, 22 March, 1 & 2 P. & M. This has the autographs of the King and Queen.

Vol. XL. The 1st document is Instructions to ambassadors or commissioners to treat with the authorities of a city (not named) for the surrender thereof; the city had never been taken; and the phraseology is very peculiar and seems studiously obscure. At fol. 2 is a corrected draft of the same. It is English, and seems to be temp. H. 8.—Fol. 27. Latin instructions to the Seneschal of Morlaix, which he is to intimate to the King of England on the part of the Duchess.—Fol. 36. Original letter by Thomas Crumbwell (Cromwell) to Dr. Boner, telling him to set out directly, and to cause his ship to be rigg'd and made ready; understands that he has his commission already sealed. If he has not received the Duke of Helst's letter, Mr. Gostwyk shall deliver it to him or to Cavendish.—Draft of a long letter by Bonner and Cavendish to the King (altered to Queen) giving an account of their going to Wirberg, and their interview with the Duke of Holst, 2 Oct. 1535; and drafts of other letters to the King on the same business. At fol. 98 it appears that the Duke was aggrieved that the King did not address him as King of Denmark. In 1536 (see fol. 120) he was recognized as King of Denmark.—Letters of Adam Parry to Bonner.—Original letter by Cavendish.—The papers in this volume are all about 1535 or 1536; they are either original or contemporary copies or drafts. Wirberg was then besieged.

Vol. XLII. This volume contains extracts from Latin histories and other works, regarding the Pope's jurisdiction in England; and from 54 to 82 the proceedings before Edw. I. on the right of succession to the throne of Scotland after the death of Alexander 3.

Vol. XLIII. Copies of the letters patent of Henry 8 and Edward 6 to Eton College, and other grants. At fol. 63 is The form and pattern of a chesse board, declaring that the King's exchequer is the most ancient court of record. This is on 9 leaves of vellum of the 16th century.

Vol. XLIV. This volume contains many of Beale's compositions relative to church matters.

Vol. XLV. Ecclesiastical matters. Extracts in Latin from decrees of general councils, &c.

Vol. XLVI. Account of the High Court of Parliament; extracts from journals and copies of speeches and arguments there and in the Star Chamber. At p. 140 Beale says that he was then (39 Eliz.) burgess for Bishop's Castle in Shropshire.

Vol. XLVII. Genealogies of Anglo-Saxon, Danish, Anglo-Norman, and Welsh Princes and Kings, and of English Dukes and Earls; in large neat writing of the 16th century.

Vol. XLVIII. Propositions to show the unfitness of Queen Elizabeth (being a woman) to bear rule; and the Answer thereto. The Answer is by Richard Bertye, husband to the Lady Catherine, Duchess of Suffolk, against the book of John Knox, 1558.—Fo. 11. Declaration of the right of succession the Queen of Scots had to the Crown of England, with a defence of her honour. (Beale says that this was printed; and was first published in writing at the time of the northern rebellion.—Fo. 72. A treatise of the Queen of Scot's right to the Crown of England, made by Morgan Phillipps, B.D., assisted by Anthony Browne, Kt., one of the Justices of the Common Pleas, 1567. Printed at Liege 1571. (Beale has written in the margin "Mr. John Hales, his hand").—Fo. 97. A discourse of the troubles that happened in Scotland between the Queen and the King her husband, and certain their nobility: "Written by Lord "Ruthvy of Scotland a little before his death, at which "time he protested that all things were true contained "in the same, and that he did leave it in writing that "every man's part might be known that were privy to "the enterprise." (Beale writes underneath "Testified by Mr. Randolph, who wrote the lines above").—Fo. 124. De Jure Regni apud Scotos Dialogus. (George Buchanan and Thomas Metellanus are the interlocutors). Fo. 175–182. A Discourse in French (From the commencement and the ending, I recognize it to be the celebrated tract De la Servitude Volontaire, by Etienne de la Boetie, the friend of Montaigne). Fo. 216 to the end is another French tract against Mary of Scotland.

Vol. XLIX. Letter from Thomas, Duke of Norfolk, to Sir John Wallop and Sir Francis Brian, dated Lynn, 25th July. Sends a letter from the King to himself, to be read and returned. Asks them to find out how the King takes the breach of the truce with Scotland; if they find that he firmly sticks to the King, then to advance the same; if he would have the same renewed, then show him that he (Norfolk) has sent two posts with letters to the King's Highness for the same purpose, whereof he looks to have answer in 8 or 10 days.—Four original letters by Henry 8th to Sir F. Brian and Dr. E. Fox on an Embassy to the King of France. Minute of the King's letter to Dr. Bennet, 18th November 1532. Instructions to two cardinals for peace between England and France.—Original draft of letter by Benet to the King (partly from Innspruck and partly from Bologna) dated 2nd and 27th May. Tells of his interview with the Emperor on his way to the Pope from Henry.—Another with P.S. from E. Karne (date of 1530 indorsed). Another from E. Karne to the King from Venice, 1530. Letter from Benet to the Duke of Norfolk, from Rome, 7th Feb. 1532. Letter from Benet to the King, from Rome, 18 Sept. 1530 (8 pp.). Brian and Fox to the King, from St. Quintin, 28 Nov. 1531 (8 pp.). Draft of letter to my Lord of Winchester by the King (17 pp.) about a proposed meeting of the French King and the Emperor which Henry did not like. Instructions to Sir Henry Knyvett by the King about matters to be opened to the Queen of Navarre and afterwards to the Duke of Norfolk. Copy of Henry 8th's letter to his Ambassadors in France, the King of France having offered to mediate between the Kings of England and Scotland. Minutes of two of the King's letters to Fox (and I think Sir F. Brian). Tractatus depradationum, in Latin, à propos of a treaty of peace between France and England, 30 Aug. 1525. Treaties of peace in Latin between England and France, 1526–1527. Notes for a Treaty between England and France, 1596. Papers relating to Spain and the Spanish Match, &c., &c.

Vol. LXVIII. This volume contains, inter alia, an address (in upwards of 60 leaves) by George Cary, ambassador to France, to King James. It seems to be about the relations between England and Venice.—The rather rude tract called Tom Tell Troth.—A discourse concerning the Palsgrave's accepting the Crown of Bohemia.—The lady Elizabeth's answer to Sir Thomas Pope sent to her by Queen Mary, concerning marrying with the elect King of Sweden, made at Hatfield, 26 April 1558 (by Sir T. Pope). Short treatises on war between Great Britain and Spain (temp. James 1) and two on the same subject by Sir Charles Cornwallis and Sir W. Raleigh. Questions propounded by Queen Mary, and answered by her Council, touching the continuance of a treaty made by Henry 8th with the Emperor and the King of France. Copy of the Bull for Henry 8th's second marriage. The advice of the Lord Gray, Sir Francis Knollys, and Sir J. Norris, and others touching the means fittest to be obtained for defence of the realm.

Vol. LXIX. The first article in this volume is a copy on 11 leaves, of a Latin treatise. It is headed LH.S. N.R.I. It begins Cum instigante humani generis inimico . . . . miles quidam nobilis et legum expertissimus exulantes more apud Scotos in suam fidelitatem ad Christianissimum Regem Angliæ H. 6 perseverans, &c. It is a defence of the right of Henry 6th to the Crown of England in opposition to the claim of Edward Earl of March. From the nature, language, and arguments, I think it is the long lost Latin treatise by Sir John Fortescue. It is a neat transcript of the 16th century.—Castra Regis. This is a treatise addressed to Queen Elizabeth by Roger Edwards, dated 10 Kal. Jan. 1568; and he argues against the necessity of providing for the succession to the Crown. (This was printed by the Roxburghe Club.)—Accounts of the rebellion and trial of Robert Earl of Essex.—The Pope's excommunications of Christian princes unlawful. (A note by Beale says that it was made by Dr. Hamond at the request of the Lord Treasurer, before the setting forth of the book called Justitia Britannica.) Copies of the Pope's briefs to the Prince of Wales, 1623.—An apology of the Earl of Essex against those which falsely and maliciously tax him to be the only hindrance to the peace and quiet of the country. (To Mr. Anthony Bacon.) A letter from the Queen to the Justices of the Peace for General Musters (endorsed, May 25, 1574) and another to the Lord Deputy of Ireland touching the preparations of Spain.

Vol. LXX. A large collection of papers, temp. Elizabeth, in matters of religion. A brief sum of the Examination of John Penry, by Mr. Vynahawe and Mr. Yonge, and papers and letters by Penry. Certain notes of Dr. Hamond (out of Hamond's autograph R.B.) The History of matters touching the Book of Common Prayer (also from Hamond's autograph). A conference at Lambeth about things to be reformed in the Book of Common Prayer. Copy of Petition of the inhabitants of the parish of South Farnham, in the Co. of Surrey, to the Bishop of Winchester, for spiritual instruction. (Beale's note is that it was exhibited by Sir William Moore. For in the Parliament time, 1583, he shewed it unto me, subscribed with many hands; but nevertheless the Bishop hath referred nothing.) Petition of the same to the same against their vicar. (Beale adds "no redress.") Papers about John Udall, and a letter sent by him to Sir Walter Raleigh, asking Sir Walter to intercede with the Queen for him, and to get his punishment commuted from death to banishment. Dated from the White Lyon, 22 Feb. 1590. John Hodgkin's arraignment upon the statute of 23 Eliz. 1589 for printing of his Mistimaus (sic). (It seems that the author was Job Throgmorton of the Co. of Warwick. The confessions of Symon and Tomkins were obtained by racking and great torment.) A project for the increase of the number of preachers, 1575. (Beale adds "out of a book of Mr. Secretary Walsingham.)—The Lords of the Council to the Benchers of the Inns of Court to expel Puritans out of Commons, 20 May 1569.—An Act to compel spiritual persons to grant the copies of libels to any person for any cause. (Beale's note is "out of an old printed book, temp. H. 7). —Interrogatories to and answer of Mr. Cartwright.

Vol. LXXI. A large 4to. vellum, 16 century. An oration made by the Lord Keeper to the Queen's Majesty in her gallery at Westminster, exhorting her to marriage. Copies of speeches by the Lord Keeper to the Queen, to the Council, and others on various occasions; and other speeches.

Vol. LXXII. The first 14 folios are occupied with tracts for bettering the condition of the Church; thence to fo. 90 are extracts from Hall's Chronicle, and various later chronicles of English History, &c. Then follows Wolsey's Life, by George Cavendish, and two other papers about Wolsey.—Copies of four or five letters by Henry 8th to Sir F. Brian.—Of the divorce of Henry 8th from Queen Katherine; begins, It is an old true said saw, gentle reader, that truth is the daughter of time. (8 pp.) The 1st book of the treatise touching the pretended divorce between Henry 8th and Queen Katherine; begins, Forasmuch as the matter is incident to the life and doings of Sir Thomas More. The 2nd book begins, We will the first bogin with the said Egidius, and with the better will, because we shall have occasion to have and supply somewhat to the Bishop's answer touching John Bakon, of whom Egidius speaketh . . . who was clapp'd and whisked out of Rome as our named English translator doth translate the said Latin booke. The end of the Prologue states the three books. The 1st book contains Reasons gathered to maintain the marriage, with the answer of the Bishop of Rochester to the late book printed in England for maintaining the censures of the Universities, which we have compendiously gathered out of a book by him in Latin, never, as far as we know, printed. The 2nd book contains Our own Censures of Egidius de Bellamera, M. Mantua, Mr. Wakefield, and the English Dialogue, &c. The 3rd book discourses upon Acts of Parliament, &c.—Life of Sir Thomas More, and begins, This excellent and peerless man.

Vol. LXXIII. A volume of the latter end of the 15 century, 72 leaves. It contains copies of Italian letters from Hieronymum Georgius to the Doge of Venice. Some notices of England occur. The 1st letter is dated 14 Sept. 1485, and the last is 24 Sept. 1487; but a quire or quires at the end are wanting.

In Vol. LXXIV. to LXXXI. there is nothing apparently relating to this country, except copies in Vol. LXXV. of confirmations by Julius 2 of treaty of marriage between the daughter of the King of the Romans and the King of England. Treaty of peace between England and France. These volumes are of the 16th century, and some are in Italian.

Vol. LXXXII. is a copy of Bird's (or Doddridge's) Magazine of Honour. It has been printed in 1642, and there were several re-issues with new title pages.

Vol. LXXXIV. Latin diary of proceedings in the time of Pope Alexander 6. A transcript of the 16th century.

Vol. LXXXV. This volume consists of 34 original letters by Lord Buckhurst, and copies of some others addressed by him to Walsingham, the Earl of Leicester, the Council, the Queen, &c., besides other papers about the Low Countries. The earliest letter by Buckhurst is dated 26th March 1586, and the last in June 1587. I do not know whether they have been used for historical purposes.

Vol. LXXXVI. A volume of the 16th century. It contains copies of the Declaration of the title of Henry 6 to the Duchies of Normandy, Guyenne, and Gascony. The declaration of Sir John Fortescue upon certain writings sent out of Scotland. Treaty of peace between the Kings of England and France;—Statutes for the army of Henry 6 in France, and other papers on the claim of the Kings of England to the Crown of France.

Vol. LXXXVII. At fo. 271 is an Italian Relazione d'Inghilterra, by Giovanni Michelli, A.D. 1557.

Vol. LXXXVIII. A paper volume of 48 leaves, composed in 1599 by Thomas Brudencll. It contains the creations and arms of the nobility of England from William 1st to Queen Elizabeth.

Vol. LXXXIX. From fo. 87 to fo. 121 is an interesting account in Italian by the Cavalier Barducci of the movements in Ireland effected by Pope Gregory XIII. against Queen Elizabeth. The narrative begins in the year 1578. Barducci was one of the principal agents in Ireland.—Italian accounts of trade in England.—Translation of the Sultan's letter to Queen Elizabeth.

Vols. XC. and XCI. A great number of documents, some original and some copies, concerning the Low Countries in 1586 and 1587.

Vol. XCII. Original instructions to Robert Beale, with the autographs of Queen Elizabeth and W. Davison. It is about an intended assembly at Madgburg to consider such as were not of the Augustin confession, and to prevent it.—A great number of letters and papers, some in Latin and some in Dutch, on religious matters from Brandenburg, Brunswick, Saxony, and Wittenberg; and the Negotiations of Sir Thomas Smith for the restitution of Calais.

Vol. XCIII. A collection of 80 copies of records from Hen. 3 to Hen. 6. These relate to English persons and places and foreign states in relation with England; and are chiefly of a mercantile nature.

Vol. XCV. A 4to volume of the 17th century. In this are copies of several papers connected with Sir Isaac Wake's embassy to Venice in 1627, and to Switzerland and elsewhere; and Sir Dudley Carleton's embassies.

Vol. XCVIII. In this volume is another copy of Michele's Relasione d'Inghilterra, in three parts; and a short extract from another Relazione in 1551. (16th century.)

Vol. XCIX. Humphry Lloyd's collection of the history of Wales. (This has been printed.)

Vol. C. Proceedings in the Parliament at Oxford, 1 Car. 1.

Vol. CI. A 4to volume. General Musters, with the furniture of 24 of the Queen's ships, 1573 and 1574.

Vol. CII. Life (in Latin) of Mary, Queen of England, by Robert Wingfield of Brantham (40 folios). Begins Rex Edwardus ejus nomine sextus. Ends his saltem impedimento sit.

Vol. CIII. Copies of documents in the 16th century regarding our mercantile relations with Denmark.

Vol. CIV. A volume of the 17th century. Sir Robert Cotton's answer to certain propositions of peace and war.

Vol. CV. A 4to volume containing a tract printed by John Day, 1561, (3 leaves and 22 pages). Forma politica ecclesiastica nuper constituta Londoniæ in Cætu Gallorum, N. Gallasio auctore. And two other MS. tracts on religion written in Italian, 16th century.

Vol. CVI. A 4to volume, 17th century. A treatise on the Court of Chancery (67 fos.).

Vol. CVII. A 4to volume, 16th century. A small treatise directed to the Queen (Elizabeth) against Mary Queen of Scots. (This is also in a preceding volume.)

Vol. CVIII. A brief discourse against succession known. A 4to, of the 16th century, 21 leaves, against trying to settle the Succession to Queen Elizabeth.

Vol. CIX. Copies of Commissions and other documents regarding maritime matters between this country and France at the end of the 16th century. A 4to. volume, 17th century.

Vol. CX. In this volume are copies of Parliamentary proceedings in the reigns of James 1st and Charles 1st; and of petitions to parliament in 1576, by certain preachers in Norwich against ceremonies insisted on by the Bishop, of whom they complain.—A supplication by the celebrated William Stubbs to the Queen, 1589. Beale in a note says that it was drawn by Stubbs to be exhibited to the parliament. Collections of pedigrees and notes to illustrate tenure by Barony. Copies of tracts by Sir R. Cotton. Observations touching the Bishop's articles, by T. N.—Original letter by Lord Burghley to Beale, asking his answer to seven questions about the papal authority here and elsewhere. Beale gives his reply in 20 leaves. An original letter from Burghley thanks Beale for his answers.—Papers on Musters and Supplies for the navy. Mr. Herbert's convention with the King of Denmark, 1583.—Avis au roy de la Grande Bretagne, par M. d'Aubigny.

Vol. CXI. Treatises on Parliament. Arguments in a Law Case. Relation of the proceedings against Ambassadors that exceed their commission, by Sir Robert Cotton. Notes concerning a Treaty and League, offensive and defensive, between Her Majesty and the French King. (This is indorsed A discourse of R. Beale, how Her Majesty and the French King deal with the Princes of Germany.)

Vol. CXV. Account of all Offices in the King's Gift. This is of the time of James 1st.

Vol. CXVI. A treatise on the Monarchical Government of this Kingdom. (17th century, on 60 leaves.)

Vol. CXVII. In this volume are three leaves of Latin, giving a description of James 1st, followed by five leaves in Italian, giving an account of the Powder Plot.

Vol. CXXI. contains copies of various speeches by Sir Christopher Yelverton, (temp. Elizabeth), on divers occasions during his legal career.

Vol. CXXII. A treatise on Parliament, 17th century.

Vol. CXXIII. A 4to volume, being a treatise concerning Enclosure, dedicated to Sir H. Yelverton, by Adam Moore. It is an apology for the King's enclosure of King's Sedgmoor, in the county of Somerset.

Vol. CXXIX. At fo. 30 is a Declaration of the True Causes of the Great Troubles supposed to be intended against the realm of England, wherein the indifferent reader shall manifestly perceive by whom and by what means the realm is brought into those pretended troubles. Seene and allowed. A.D. 1592.—Franciaci Baldwini consilia pro regina Angliæ. (This is a Latin treatise on the validity of the marriage of Henry 8th with Catherine.)—A dialogue intituled Causa pacis Angliæ; dedicated to Robert Dudley, Earl of Leicester, London, 13 Dec. 1576, by Roger Edwardes. (It is apparently for assuring the Succession to the Throne.)—A tract on the Union of both Kingdoms (England and Scotland). I think it is of the time of Elizabeth.

Vol. CXXX. Copies of Royal and other letters, petitions, and papers relating to the Hanse Towns, the Merchants of the Stillyard, the Merchant Adventurers, &c., for the last 30 years of the 16th century; and an original Council Letter.

Digitized by Google

Vol. CXXXI. This contains papers, some original, about the Merchant Adventurers in 1576, and Beale's mission to Flanders. Letter from Queen Elizabeth (signed by her) to Philip of Spain, 19 Jan. 1562. (It is written by Ascham, and signed by him.) Letter of Philip of Spain (signed by him) in reply to one of the Queen, dated 17 Dec. then last. Causes why the Earl of Leicester thought himself not well dealt withal by the Lord Buckhurst (fol. 51–79). At fol. 79, "Out of this "book, was collection made by Sir Thomas Heneage, "Vice-Chamberlain, and Sir F. Walsingham of certain "points to charge the Lord Buckhurst, whereto he made "certain answers by word of mouth, which being made "to the Earl of Leicester, he made the reply which fol- "loweth;" then follows (fol. 81) the reply of the Earl of Leicester. (These, I suppose, are in 1586 or 1587.) A memorial for Sir Francis Vere to deal with the States (this is a draft corrected by Beale), and other papers (down to fol. 149) about the States, at the same period. A treatise by a Burgess of Parliament to show that the proceedings of the Archbishop of Canterbury against the poor ministers are unlawful, 154–211. (This is probably by Beale, as it is corrected and interlined by him.) After some papers on church matters and Ireland, comes a copy of letter by Beale to the Lord Treasurer, in 1596, about the report that his office of Clerk of the Council was to be given to Mr. Smith, servant to the Earl of Essex, and that he was to go to York.—An accomt of the exchequer.

Vol. CXXXII. This volume is about the Scotch Church. It contains answer by the Scotch ministers in England to a letter subscribed by certain of the flock in Scotland, 1584.—The Book of Discipline (Beale's note is "pagina 540 in the printed copy, and to the ende "about 50 leaves)." . . The 4to book of the progress and continuance of true religion. (About 100 leaves full of historical matter.) Scotch letters of John Knox. Miscellaneous collections of Scotch history, from Edw. I. (by Beale).—Treason pretended against the King of Scots by certain lords and gentlemen whose names hereafter followe, with a declaration of the King's Majesty's intention to his last Acts of Parliament, which openeth fully in effect all the said conspiracy; out of Skottish into English. Imprinted at London for Thomas Nelson, and are to be solde at the west ende of Paule's, 1585 (in 12mo).

Vol. CXXXIII. Among some Italian treatises is a short Relazione d'Inghilterra, of apparently the 16th century (fol. 85–89).

Vol. CXXXIV. contains nothing of importance, and the next six volumes are in Italian, and contain nothing relating to England except a Relazione d'Inghilterra, in 1607, by Nicola Molino, and another, in 1610, by Francesco Contarini; both of these are in CXXXVIII.

Vol. CXLI. The imputations against the Duke of Somerset are said, by Beale, to be taken out of a book of Sir Thomas Smith. Papers about trade, and the stilyard merchants of the Hanse. Note of Sir Francis Drake's voyage, 1585, 1586, begun the 27th of August, having despatch from Her Majesty (3½ pp.). At fol. 175 is a copy of letter by Elizabeth to the Dey. Papers concerning the merchants trading to the parts of the Levant and the Signiory of Venice, fol. 176–207. Among these is copy of Council letter, 1582, about Acerbo Velutella and his oil. Draft of Queen Elizabeth's passport for Don Antonio (23 Elizabeth), with autograph note by Burghley. Accounts of expenses for Don Antonio, by order of Walsingham (the total was 1,925*l.* 4*s.* 7*d.*).

Vol. CXLII. All about Low Country affairs and the proceedings between the Earl of Leicester and Lord Buckhurst; several of the documents are original.—Fol. 33. One page in Burghley's writing.—A letter by Count Maurice of Nassau to the Earl of Leicester. Original letter from the States General. Letters by Thomas Wylkes (1588), Lord Willoughby (1588–90), and Davison (1584) to Walsingham and Leicester; Thomas Digges and Stephen Powle (1587) to Walsingham.

Vol. CXLIII. This contains several original letters from Princes and States to Queen Elizabeth; two by Frederick, King of Denmark, have his autograph. Copies of orations from foreign emissaries to Elizabeth, and of letters by Beale to the Princes of Germany. Religious matters are the subject of the latter portion of the volume.

Vol. CXLIV. Negotiations of Mr. Beale, Mr. James, and others, concerning the Low Countries, with original letters and other instruments. There is a copy of Leicester's resignation of the Governorship of the Low Countries, dated 17 Dec. 1587, with his autograph, or a fac-simile of it. A letter by Elizabeth to the States, 23 July 1587; and a letter by Elizabeth to Killigrew and Beale, 1 Aug. 1587; both are in French, and have her autograph. A letter from Burghley and Walsingham to Killigrew. Answer to the Earl of Leicester's requests (3 pp. in Burghley's writing). Copy of Instructions to Sir John Norris. Considerations in what character the Queen shall enter into the defence of Holland (3 pp. in Burghley's writing). Instructions for Norris; with a note by Burghley. Original letter from the States to the Queen.

Vol. CXLVI. All in Italian. At fo. 312 is a letter by the Duc d'Ossuna to James 1st, 1618. It is about the desire by the Venetians to hire ships and troops out of England.

Vol. CXLVIII. All in Italian. At fo. 192 is a long discussion of the question whether Pope Paul the 5th should allow a marriage between the sister of the Grand Duke of Tuscany (a Catholic) and the son of the King of England (a heretic).

Vol. CL. All in Italian. At fo. 386 is a Relazione d'Inghilterra, by Cardinal Bentivoglio; in cap. 4 he says that the King (James 1st) is 46 years old; he describes the King's person; describes political parties, and the state of religion in Scotland. (Printed among the Cardinal's works.)

Vol. CLVIII. This contains an Italian account of the island of Malta, by Giovanni Battista Leoni; it is addressed to the Pope, and dated from Rome. 1608 (24 folios).

Vol. CLX. All in Italian. At fo. 127 is a Relazione d'Inghilterra, by Marc Antonio Correro (temp. James 1st. See the preface to the Italian relation of England, printed for the Camden Society in 1847).

Vol. CLXI. There are two volumes thus numbered. The first is not described in the printed Catalogue; it is of the 16th century. The first six leaves are occupied with Instructions for a principal Secretarie, observed by R. B. (Robert Beale?) for Sir Edward Wotton, A.D. 1592. The following 450 leaves are occupied with copies of letters by and to Beale, and Instructions, all official. The second of these volumes is nearly all in Beale's writing, and on all imaginable subjects concerning him as Clerk. It has his autograph signature, and the date of 1572 is on the cover.

Vol. CLXII. Annales Cambriæ, ignoti autoris. Begins Anno . . Mortalitas magna fuit in Britannia, pro quâ Calwaladei filius Calwalini in minorem Britanniam anfugit. Ends (fo. 25) Anno 1286, Combustio domorum apud Stratam Floridam. Autor hujus historiæ hic in calce addidit hæc verba Non inveni plus. Extracts from Chronicle of W. Thorne, fo. 45,—from book of the Priory of Bermondsey, near London, fo. 57. A Baronage, in pedigrees, 2 pages for each, fo. 63–128. At fo. 161, Sundrie reportes of the countrie which Sir H. Gilbert goeth to discover. It contains the examination of David Ingram, the reports of Vererhauns, Jacques Cartier, John Barres, Andrew Thevett, and John Walker, of which number Sir H. Gilbert did confer in person with the three last. Accounts of other voyages. Translation of a letter written by Pedro Destrade (who was with the Spanish Armada) to his brother. He says the number of ships was 146, and gives an account of the fight (5 pp.).

Vol. CLXIII. English Negotiations with Denmark 1599. Heads of a league between Elizabeth and the princes professing the Gospel. Instructions by the Earl of Essex and Lord Howard for officers of the Navy. Journal of the Spanish actions under the Earl of Essex and the Lord High Admiral, 1596. Relations of the Cadiz voyages in 1596 and 1625 (the latter is by Capt. John Rous).

Vol. CLXIV. All in Italian. At fo. 173 is a Relazione d'Inghilterra by Daniel Barbaro, 1552, and at fo. 227 is another by an unknown author, temp. Elizabeth. (Both these are noticed in the preface to the Camden Society's volume, previously referred to.) Names of the forts and ports of England, fo. 232–245.

Vol. CLXVI. Copies of treaties and papers relating to trade with the East Indies and the States, temp. James 1st. The Negotiations of Sir Robert Cecil, secretary to Sir John Herbert, in France, 1538, &c.

A medical recipe book.

17. Vellum, 9¼ in. by 6¾, written in England towards the middle of the XVth century, with a few ornamental borders; containing—

The Statutes of the Realm, from 5 Edw. III. to 4 Hen. V. [1331–1416], in French. Imperfect.

All the manuscripts are in good condition; a few want binding. Lord Calthorpe kindly gave me the use of his private room for the purpose of examining his very valuable collection; and for the comfort and convenience which he thus afforded I beg to tender my thanks.

ALFRED J. HORWOOD.

THE MANUSCRIPTS OF THE RIGHT HONOURABLE LORD WROTTESLEY, AT WROTTESLEY, STAFFORDSHIRE.

There are here many ancient deeds relating to lands in Staffordshire, principally referring to the manors of Wrottesley, Perton, Tettenhall, Wombortie, Orton, Onken, Pendeford, and Butterton. Amongst them is a deed of the 12th century, being a grant of Wrottesley and Levinton by the Abbat and Convent of Evesham to Simon, son of William de Coetuna, in consideration whereof Simon quitclaims to them certain lands in Morton, Norton, and Hamton. The seal is gone. This is the title deed of the manor, by which it is held by the present possessor. In the same box, and forming part of the anterior title to the manor, is an ancient copy of a very curious deed, dated 1088, in which Robert de Stafford grants Wrottesley and Livinton to Walter the Abbot and monks of Evesham, by the advice of the Bishop of Chester, who had enjoined it of him for a penance, he, Robert, being then sick and shorn a monk of Evesham. The boundaries of Wrottesley are added in Saxon. This deed is not in the Monasticon.

An exemplification, dated 11 Kalends of May, 19 Edward 2, by John, Abbat of Evesham. He says that they have in the treasury a deed, which is set forth, being a convention between Reginald, Abbat of Evesham, and the convent, and Robert Duneham, regarding certain land called Livintone. He says, "sine dubio de "verbo ad verbum talis est litera que manet penes "nos."

Most of the deeds and letters were placed by the late Lord Wrottesley in canvas bags, distinguished by numbers, and some of the letters are arranged in numerical order; and there are manuscript memorials of the family compiled by him, which refer by this means to the letters. The most ancient deeds are kept in small japanned tin boxes. These extend over the 12th, 13th, and 14th centuries; amongst them are some grants of the 12th century, made to the Priory of Dudley, and the original deed by which Hugh de Wrottesley, temp. Hen. 3, compounds for his estate for the sum of 60 marks under the terms of the Dictum of Kenilworth. There are likewise several royal grants by Edward 3 to Sir Hugh Wrottesley, one of the original Knights of the Garter, amongst them a pardon under the Great Seal for having killed John de Perton, granted in consequence of Sir Hugh's services "in partibus trans- "marinis."

In bag 2 are many deeds of the 15th century; and a license from Henry 8 to Richard Wrottesley to wear his bonnet at Court, because of his having an infirmity in his head. Dated 4th March 1515. And a few years earlier in date (1501, I think) is a royal authority to raise men against the Scots.

In bag 3 is a large parchment roll about a foot broad, written in the early part of the 14th century, containing the early history of England down to the Heptarchy, with a list of Kings down to Edward 1; it contains at great length the claim of Edward 1 to the seigneury of Scotland, and appears to be copied from one of the documents issued by that monarch and promulgated amongst the religious houses. From other evidences on the roll, it appears to have originally belonged to the monastery of Burton; and

A long copy, on parchment, of the foundation of a Chantry at Bilston.

In bag 3* is a list of the names of the bailiffs for Staffordshire and Warwickshire, 1581.

Sept. 25, 1601. Seisdon Hundred. A note of all those that be there with private arms (7 pp.).

In bag 12* is a letter of Attorney by Sir Walter Wrottesley. Seal, in red wax, of beautiful execution, containing arms, crest, supporters, and legend, and a small crest impressed at the back. The date is 11 Edward 4. It was in this year that the Earl of Warwick reinstated Hen. 6, and Sir Walter Wrottesley held Calais as the Earl's Lieutenant.

Perambulation of the manor of Perton and Trescott.

Inventory of the goods of Eliz. Wrottesley, widow of John Wrottesley, 1592.

In bag 3* is an inventory of furniture in the Bell Inn at Reading, 13 Edw. 4.

In bag 3 are some bills of the 17th century; one dated 1611 shows the price of black satin to have been then 13s. 8d. the yard, and a quarter and a half of black silk 10½d.

In bag 12 are numerous patterns, pinned on paper, of satin and plush and broad cloth brought by Thomas Sheldon from Coventry in 1641.

The letters numbered 139 and 140 are from John Duddeley, afterwards Duke of Northumberland, to Walter Wrottesley. In the second the writer says, "My father "was a Rotesley man." There are other letters from the same writer, and they appear to throw much light upon the question of his parentage, which has hitherto puzzled historians.

The letters of the 17th century are numerous, chiefly of a business nature, but many containing points of interest.

9 Jan. 1617. J. Richards to H. Wrottesley. "You "know your son is to beare a parte in a plee (play) to be "acted here; he has no clothes;" Mr. Parke willed me "to write for to have these things following to be sent "him,—a gowne, a peticote, a wastoote, a curle, & "some jewells."

Coventry, June 31, 1630. Samuel Foster to Sir Hugh Wrottesley. He relates how a week before breaking up at Christmas Sir Hugh's son shut up the school room and kept the place half a day and a night, shot a pistol at him, wounding him in the thigh and legs, and damaged his dress; he asks 10l. for remuneration.

London, near Essex Gate, 1632. Sir Willm. Dovereux to Sir Hugh Wrottesley. Understands that somebody had possessed him that Sir Thos. Blother of the Privy Chamber offered him to be a Baronet for 300l., and that the King would make many for 200l. or 300l.; that the King was reserved; one offered 800l. and could not get it. Thought he had performed the office of brother in getting it for him for 500l.; if he had not been brother-in-law, and a descendant of a founder of the Garter, he had not gotten it so low.

In 1641 the King's need of money was great, and the following letter shows by what means dignities were dispensed:—

March 6, 1641 (letter 58). J. Skeffington to Walter Wrottesley. Asks for two large trees; offers a baronetcy; the King having given a warrant with liberty to nominate a gentleman whom he or I think fit; gives him the first offer for 500l.

On the 10th of the same month (No. 59), Thomas Pudsey (dating from Essex House) advises Walter W. not to think of the Baronetcy. "It is thought those which "have been made shall be cauld in question, and "nothing shall be done but by Parliament. The King "is gone, as we heare, for Yorke, & so for Scotland. "Many of the Lords have been with him to intreat "him to come to the towne, but all will not do. It is "reported that he will not come to the towne until the "Queen doth return, and that she hath made him take "an oath (oath); but he has taken the prince along "with him, which the Parliament are very sorry for if. "This day there is 81 French cummaunders that were "taken about Bristoe that should agone to the rebels "into Ireland, and now are coming for London to be "examined, and some ships are taken to relieve the "rebels, which had 3,000 arms in them."

In letter 60 the Baronetcy is declined, as the times are dangerous.

A letter, 1637 (June), requiring particulars of a person brought from London who was suspected (of the plague).

Several letters from Marc Antonio Cæsar Galiardello.

Copy of letter, 29 Sept. 1640, by Walter Wrottesley to Sir Wm. Devereux. The deputy lieutenants hear from the Lord Lieutenant that the King is to summon a Parliament, and that his Lordship leaves the selection of Knights of the Shire to the country's free choice. Asks him to let him know his Lordship's desire, and he will endeavour to forward it.

1640, Feb. 10. J. Byrche to W. Wrottesley. "The "Parliament goes on well (blessed be God). The buy-"sines of the Bishops is nowe in agittacion. On Wed-"nesday senight is my Lord Strafford's buysines. I "think that hee will be setled agayne at Wolver-"hampton."

1641, Jan. 28 (No. 55). Copy of letter to Mr. Crompton by Mr. Croxon, touching a meeting about the safety of the country. Hears that in London people meeting in the streets ask whether they will be for King or Parliament.

1641, Feb. 9. Thomas Pudsey, Essex House, to Walter Wrottesley. "Strafford's tryal will be to-"morrow senet. It is thought he will not come off "well, for the axe or the rope may serve his turne. "The Bishop of Oxford is dead, and our bishop is not "well, and I think all have quesie stomachs, for they "stand upon their good behaviour; for in the house "some are for Bishops and some for none, and if there "be any they are to be alowed a particklar stipant, "so that their pride will be abated. The Prince of "Orange's son is to come over very shortly and marry "with our King's eldest daughter; the rightings are "drawn all redy."

1641, Feb. 11. Thos. Crompton to Walter W. Gives newes not in the Diurnall. The Queen intends speedily to go to Holland with her daughter. On Tuesday, as it is reported, 4,000 Kentish men, horse and foot, came thro' London, and went to the Parl. House. They had all papers in their hatts, but the superscription as yet to us unknown. It is imagined they came on behalf of Sir E. Dering, Knight of the Shire, many being sorry for the censure and imprisonment upon him.

From the letter numbered 63, it appears that in 1642 "a piece of scarlet" of 1¼ yards was 4l. 10s. in price, and plush 27 shillings a yard. No crimson in guinea plush or velvet was good. The King gave audience to the Lord of Holland at Burnsley on Saturday. The King is looked for at Lustux to-night, and I believe will be there if things be not accommodated, for he is resolved to proceed with the army, and so is the Parliament with the militia.

1642, July 26 (No. 64). Essex warns Walter W. against having anything to do with the army, as it is illegal.

1642, Aug. 30 (No. 65). From Robert Hanbury. "London and all the country round is very resolute and

" corageous for the King and Parliament, and my Lord " of Essex had inn honor as a weare a prince."

1642, Oct. 8 (No. 66). From John Byrche. His home has been plundered, his clothes, woollen, and linen taken. Hopes he shall have His Majesty moved for him.

1643, Jan. 6 (No. 67). Copy of letter, R. Leveson to Mr. Gray. The King is going to recover the county and town of Stafford. His Majesty has commanded all gentry well affected to assist. Knowing he has received about 109 horse from his Majesty, asks for an answer by the bearer what assistance will be rendered.

1641, Dec. 10. From Thomas Crompton of London. The King is pleased with the entertainment in the City. Rewards and honours for the City.

1645. Letter from some officers at Stafford for contribution. The weekly pay of Wrottesley was assigned to them by the Commissioners, to pay officers and troops. For the neglect of payment they had fetched two persons (named) into Stafford, and they detained them for 41*l.* 19*s.* 9*d.* arrears, and asking Wrottesley to pay for the enlargement of his tenants.

1642. A letter from Mr. Birch to Sir E. Littleton. Has a note on the battle of Naseby. Losses on both sides.

1647, Jan. 18. From Richard Preston. "This day " Whitehall is made a garrison, and Mr. Cromwell is " master there, casting up works as fast as may be." Barnard Castle in Thames Street. Lord Pembroke's house, works at the Tower, Leadenhall, and Ely House expected to be others.

A news letter, dated Richmond, July 6 (1640). The prince marching towards York, Monday, July 1, the enemy raised their siege and went away. The prince marched towards them. Marquis of Newcastle went towards Fairfax's tent, and found 4,000 pair of boots and shoes and 3 mortars, &c. On Tuesday the prince attacked the enemy 3 or 4 miles from York; was defeated. Wednesday the prince was advised to retreat. The enemy summoned York to surrender, but were defied. The enemy retired. The writer adds "This " is verbatim of what I could remember of Dr. Lewin's " letter to his wife."

1648, Jan. 30 (No. 79). Letter from L. Lee to Sir Walter Wrottesley. In a postscript (in rather a tremulous hand) he says that going to send this letter he met multitudes coming from Whitehall with sorrowful hearts, bewailing the King's death, who said they saw his head cut off. God in mercy look upon this miserable kingdom.

1665, June 3 (No. 84). John Haltam, London, to Sir Walter W. He mentions the sickness; 17 in the whole the last week; more is expected to be in the next bill; has not yet heard of any dead this week in his parish of St. Clement. Speaking of the fashions of clothes, he says, "Sir, it is not generall for cloke bagg britches as " it was when you were in London last; wyde britches " with ribanes is much worne." Our navy being engaged with the Dutch ever since yesterday morning, and it is very much affirmed this afternoon that our English navy hath absolutely routed the Dutch.

1665, June 6 (No. 85). From J. Haltam. No express; for the Duke yet about the fight with the Dutch; one was with the King this day which came from sea, and delivered on oath that there was nine Dutch shippes together burning.

June 8 (No. 86), Clement's Inn. From H. Fryth. This day at noon an express from the Duke of a glorious victory. The writer gives the effect out of the particulars.

Letters numbered 170 and 171 in division 24 are from Ursula Wolryche to her daughter, Lady Wrottesley. She says . . . some of your news I hard, as concerning Nell Gwine. They say there is the greatest galantry may be in towne; silver and gould lace all over the peticotes and the bodies of their gounes; but sleeves and skirtes blake; abundance of curles very small on their heads, and very fine their heads dressed.

The second of these letters is very copious for dress.

Holograph letter by Sir W. Dugdale, 27 Sept. 1672, addressed to Sir Walter Wrottesley. Dugdale's son has gone to London with the Lord Keeper's youngest son. Remarks on Croxden Abbey, and a tithe suit; " about 2 years since there was a suit of a like nature " in the Exchequer by an impropriator for tithes of " land belonging to that abbey; I got the land holden " excepted. Though the abbey was of the Cistercian " Order, yet it was one of the lesser houses dissolved " in 27 H. 8, and hath not by that Act any benefit of " the privilege. Therefore it was a nice point (which " the Lord Chief Baron, as great a lawyer as he was,) " knew not off."

Another holograph letter by Sir W. Dugdale, dated Oct. 3, 1672, showing that Croxden is of the Cistercian Order, the clause in the 27 Henry 8, and the King's special letters patent in 29 Henry 8, whereby it came to have the benefit of that Act in 30 Hen. 8, upon the general dissolution of all the great monasteries.

Some armourers' bills for the year 1644.—List of names of gentlemen and yeomen of Seisden hundred who stand charged with private armour for His Majesty's use, and showed the same completely furnished; taken by Walter Wrottesley, one of the Deputy Lieutenants, 24 January and 15 July 1641. (6 pages.)

1640, July 4. Indentures of 300 footmen impressed for the King. (2 skins.)

Notes of the King's speech, 1642, Sept. 2.—Orders for regulating the association of the north-western part of the county of Worcester.

In bag 12* is an agreement in 1634, by John Hodges, cutler, of Wolverhampton, to keep in repair Walter Wrottesley's armour in the hall at Wrottesley for 3*l.* per annum. There were two horsemen's armours and two pair of pistols, two pair of gauntlets, arms for 10 footmen, and 12 pikes; 12 muskets, 12 rests, 12 sets of bandoliers to them; 4 calivers, 4 sets of bandoliers, and 4 head pieces to them; 12 halbeards, 12 head pieces to them; 40 swords, and 40 belts to them; powder match, bullets, and 4 pair of bullet moulds; all which furniture is of complete munition for forty men.

1643. A paper of this date, showing that when plate was to be coined into money, 4*s.* 10*d.* was given for plate without sother, and 4*s.* 8*d.* when sother.

In bag 25 is a list of presents to Walter Wrottesley during his shrievalty, consisting of flesh, fish, wines, sugar, &c. (Indorsed 1618.)

In bag 14 is a list of armour and arms at the Hall in 1642,

And a list of the furniture in the old house in 1635.

In bag 18 are some rentals; the first is of 15 Edw. 3.

In bag 27 are letters. One of 1637, by the Bishop of Bath and Wells, to Walter Wrottesley; he sends Joice Hunniman, accused of being a witch, and so slandered; asks that he will examine her and do justice.

Another, same to the same, thanks him for his attention in the matter of Hunniman; abuses certain apparitors who go about frightening the people.

A letter from Ambrose Gray, of Enyill, asking Walter Wrottesley to grant a warrant to take some other person in lieu of one of Gray's workmen, who had been impressed.

A letter from Robert Haynes (Immanuel written at the top, see Shakespere's Hen. 6, part 2, act 4, sc. 2.), sending swans; a pair cost twelve shillings.

Two or three letters touch on engagements with the Dutch in 1666.

A warrant in 1670 to levy fines for attending conventicles; one of 20*l.* and three of 4*s.*

In bag 3 is a certificate, dated 1485, by Isabella, prioress of Brewood, and several other persons, including Hugh Wrottesley, that John Coll, junior, had died and was taken to the church at Tatenhall, and was buried at the altar of the convent of Brewood.

The letters and papers of the 17th century are very numerous, chiefly of the time of Walter, afterwards Sir Walter Wrottesley, who seems to have kept everything addressed to him.

There is a bundle of proclamations (printed), temp. Charles 1, and a large printed broadsheet, advising the subject to obtain a grant of free warren, and showing the advantages and privileges of it. The office for grants was at Sir William Bretton's house in Drury Lane.

In bag 3 also is a list of the trained horse for the county of Stafford, taken at Stafford 5 June, and at Lichfield 2 October 1634. In this list the gentry of the of the county are divided into cuirassiers or light horse, according to the amount of their lands.

There are also a few letters of the 18th century in division 24. One is from Sir John Wrottesley to his wife, from the camp at Hill Gate, Long Island, Sept. 3, 1776, giving an account of a victory over the (American) rebels. And another, dated Sept. 22, 1776, dated from New York Island, giving an account of further successes.

Two letters, giving an account of his son John Wrottesley's rebellion in Westminster school.

A letter in French, dated 1788, from De Pignerolle, of Angers, to Sir John Wrottesley. He says that M. Perignant, the banker, has informed him from Paris that his (Sir John Wrottesley's) son was to pay 200 louis yearly, as Mr. Wesley did; this he says is not enough. Mr. Wesley had no servant, and your son has one. (This Mr. Wesley was afterwards the Duke of Wellington.)

A letter from Wm. Pitt to Sir John Wrottesley, dated 28 Oct. 1800, asking him to move the address to the King. The importance and high price of corn is much dwelt on.

There is in this collection an early Roll (written about the time of Henry 5, or beginning of the reign of Henry 6) of the statutes of the Order of the Garter, and a subsidy roll for Staffordshire of 7 Hen. 7.

In the library is a manuscript copy of Erdeswick's Survey of Staffordshire, which seems to have belonged to Camden. This copy could not be found when Harwood edited Erdeswick's Survey in 1844.

There is also a folio volume of the Collections of John Humbach, whose labours are noticed by Harwood at p. lxi. of the preface to Erdeswick.

In conclusion, I must be permitted to express my thanks to Lord Wrottesley for his hospitality and kind attentions during my stay at his house.

ALFRED J. HORWOOD.

MANUSCRIPTS BELONGING TO THE RIGHT HONOURABLE LORD LEIGH.

Among the Manuscripts belonging to the Right Honourable Lord Leigh, is a very valuable Leger Book of the Monastery of Stoneley in Ardern, written in the 14th century. It was compiled by Thomas Pype, otherwise called Thomas de Weston, the eighteenth Abbot, who succeeded in 1352 to Robert de Athereston on his resignation of the Abbacy.

The compilation is dedicated to the Venerable Father in Christ Thomas de Haltone, Abbot of the Monastery of Stoneley in Ardern.* After giving his reasons for undertaking the work, he states that he has divided his work into four parts.

In the First Book he gives the descent or generation of the Kings of England from the earliest period down to his own time, together with a history of the Abbey of Radmore, which was afterwards removed to Stoneley, and copies of all charters granted to those two houses. To this he adds a brief account of the acts of the several Abbots of Stoneley, "A tempore fundationis " quod infra intitulabitur usque ad præsens videlicet " usque ad feriam quartam in festo Sancti Gregorii " Papæ anno M°CCC° nonagesimo secundo anno vero " domini Regis Angliæ Ricardi Secundi post conques- " tum sextodecimo."

The charters of each King are preceded by a brief sketch of his reign, and several historical episodes containing facts which the compiler had gathered from sources which were then extant, are interspersed in various parts of the volume.

Copies of some documents have been inserted long after the Manuscript was written, and the volume was used by Dugdale in his Monasticon; his notes extracted herefrom are at Oxford among the Ashmolean Manuscripts.

Although the compiler states in his preface that he has divided his work into four Books, yet this is the only one now known to exist, and it is probable that he died before he had completed the task he had imposed on himself.

He intended, it seems, to have devoted his second Book to charters and muniments relating to the ville of Startone, Cobynstone, Byrycote, Ascho, Wottonehille, Warwick, Coventry, and several other places which he mentions.

The Third Book was to contain memoranda and documents concerning the ancient customs, &c., appertaining to the possessions of the Monastery, for the purpose of guiding the Abbots in granting leases of the possessions of their House.

The Fourth Book was to be devoted to the grants of privileges and compositions for tithes, and to precedents concerning the visitation of the Monastery, either by the Court of Rome, or any other authority.

Among the Manuscripts belonging to Lord Leigh, is a volume bound in Russia leather, and entitled "Historical and Local Manuscripts," the contents of which are,—

1. Four pages of a treatise on the Canon Law, with interlinear and marginal glosses.

2. A Chronicle of the Kings of England, extending from Ethelbrict to 1388, and commencing "Tempore " antiquorum Anglorum dividebatur Anglia in quinque " partes."

3. The Prophecies of Merlin concerning the Kings of England.

4. The Indenture Tripartite between Isabella Queen of England and the Mayor and Commonalty of Coventry on the one part and the Prior and Convent of Coventry on the other part, relative to the disputes between the Corporation of Coventry and the Prior and Convent there, respecting the motes and bounds of the town.

5. Taxation made in the Diocese of Coventry and Lichfield, by Thomas de Staundon and Roger Bacon, relative to the churches, benefices, and prebends in the said Diocese, A.D. 1370.

6. Inquisition made on the Wednesday next before the Feast of the Purification of the Virgin Mary, in the 8th year of the reign of Edward III., relative to the extent of the Prior's half and the Earl's half of the Town of Coventry.

THE MANUSCRIPTS OF THE HONOURABLE G. M. FORTESCUE, DROPMORE, MAIDENHEAD.

By far the greater part of the MSS. now in possession of the Honble. G. M. Fortescue appear to have belonged at one time to the owners of the estate of Hackness, in Yorkshire. After a number of unimportant papers, written for the most part by correspondents of Walsingham, we come to some curious letters relating to the courtship of Sir Thomas Hoby, who at last succeeded in marrying the heiress of Hackness. The estate afterwards passed with another heiress to John Packer, the Secretary of the Duke of Buckingham, who managed to get into his hands papers of very considerable value. These form the bulk of the Collection. Amongst them are letters from Buckingham himself, from Secretaries Lake, Calvert, Naunton, and Conway, from Bishop Williams, the Earls of Suffolk, Middlesex, and Nottingham, and many other of the chief personages of the Court of James I., besides letters from James himself, from his daughter Elizabeth of Bohemia, and from her husband the Elector Frederick. There are also several original holograph letters of Bacon. All of these latter, however, have been already printed.

Amongst these letters the most interesting is, undoubtedly, James's letter to the Commissioners for the trial of Sir Walter Raleigh after his return from Guiana (204). From this we learn for the first time what was the precise nature of the examination to which he was subjected, and what were the King's reasons for dissenting from the open trial proposed by the Commissioners.

Of the other papers may be specially noticed Sir Robert Dudley's account of his newly invented ships of war (99), and Sir T. Wentworth's letter about his proposed resignation of the office of Custos Rotulorum (146), which supplies the hints in the correspondence on the subject which was regretfully pointed out by his biographer, Mr. Forster.

The interesting holograph letter (505) from Charles I. to Prince Rupert did not originally form part of this Collection, but is believed to have been acquired by Lord Grenville.

A selection from this valuable series has recently been made by the kind permission of Mr. Fortescue, and will shortly be printed by the Camden Society.

COLLECTION OF MSS. AND PAMPHLETS BELONGING TO SIR CHARLES W. DILKE, BART., M.P., AT 76, SLOANE STREET.

Sir Charles Dilke possessed till quite recently a large collection of MSS. and pamphlets. The former he has now transferred to the British Museum. They form three collections known respectively as the Carryll Papers, the Seaforth Papers, and the Mackenzie Papers. The pamphlets remain in his possession, and it is believed contain matter which would be found highly interesting to the student of modern English history. They fall into eight groups:—

(1.) Pamphlets relating to the escape of Charles II. after the battle of Worcester.

(2.) Relating to the events of James II.'s reign.

(3.) Relating to the intrigues of the Jacobites during the reign of William and Mary, and of Anne.

(4.) Relating to the risings under the old Pretender and the young Pretender in 1715 and 1745.

(5.) Relating to the life and times of Alexander Pope.

(6.) Relating to the political career of Wilkes, and the writings of Junius. These two collections are considered to be very complete.

(7.) Relating to the life of Mr. Burke.

(8.) Relating to the political history of Ireland, and the rebellion of 1798.

These collections were formed by the late Mr. Dilke, grandfather of the present Baronet.

EDMOND FITZMAURICE.

SIR HENRY DRYDEN, BART., OF CANONS ASHBY, CO. NORTHAMPTON.

Sir Henry Dryden possesses a number of letters of the 17th and 18th centuries, addressed to or written by members of the Dryden family.

There is only one letter by the poet. This is addressed to W. Walsh (author of a Dissertation on Virgil's Pastorals), and is a reply to a request for a criticism on his Essay. Dryden tells him to avoid shan't and can't, not to end a sentence with a preposition, and not to say that when who is proper.

A large proportion of the letters are on business and purely family matters; from the others I made notes.

1640, Nov. 26—Westminster. Sir John Dryden writes to his uncle Richard Knightley, that he shall have his prayers, tho' he can not be so serviceable either to him or the country that hath set him (Dryden) in that place of trust. He can only bring straw or stubble to that great work. God be praised, here want not skilful agents for this great work; it hitherto goeth on fast . . . . The walls go up fast tho' they can not be suddenly finished; the ruines be such, both in Church and Commonwealth, that some years will hardly repair all breaches. I suppose that the petitions that come from several counties will take up some weeks, if not months, and then you may suppose what time they will take up in the thorough reformation of the grievances. The great business of the week has been the raising of the 100,000*l.* for the maintenance of the King's army and the relief of the northern counties. The money is borrowed, some part from the city of London; 50,000*l.* is offered to be lent by one Mr. Hamson, one of the formors of the Customs; for so many thousand pounds that shall be lent they are to be secured by bond of some gentlemen of the House until the Act be passed, and then the gentlemen are to have in their bonds. Yesterday the great charge the House of Commons has against the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland, was delivered to the Lords in the Painted Chamber by Mr. Pim. "This day is appointed to displant the cannons of the "late sinod with their unlegal oath. Saturday for ship "money."

1656, June 16—Ashby. Sir John Dryden to (apparently some apothecary in London), respecting the illness of his son Richard.

1656, August 17—Ashby. Sir John Dryden to Sir John Trevor at his house in Channel Roe, Westminster. He has appointed John Pasmore, the bearer, to the parsonage of Chesterton, co. Hunts, and asks Sir J. Trevor to recommend him to Mr. Nye or some other of the Commissioners for the approbation of ministers. In a postscript he thanks Sir J. Trevor for favour shown to his kinsman at Westminster school.

1655, July 14. William Driden to his brother Sir John. "My nephew Driden is in election of a fair, "virtuous lady."

1655, July 23. John Hewett to his uncle Sir John Dryden, respecting the disposal of some "household stuffe" in which they were jointly interested, and an offer by Lord Manchester to purchase it.

1656, Oct. 9. Richard Dryden to his father Sir John. Asks pardon for an offence, and in a postscript asks for "a new sute and coat."

1656, Oct. 9—London. Erasmus Dryden to his father Sir John. His master does not allow him anything, and will not for three years, and then only 10*l.* per annum, which is as much as he ever allowed to any apprentice.

[1656], Oct. 3—London. William Boteler to Sir John Dryden. Account of Captain Stayner's action against the Spanish fleet; on one of the ships taken, a prisoner related that in Lima it rained fire from heaven, and other storms and tempests, and that the city was consumed with 12,000 persons. (The writer was a Major-general.)

1657, Jan. 4—Venice. Erasmus Dryden to Sir John. He says that his last letter was from Francfurt.

Letters by Richard Knightley to Sir John. In one without date, about 1640, he says his cousin tells him he will give but 30*s.* the acre, abating taxes; he says it would yield 50*s.* in better times; complains of agistment rents being liable to taxes, which were inforced out of the rent, and the surplus paid to the landlord.

Some of the letters to Sir John are from his sister Mary Hartopp, his nephew John Cave, and his daughter Honour Dryden. There is a letter by the latter in which she alludes to her cousin (the poet, who wished to marry her) as "Mr. Conceit."

In a folio of letters to Edward Dryden, 1704–1715, is one from Aylworth Freeman, Inner Temple, 11 Oct. 1709, in which he says that the possessions of the Monastery of Canons Ashby were accounted for in 28 Hen. VIII. and till 33 Hen. VIII. as of a monastery suppressed, and that if it had been continued it would not have been accounted for.

Among the miscellaneous letters is one from Atterbury to his son whom he addresses as dear Obby. It is on composition, the choice of phrases, and sincerity in writing (3 pp.)

Another letter by Atterbury is dated from the Tower, 26 April 1723, and is addressed to Viscount Townsend. He is thankful for the favour of seeing his daughter, but was in hopes that the restraint of an officer's presence might have been judged needless at a time when her husband was allowed to be as often and as long as he pleased without a witness, especially since they had been parted for eight years, and if the Bill takes place might be separated for ever. He pleads hard for private talk with her.

A fine large folio missal of the latter end of the 14th century, written on vellum, bears evidence of having, in very early times, belonged to All Souls' College, at Oxford.

A paper roll, temp. H. VIII. contains copies of bill and answer in Chancery. The petition is addressed to the most Reverend Father in God Thomas Lord Cardinall, by Humfry Mapurly, son and heir of John Mapurly late of the county of Nottingham deceased. He states that John Mapurly, his grandfather, was seised in fee of 40 acres of arable land in the parish of St. Mary in Nottingham in the county of Nottingham, and enfeoffed Thomas Turnour, clerk, and others, to the use of the said John Mapurly the grandfather and the performance of his will;—he sets out the will under which he claims;—states that the deeds, &c. have come to Nicolas Quarnby and Juliana his wife..... The Answer is that Nottingham is within the county of the town of Nottingham, and not in Nottingham as stated in the Bill; the defendant prays abatement and dismissal of the Bill, and appoints an attorney.

A parchment roll of account of Jonathan Edwards, Vice Chancellor of the University of Oxford, Oct. 1691–2. Among the expenses are—for Dr. Pocock's Oriental MSS. 800*l.*; for carriage of the said books and to the person who brought the Jewish whip, 12*s.*; to Dr. Hyde the librarian 6*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.*

List of plate for the use of the members of the Common Room (Jesus' College). A small roll of the 17th century.

One of the early deeds (13 Edw. II.) is witnessed by the master of the hospital of St. James of the Red Cross (de cruce roys) in the county of Cambridge.

Four documents of the time of Queen Elizabeth relate to the militia.

The first is the Boke of harnes, 31 Dec. 1 Eliz. for the hundreds of Sutton, Warden, Norton, and Towcester, showing the number of men and the kinds of arms with which each township was charged.

The second is the list of demi-lances and light horses mustered and viewed by Sir John Spencer and Sir Richard Knightley at Daventry, 20 Sept. 1583.

The third and fourth are directions in 1584 to the bailiffs of the hundreds of Cleely and Wymersley, by Sir J. Spencer, and Sir R. Knyghtly (in consequence of the receipt of a Council letter), to cause certain persons named to appear with arms at Daventry.

In 1864 these four documents were printed in the Northampton Herald with illustrative and explanatory notes by Sir H. Dryden.

I must be permitted to return my thanks to Sir H. Dryden for his hospitality at Canons Ashby.

THE MANUSCRIPTS OF SIR BALDWIN LEIGHTON, BART., OF LOTON PARK, NEAR SHREWSBURY.

Among the ancient deeds at Loton Park, where Sir Baldwin kindly made me his guest, is one dated in the 13th year of Edw. 2, being a quitclaim of the manor of Alberbury by Fulk Fitzwaryn of Whitynton, to Fulk the son of Fulk Glas of Alberbury. It has a fine seal of a man on horseback with a shield on his arm and a legend; the arms on the shield are worn off. The remains of the old castle of Alberbury are in the grounds of Lotod.

A deed, dated 29 Edw. 3, is a license by Wm. son of Henry de Ferrars to Richard de Frome to amortize land to the chaplain of the vill of Weston, near Yarkhull (as an endowment). He agrees not to take advantage of the Statute of Mortmain.

A quarto volume, paper, 16th century, contains instructions by Queen Elizabeth to Sir Henry Sidney, K.G., Lord President of Her Majesty's Council in Wales and the Marches, and to all thereafter to be appointed to be of the Council; dated 30th June, 16 Eliz. It gives the names of persons to be of the Council, their duties and fees. In cases of murders, felonies, burglaries, rapes, riots, rowts, unlawful assemblies, &c., the quorum might put any person violently suspected of any treasons, murder, or felony, to tortures when they should think convenient. Upon false and seditious tales they are to be apprehended and examined, and if it touch treason, to be punished according to the laws; and if of less moment, then to be punished by pillory, cutting off their ears, whipping, or otherwise, according to the discretion of the Council. The Council are to punish those that have two wives and those that be notoriously known to live in adultery. The records of the court were not to be taken out of the court, but copies might be delivered. At the end are copies of orders made at Ludlow, 14th Feb., 18 Eliz., for the regulation of court practice.

A folio volume, paper, 16th century, contains portions of the proceedings in a suit between Jane Heath and Ann Heath (plaintiffs) and Roger Thomas (defendant). The subject of dispute were two oxen, one black and the other brown, worth 4*l.* The proceedings here are,—replication of the plaintiffs;—order of court, 20th March, 33 Eliz., that the matter should stand over until the 9th of June then next;—acknowledgment by Edward Lloyd and Thomas Owen, dated 20th May 1591, that they had received the Queen's commission to examine witnesses in the cause, that they had done so and transmitted the depositions;—order of court, dated Beawdley, 10th June, 33 Eliz., directing that the matter should stand over until the 27th January;—order dated Hereford, 1st December, 34 Eliz., that a letter with the depositions be sent to Sir Edward Leighton, Kt., one of the Council of the Marches of Wales, desiring him to make a final order, with the assent of the parties if he could, in the suit; and if, through the obstinacy of the parties, he could not, then to certify on the 27th of January next the state of the case, when a final order should be made;—the Queen's commission, dated Ludlow Castle, 21st March, 33 Eliz., to Edward Lloyd and Thomas Owen, to examine witnesses and transmit the depositions by the 9th of June then next;—interrogatories for the plaintiffs;—depositions for the plaintiffs, taken at the parish church of Melverley in the county of Salop, 27th May 1591. Each deposition is signed by the deponent (by mark) and his examiner. Interrogatories on behalf of the defendant;—depositions for the defendant, at the same place and day with these for the plaintiff; imperfect at the end.

Records of proceedings in the Marches Court rarely occur.

A copy of the Decree made by the Lord Keeper on the 2nd of May 1670, in the cause Elizabeth Hearne and others, v. Sir Henry Thynne, Kt., and Bart., and another. This was a suit to determine the customs of the manor of Stratton in the county of Salop. The customs alleged are set out and confirmed. The manor was of the ancient demesne.

A folio volume, paper, 18th century, contains careful copies of ancient deeds, including those in the possession of Sir Baldwin Leighton. The first is a copy of a grant, circa 1200, by William fitz Alan to Richard de Lecton (Leighton) of the vill of Lecton with its advowson and appurtenances.

Court rolls for Stapleton, temp. Edw. 3 and Elizabeth; for Conede, Wattlebrugh, Alberbury, and other manors, temp. Edw. 3.

Accounts of the bailiffs of Elizabeth Corbet beyond Severn, 49 and 50 Edw. 3, and other bailiffs' accounts, in the 14th and 15th centuries, for Bradenhall, Bretchel, Loughton, Wattlesborough, and other places.

ALFRED J. HORWOOD.

THE MANUSCRIPTS OF SIR GEORGE OSBORN, BART., OF CHICKSANDS, COUNTY BEDFORD.

A most valuable and interesting collection of letters and papers relating to the defence of Castle Cornet in Guernsey (for the King) during the civil war, temp. Charles 1st, and a few papers (copies) relating to the island of Guernsey in the reign of Elizabeth and James 1st, and an account of the storm which damaged the castle in the time of Charles 2nd, when Lord Hatton was the governor.

After having made a calendar of these papers, I found on looking at Mr. Hoskins' work on "Charles the 2nd "in the Channel Islands," that the letters had been printed at Guernsey* in a book called "The Chronicle "of Castle Cornet;" a fact of which I was not apprised when the papers were laid before me. Under these circumstances I do not feel justified in appending the calendar which I had prepared.

THE MANUSCRIPTS OF THE TRUSTEES OF THE LATE SIR RICHARD PULESTON, BART., AT WORTHENBURY, CO. FLINT.

The Pryesleesdons (Pulestons) are a very ancient family. Roger de Pyueleesdon was Sheriff of Salop temp. Edward I., and, pursuing the King's interest too closely in matter of money, was seized by the Welsh and hung. Among the deeds at Worthenbury is a long one in French, 20 Edw. 1, being an agreement between two of the Pulestons before four persons (two of whom were also Pulestons) regarding wastes and woods in Pulesden.

The manuscripts are as follow:—

Folio, paper, 15th century, 90 leaves. Extent (in Latin) of the Lordship of Chirkesland, by Robert Egerley, 15 Ric. 2., from the bounds of Powis on the south, to the confines of the lordship of Bromfield and Yale on the north, and in breadth between the demesne of Oswaldestre and Whitington by well-known bounds on the east, and the county of Merioneth on the west; which by metes and bounds the Earl of Arundel holds of the King by military service.

Fol. 1. Near the Castle is the free burgh of Chirk, 25 burgages, each at 12*d* per annum.

Fol. 2. The nature of the tenure of the burgages stated, and the amonnt of the tolls and people of markets.

Fol. 3. The ringildres are to collect rent, and execute the office of bailiff. The holdings at rents are called gavella.

Fol. 63*b*. The nature of the tenures of the tenants is stated.

(Besides this volume there are a great number of old papers and copies of charters concerning Chirk).

A 4to volume, paper, 16th century; contains thirteen homilies in Welsh, of these, ten seem to be the composition of John Harpsfeld, Archdeacon of London, in the time of H. 8 (well known as author of an Ecclesiastical History of England), and two seem to be by H. Pendilton, and nearly all to be transcribed or perhaps preached by John Tregear. The 12th and 13th are much tattered, many words and phrases throughout the homilies are in English.

A 4to volume, paper, 16th century, 38 leaves. The descrypcion and knowlege of the Astrolop as following. —Whych is the ryght syde, and whych ys the lyfte syde. The east syde of thas trolabye ys clepid the right syde,

. . . . . Eads divided after the four principall plages or quarters of the fyrmament. (This may be of use in illustrating Chancer's treatise on the Astrolabe.)

A 4to volume, paper, 16th century. A miscellaneous collection. Copies of Latin poems. Disputationes theologicæ Cantabrigiæ habitæ coram Regali Majestate, 9 Aug. 1564. Quæstio prima. Major est scripturæ quam ecclesiæ authoritas (4 leaves). The interlocutors are D. Stafford and M. Hutton, Dr. Pearne, Dr. Henton, and Dr. Baker. Another in 2 leaves, where the interlocutors are Dr. Stokes, Hutton, and Beumant. A congratulatory oration of Thos. Coventrie, fellow of Balliol College on the visit of Queen Elizabeth, 14 pp.

Latin poems to the Earl of Bedford by P. B. begins "(Gloria sponte sua fugientem quærit et illum."

Latin poem to W. Drury, by P. B. Italus, begins "Te Mars a puero semper nutrivit in antris."

Another to the same, beginning Mars tibi progenitor.

A Latin poem to Peter Bostoc, "Tremanorum mortem deplorantem," by Peter Bissarus.

A folio volume, paper, 15th century, 227 pp. The valuable portion of this volume was well edited by Mr. Cecil Monro, for the Camden Society in 1863. It consists of copies of letters by and to King Henry 5th and others in his reign, copies of letters by and to King Henry 6th and others during his reign, a number of letters by Bishop Beckington and Queen Margaret (of Anjou). The contents of the volume are described by Mr. Monro in his preface. Besides the documents printed by the Camden Society, there is at pp. 143–150 a Welsh rental for Gwel Kyarwys, Trevor Isas, and other places; p. 163. Prognostications of events from the weather in the twelve months; p. 162. Modus irrotulandi Curiam Letæ et visus franci plegii seriatim; p. 171. Form at holding a court for Lady Margaret, Duchess of Clare, in Essex, Latin religious tracts, and recipes for hawks and horses.

A folio volume, paper, about A.D. 1600. Seems to be a register for inquisitions or deeds. In the left margin are the names of places nearly all in Cheshire, in the centre of the page are the names of holders, the property holden, and the nature of the tenure, and in the right margin are the respective dates.

A folio volume, paper, 15th century, 94 leaves of stout paper. A Latin note on the second page says that the book belongs to John Edwards, junior, of Chirkeslond. The first 80 leaves contain several treatises on Latin grammar and composition, with English interlineations, such as would enable a person in the 15th century to acquire the use of the Latin language.

Fol. 2*a*.–11*a*. Rude Latin hexameters showing Latin verbs in alphabetical order, in the four conjugations; interlined are the English meanings.

Fol. 11*a*.–17*a*. Instructions for Latin composition by way of question and answer (in English). Begins "In "how many maner of wyse shall thu to make latten "and to construe." . . . . At the end "Explicit "Informacio secundum Leylonde, Rosa flos florum Ley"londus grammaticorum."

Fol. 17*a*.–21*b*. Latin hexameters giving the Latin names for things of ordinary occurrence, with the English meanings interlined. At the end "Explicit "et citera, Nunc scripsi totum pro Christo, da mihi "potum: Pro tali pocio nunquam tibi scribere volo."

Fol. 21.–31*a*. Ortographia. A Latin treatise so headed. Begins "Gramatica vel Gramatice quid est," with examples in hexameters. Some doggrel lines at the end give the name of the scribe, John Fallalove (Johannes plenus amoris).

Fol. 31*b*.–34*a*. A Latin treatise in hexameter verse on versification. Begins "Scandere preposui per versus "sillaba quosque."

Fol. 34*b*.–45*b*. Hexameters shewing how the vowels are long or short in various positions.

Fol. 45*b*.–47*b*. A Latin poem on confession and penitence. Begins "Peniteas cito peccator cum sit miserator."

Fol. 48*a*.–54*b*. Rhyming Latin, giving nouns with English meanings interlined.

Fol. 55. Short common phrases in English and Latin. Haylie Sir, Avete domine, &c. &c.

Fol. 56*a*. Theodulus. Begins "Quoniam hic opere "sumus agressuri. Ends "Desine quos restat ni des- "peracio ledat."

(This work was printed by Wynkyn de Werde, under the title of Liber Theoduli, cum commento.)

Fol. 77. The adverbs according to Donatus (with English meanings).

Fol. 77*b*. Verbs with English meanings.

Fol. 78*b*. On heteroclite and indeclinable nouns.

Fol. 81*a*.–82*b*. Several verbs conjugated throughout.

Fol. 83.–90*b*. A calendar for A.D. 1481 (one page for each month) followed by lunar table and an explanation of the calendar; this last is certainly by the hand of John Edwards of Chirk who has signed it.

Fol. 91*a*.–92*b*. The history of the cross (imperfect at the end). Begins "Postquam peccaverat primò parens "noster Adam." Ends with the words "Mos enim erat "certa adjacentium regionum terminus."

The early deeds are numerous.

Copy of a charter, dated Overton, 1218, whereby Madoc at Griffin, lord and heir of Powys grante, the vill of Hatchton to God and St. Mary, and the Cistercian monks of Vale Crucis.

18 Edward 2, May 1. Grant by Edward, Earl of Arundel to his burgesses of Chirk of a free burg, with privileges.

Four grants of lands in Conway, and one grant of burgages in Beaumaris by Edward 2 as Prince of Wales.

8 Edward 3. Inspeximus in French by Richard, Earl of Arundel of a charter by Edmund his father, dated 18 Edw. 2, which gave to the freeman of Nanthud Moghenant Kinloche and Carrecan rights of turbary in certain woods (Offa's dyke is mentioned, "usque ad "fossam Offæ"). He allows the charter and releases a Treth called Trethmolyn with which they were charged for certain mills (part of seal remains).

22 Edward 3. Madoc filius Jor, Vicar of Llangollen gives to Llewellyn, son of Llewellyn and his wife Margaret (daughter of Grufford, son of Madoc) according to the law and custom of England, certain lands, to hold for ever to the said Llewellyn and Margaret, and the heirs of Llewellyn on Margaret begotten, according to the law and custom of England, of the chief lords, &c. If Llewellyn die without heir by Margaret, then the lands are to revert to his right heirs, according to the law and custom of England.

22 Edward 3. (Directly afterwards) the same Madoc, son of Jor grants to the same Llewellyn and Margaret his wife, certain other lands, to hold to the said Llewellyn and Margaret and the heirs of Llewellyn by Margaret, according to the law and custom of Wales, except the heir be enfeoffed (feodavi) of certain excepted lands.

By the first charter the heir, according to the law of England, was to take; by the second charter the heirs, according to the law of Wales, except such as would inherit under the first charter, would take.

16 Richard 2. Several mortgages. As security for the loan the borrower demised the land to farm by way of pledge (nomine pignoris) for four years, and so on for four years until the money was paid. The lender, it would seem, held the land and took the profits without account, the borrower having the privilege of redeeming it at the end of any four years on payment of the principal money. (There are specimens of this kind of mortgage in the collection of Mr. Wynne of Peniarth). One mortgage in 9 Edw. 3 is for one year and so on. A mortgage dated at Ruthyn, 14 Edw. 3, witnesses the mortgagor "ad tirprit traididisse" the land for four years to secure a sum which the mortgagee in hand, "nomine prit," had paid to the mortgagor.

1467, April 4 or 14. Grant by several cardinals of remission of 100 days to those who should go to the chapel of St. Goddvarch, confessor and abbot, or to the cemetery at Chirk of St. Tissilio, confessor, and hear mass of Richard ap J[ohn ap David], priest of the said diocese, or give to him support, or say Pater noster and Ave Maria for the souls of his parents on certain days.

Grant by Henry 6 of land in Kellokesdey in Flintshire.

3 Edward 4, Sept. 21. Grant by Henry, Duke of Somerset, Marquis of Dorset, Lord of Chirk and Chirkeland, of land in Chirkeland.

14 Edward 4. Grants by Edward first-born of Edward 4, and Prince of Wales, of licence to David ap Jevon to hold lands to him and his heirs "nomine "Kynnowys."

Large original charter of King Henry 7, to the people of Chirkeland, allowing them to buy land in England and English burghs, in Wales, and to hold offices there. Dated, 21 July, 21 Hen. 7.

22 Henry 7, Aug. 4. Sign manual of the King; a letter to Launcelot Landor, receiver of the lordships of Bromfield and Yale, and Mr Edwards, deputy constable of the Castle of Chirk. Recites that the inhabitants of Chirkeland had given 1,000 marks for privileges granted by his letters patent, and that some had been paid; authorizes them to levy the remainder, "trusting in "your sadnesses and wisdomes." Dated at the Manor of Somersham.

6 Henry 8. May 18. Admission to land, before Charles, Duke of Suffolk, chief steward of the lordships of Bromfield, and Yale, and Chirk, and Chirkeland, of Mr. Edwards for 99 years, at a rent of 13*s.* 4*d.* Seal and signature.

Henry 8. Petition to the King to grant letters patent for the denization of John Brewer, a Scotchman, that he might be indigena et ligeus.

Henry 8. Petition by William George, of Hendon in Middlesex, yeoman, against John Alec; about land in Leatherhead. The Chancellor had appointed commissioners in Surrey to enquire; but they favoured Alec: he prays further letters to the Chancellor.

A petition on a long piece of vellum by Richard Fourde of Montgomery against the misdeeds of Richard Herbert, deputy of Lord Herbert, chief steward of the Lordship and Castle of Montgomery: eleven articles. He charges the deputy with taking bribes to the King's loss.

In the 34 Henry 8 is a grant by John ap David ap Madoc ap Deio, a naif of the King of his demesne of Chirk, to John ap Jer ap Jevon ap Griffin, of half a gavel of his bond land, in the vill of Erogen Coladris.

3 Edward 6. Act of Parliament (in black letter, printed by Grafton) for the relief granted to the King's Majestie by the Lords and Commons, and the King's missive under the great seal, dated 16 March, 3 Edward 6 (fastened through the Act), appointing Commissioners (among whom is John Puleston) for the county of Denbigh, to take an account of the sheep and their proprietors and levy the relief.

A paper of the 17th century, touching the tythes issuing out of the Lord his demesne, otherwise called boord land, in the Lordship and parish of Chirk, Co. Denbigh.

In 4 Edward 6, are a lot of proceedings before the King's Council in the Marches of Wales, between John Edwards of Chirk, and Thomas ap Rees, regarding land.

A small bundle of copies of records of suits in the Marches Court; Eliz. and Charles 2.

14 James 1. Certificates signed by many persons showing that Llangollen was a fit place for a market and fair, and commencement of a letter (unsigned), whether in recommendation or not does not appear.

There is an immense mass of law proceedings in the 17th century; bills, answers, briefs, depositions of witnesses, &c. &c. Robert Earl of Leicester had the Manor of Chirk by grant from Queen Elizabeth in the seventh year of Her reign. He sold it to Lord St. John of Bletsoe in the thirty-third year of Elizabeth; and Lord St. John sold it to Sir Thomas Middleton in the thirty-seventh year of Elizabeth. In 1615 Sir Thomas filed a bill against John Edwards, of Chirk, for encroaching on the waste.

Letters.

The letters and papers here of the 17th and 18th centuries are very numerous. They relate to Ireland as well as England, and contain much of interest with regard to social and political matters. A few notes will best illustrate their nature.

1643. Original warrant to the constable of the peace of the hundred of Yale, and two to the high constables of Nanhydiott. The first is to apprehend certain persons named in a schedule, for having refused to shew their arms. The second and third are directing the apprehension of persons named in a schedule, and bring them before the Commissioners of Array.

1643. Petition by a woman, shewing that her husband went to serve the King as substitute for another, on promise of that other paying money to her; but he does not pay; prays relief.

The order to take the defaulter. And another similar order in a similar case.

1643. Petition to Prince Rupert by the Commissioners of Array for Chirkland and Yale, and draft of the same, stating that the hundred has paid about 1,000*l.* within 12 months. Asks that they may pay only proportioned with the rest of the county.

1643. Petition to John Lord Byron, Field Marshal of H.M. Forces praying that there may be a guard of soldiers at the passage over the river Keiriog.

1643. Draft of another petition praying relief from assessment.

1643. Receipt for 22 men, imprest soldiers for Col. Ellis's regiment. The names are at the foot.

1643. Copy memorandum of impressing 20 men for the Queen's regiment. The names are at the foot.

1640, Sept. 3. Catalogue of the names of all the trained bands, and their maintenances in Chirkland and Yale, 13½ long pages; officers' names on 15th page. Each seems to have had one captain, one lieutenant, one ensign bearer, two serjeants, and one drum.

1642, December 16, Oxford. Sign manual of Charles I. to a letter of protection to Mr. Jenner of Abington.

1643. A printed protestation on oath to be tendered to the inhabitants of the county of Worcester, Salop, and Chester, and the six counties of N. Wales, according to an Act of Council of War, holden 28 July 1643, to protect the King and resist the Parliamentary forces under the Earl of Essex, Sir William Brereton and Sir Thomas Middelton, to oppose these three persons, to disown those who have taken the detestable vow or covenant, to communicate nothing to those three to the prejudice of the King. Signed by Arthur Capell and twelve others. On the back are the subscriptions of six persons, as having taken the oath.

1646, April 3. Order, by the Committee of Lords and Commons for the advance of money and necessaries for the army, that Mr. Puleston, of the Temple being indebted to Mr. Edwards, of Shrewsbury, in 500*l.* with interest due, and Edwards being a delinquent, Puleston should not pay Edwards, but should be answerable to the Committee, and on payment to the Committee half was to be paid to Mr. Trefusis, who had discovered the debt. Signed, Meriton Dallison, Clerk to the Committee.

1646, Aug. 7. Committee for Gloucester, Hereford, &c. by order of Parliament sitting at Dorset House, Channel Roe, Westminster. Lady Brereton, executrix of Sir Thomas Brereton, her late husband, owes legacies amounting to 300*l.* to certain delinquents, legatees of her husband. She, being summoned, said she had no assets, but offered to assign a bond from Mr. Puleston, of the Middle Temple, to her late husband for 1,000*l.* to secure 500*l.* They accept the bond in satisfaction of the legacies; she is to deliver it, so that they may get it in. Signed, Edward Stephens, Thomas Hodges, and Thomas Pury.

1647, Dec. 14. At Committee of Lords and Commons for Indemnity. Recites the order on a bond of Mr. Puleston and Sir Roger Wolrich, and that Puleston was ordered to pay the legacies at a certain time. That he paid 53*l.*; yet Lady Brereton having notice of the order arrested and imprisoned him until he paid 100*l.* to her; and she made Puleston and Wolrich sign judgment on the bond in the Common Pleas at Westminster defeasanced for payment of 620*l.* more; Lady Brereton is ordered to discharge the judgment and acknowledge satisfaction. Signed, Robert Nicholas.

Draft of a petition by Mr. Pulestun to the Committee after Lady Brereton had made him give the judgment.

1647, January 11. (Copy) at a Committee (as last above). The business between Lady Brereton and Mr. Puleston to be considered this day fortnight; all proceedings to stand: the Committees of Gloucester and Westminster to meet and proceed according to the last order of Committee of 30 December last.

1647, February 19. Lady Brereton has not obeyed, notwithstanding money to her counsel to her use. Lady B. to have till Tuesday to deliver the bond or give a release; in default to be taken into custody. Signed W. Purefoy.

1648, May 9. At a Committee (as above). The warrant of the Attorney to enter satisfaction to be given to Mr. Puleston unless Lady Brereton or some one on her behalf attends on Monday and shews cause. Signed William Mowson.

Copy Certificate of the Committee of Gloucester to the Right Honourable the Committee (as above). States that by order of 22 March 1648 they were ordered to give a list of the names of the delinquent legatees of Sir T. Brereton; that it appeared to them that 329*l.* 6*s.* 10*d.* were then due to the State from the delinquent legatees, and Lady Eleanor Brereton, the executrix, then appearing by counsel, confessed the legacies due, and offered Mr. Puleston's bond; whereupon they proceeded no further.

1652, December 31. Committee of Sequestration for N. Wales sitting at Wrexham. They lately ordered the enjoyers of the estate of Mrs. Magdalen Edwards, of Treborth Issa, widow, a recusant, two-third parts whereof are under sequestration for her recusancy, should pay for the year 20*l.* Upon perusal of a deed by Mr. Edwards and further consideration had of the greatness of her charge, ordered that the estate be leased to her for three years at a rent of 13*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.* to the Treasurer of Sequestration. (Signed) David Lloyd, David Maurice. (Entered) Ben. Redenhurst.

1653, August 5. By the Committee (as above) John Edwards, of Chirk, Esquire, has been put down as a delinquent instead of John Edwards of the same place, gentleman. He is not to be troubled.

1659, November 15. Haberdashers' Hall, London. Committee of Sequestrations appointed by Act of Parliament. Upon the petition of Sir Charles Harbord of London, Kt., John Bridgman of Castle Bromwich, Co. Warwick, Esquire, and John Hanson of Lincoln, gent., praying an allowance of their title to the manor of Shochlack and other lands in the county of Chester, seized by the Committee for Sequestrations in the said County of Chester as the estate of Roger Puleston Esquire, on a charge of delinquency. Ordered that it be referred to Mr. Farnell, of counsel for the Commonwealth attending the Committee, to state the petitioner's deeds and evidences, and report, &c. (True copies, John Leech, registrar.)

The petition (copy) is inclosed. The petitioners held the property as mortgagees for 500 years to secure 2,650*l.*

Roger Puleston was afterwards a judge, and was knighted. There is a list of fees due to the King's servants from all persons receiving the honour of knighthood. The sum total is 82*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.* There is a receipt to Sir Roger for that amount, dated 20 March 1681-2.

1732–1742. Many letters from George Ross (at Castle Lym, in Ireland) to Dr. Price, of Overton, near Wrexham.

1735–1739. Many letters from the same to Lord Barrymore. These contain local news and are amusing.

1736–1747. A few letters by Sir W. W. Wynne to T. Price.

1732–1746. Nearly 100 letters from Lord Barrymore to Mr. Price.

1737, fol. 4. Lord B. alludes to a defeat in the house, 248 to 164. Sir Robert (Walpole) had recourse to his old friend, and called loudly on him for his assistance (about the Pretender). 'Tis not doubted his Majesty will go soon to Hanover.

1740, August 31. From Lord Barrymore at Marbury, " I hear from London that his Majesty will bring home " a royal consort, the Princess Mary of Hesse Cassel, " and that a coronation will ensue."

1740, Feb. . . . From Lord Barrymore at London. " To-morrow Sir Robert is to open the Budget as to " ways and means. Tuesday the grand attack in both " houses. Lord Cartaret, as I am told, is to begin in " the Lords, and Pulteney in our own house."

1740–1746. Letters by Lord Barrymore to Dr. R. Price, of Overton, near Wrexham.

Letters to Mr. R. Ward, of Chester, by . . .

1738, June 12. Sends the Dean's (Swift's) last piece, The Essay on Polite Conversation. Strictly no name to be called his except the introduction. Hears that the Dean has been for 16 or 17 years collecting materials for a Complete Advice to Servants. The first part of the work he lent a few years ago to some person who has not honesty enough to return it, so that we are likely to be deprived of the writing, which cost the Dean so much trouble; his health decreases apace; he has been for some weeks so ill that he admits no company. The Dean " apace. His history of the four last years of Queen " Anne was fairly transcribed and sent to England to " be printed, but he has been so free in his characters, " and many of the people being still alive, his friends " on your side do not think it safe to publish the work, " and this gives him great concern. . . . The Dean " declares he will write no more unless roused by " indignation."

Many letters from Mr. Pearde at Castle Lyon, to F. Price and Sir W. W. Wynne.

In a letter to the former in 1741 he mentions " great " mortality among people and cattle; the poorer sort " die like rotten sheep . . . it is attributed to their " eating the frosty potatoe last spring . . . the " fever has now come among the better sort; they live " but few days in it."

In a letter to the same, Feb. 26, 1742, he says that " about a fortnight ago about 30 or 40 ships were seen " off Youghall, supposed to be the Brest squadron; " . . . a fear of invasion; . . . last night's packet " brought news of Sir John Norris being in pursuit of " them."

On March 9, 1742, he mentions that Lord Barrymore was confined in his house with a strong guard. (He was supposed to favour the Pretender.) On the 15th of April he says that there was great rejoicing on the guard being taken off Lord Barrymore. .

1747–8. Letters from Arthur Barry (at Dublin) to Mr. Price.

There is a letter (much mouse eaten) by E. Mockton to F. Price, of Overton. Apparently the Duchess of Marlborough wanted Fanny Pierrepont to marry Jack Spencer. " She refused, though the Duchess offered to " settle 16,000*l.* a year and 100,000*l.* in money on the " marriage. Her affections were engaged; she pre- " ferred the man she loved to wealth and grandeur. The " gentleman, I am told, is Mr. Meadows, son of Sir —— " Meadows, a Staffordshire gentleman, not above 900*l.* " a year, and she herself 20,000*l.*" 1743. A bundle of letters from Edmund Spencer in Ireland to Norris Price, Esq. In one he mentions his idea of reprinting Spencer's works.

In another he asks Price to speak to the Spencer family . . . he intends to dedicate the work to the Duke of Marlborough.

In another is enclosed a specimen page and a receipt.

In another, August 19, 1744, is an account of his attending the trial of the Lieutenant of the Old Noll, prosecuted for killing one of the crew of the Thurloe privateer.

In another, of September 29, 1744, is an account of the Old Noll being taken by a French privateer.

1749, May 11. A letter from Liverpool of this date, mentions that the sights of the town were the ropeworks, the quarry hills, Mr. Dene's and Mrs. Cobham's curiosities, the copperas house and pott house, the ladies' walks, toy shops, and china shops.

1745, January 19. The Superbe, Lunisburg Harbour. Thomas Lloyd gives Mr. Price an account of the taking of Lunisburg, which he says is very strong, superior to Portsmouth.

All the manuscripts above described are at the Rectory House (not far from Emral, the family seat of the Puleastons), and there, by the Rev. T. H. G. Puleston's invitation, I examined them, and from his society derived that pleasure which I desire here to acknowledge.

A MANUSCRIPT OF MISS AINSLIE, BERWICK-UPON-TWEED.

A manuscript, in quarto, upon vellum, written about the year 1400, apparently for the use of a member of the Company of Fishmongers, London. It has passed through the hands of the celebrated London historian and antiquary, John Stowe, whose writing occurs upon folios 43, 44, 46, and 46b. Subsequently it was the property of D. Ord, of Clare Hall, Cambridge, who was Mayor of Berwick in 1786, from whom it passed into the family of its present owner.

It contains the following articles:—

1. A list of the Mayors and Sheriffs of London from 1 Ric. I. to 19 Ric. II. In Latin; f. 1.

2. A short chronicle, from the creation of the world to A.D. 1388. In Latin; f. 8.

3. A chronicle of events connected with the city of London, from A.D. 1087 to 1388. In Latin: f. 13.

4. The charters of the city of London, from 11 Hen. III. recited by Inspeximus, dated 6 Nov., 7 Ric. II. In Latin; f. 15.

5. The ancient Statutes of the Company of Fishmongers of London. In Latin; f. 33b.

6. Grant by King Edward I. to the Mayor of London of certain sites in London for the support of the fabric of London Bridge, dated 23 May, 10 Edw. I. In Latin; f. 34.

7. Memorandum as to the regulations made in the 11 Edw. I. respecting the sale of butchers' meat and fish within the city of London. In Latin; f. 34.

8. Regulations made in 18 Edw. I. by Gregory de Rokesley, Mayor of London, chiefly in regard to the sale of fish within the city of London. In French; f. 34 b.

9. Oath of the various officers of the Halmot Court of the city of London as to the privileges of the fishmongers of London. In French and English; f. 36 b.

10. Regulations made by the Steward of the King's Household as to the sale of fish within the city of London, dated 18 Edw. I. In French; f. 36 b.

11. Ordinance by Hamo de Chikwell, Mayor of London, respecting the building called "the Stokkes," dated 17 Edw. II. In Latin; f. 38.

12. Confirmation of the above Ordinance by King Edward II., dated 16 June, 17 Edw. II. In Latin; f. 38*.

13. Various memoranda concerning the enrolment of several agreements respecting the property of the Company of Fishmongers of the city of London, 11 Edw. I., 15 Edw. II., and 17 Edw. III. In Latin; f. 38.*

14. Memoranda of various proceedings between the Mayor and citizens of London, on the one part, and the Company of Fishmongers of London, on the other, as to

The Manuscripts of J. C. Antrobus, Esq., of Eaton Hall, Cheshire.

Among the deeds is one dated in 1281, by which Agnes, the daughter of Gerard of Leke, grants to Robert, called the Cellererman, lands in Leke (Leek in Staffordshire).

And a deed, not dated, being a grant by Radulfus de Vernun to the Abbat of Vale Royal of land in Westacroft in Great Stanthurn, free from all service except "uno rete domino regi." The witnesses are Lord Reginald de Gray, then Justice of Chester, Lord William de Venables, and others. (Reginald de Gray was Justice of Chester in the 9th year of Edward 1, 1281.)

A license by King Henry 5, dated in the 10th year of his reign (under seal), to Hugh the son of Ralph Walley, and the heirs of his body lawfully begotten, whether resident in Nantwich or not, to boil and sell salt, and to sell other goods. The consideration was 40s. paid into the Exchequer of Chester.

A precept by Edward, eldest son of Edward 4, that if John Wodnot was over 70 years of age he was not to be put on juries or assises. Dated 14 Edward 4.

A counterpart conveyance by Edward Lord Stafford and Ursula his wife, to Edward Lord Derby, of a house and garden in Macclesfield. Signature of "E. Derby." The seal in red wax, crest of Eagle and child.

There are many deeds of the time of Edward 2, and later Kings. Some of the early deeds have seals of arms. Many grants are by persons named Praers and Sutton.

Many of the early deeds relate to Yeyton (Eaton) under Lyme.

There are many deeds by and to the Byrons of Boglawton, in the county of Chester, in the reigns of Elizabeth, James 1, Charles 1, and Charles 2. Christopher Byron in 1597 had an uncle named John. After Christopher came Thomas. Another Christopher in 1684 made a settlement (with the deeds), and immediately afterwards made his will. He had bought up a great deal of real property. No son is mentioned in his will, but he names daughters, one of whom had married an Allen. The Christopher Byron of 1642 used a seal of arms, viz., three bends enhanced; the same arms as those borne by the noble family of Byron.

There are several deeds by and to the Brerctons of Cheshire.

A large chest is full of the Rolls of the manor of Horton in Staffordshire. They commence in the reign of Edward 3, and end with the reign of George 2: (the subsequent rolls are with the Steward). They comprise the Rolls of the Court Baron and Customary Conrt and View of Frankpledge; and besides, various papers of the 17th century, giving accounts of the manor, its descents, reservations, and exchanges. There are also a few Computi, one as early as Edward 4.

These Rolls are important for the history of Staffordshire; for Horton is a very large manor, and the series here is nearly if not quite complete from the 14th century.

Court Rolls and Computi are deserving of a very careful study. The former show the succession of lords, the customs of the manors, the succession of tenants, the amounts of fines and nature of heriots; proceedings in trespass and debt, in assaults and frays; the steps in civil suits, and a variety of information as to management and proceedings of the lords' territory and its occupants. The Computi are very valuable as showing the cultivation and stocking of farms, and the prices of various items of food and use. The importance of these documents has not, I think, been sufficiently attended to.

The Manuscripts of W. R. Baker, Esq., of Bayfordbury, in the County of Herts.

A most interesting collection of letters of the 17th, and a few of the 18th century, mostly addressed to Jacob Tonson, the friend and publisher of the wits and poets of that time, and founder of the Kit-Cat Club. Mr. Baker is one of his descendants, and possesses nearly all the portraits (painted by Sir Godfrey Kneller) of the members and of the club. The portraits of Jacob Tonson and the Earl of Carbery are very fine; that of Addison not so good. The portrait of John Montague, Duke of Montague, is curious. He expected to be made Knight of the Garter, and, in anticipation, the ribbon was painted over his coat; but he was disappointed, and the ribbon was painted to match the coat. But, as often the case in a "pentimento," the ribbon is visible.

The letters have been laid down in a large folio volume, and are in good preservation. Loose, at the end of the volume, is a fair copy, corrected for the press, of the first book of Milton's Paradise Lost, by some conjectured to be in Milton's handwriting.

The first letter is from Addison to Jacob Tonson, at the "Judge's Head," next Temple Bar, in Fleet Street, February 2 (no year):—"I was yesterday with Dr. "Hannes; told him Dr. Blackman, Mr. Adams, and "Mr. Boyle and myself had engaged in it, and that you "had gained a kind of promise from Dr. Gibbons. The "Doctor seemed particularly solicitous about the com"pany he was to appear in, and would fain hear all the "names of the translators. (The reference is to a trans"lation of Herodotus.) Addison does not like his "Polymnia, and will, if Tonson pleases, translate "Urania. Was walking this morning with Mr. Yalden, "and asked him when we might expect Ovid 'de arte "amandi' in English. Told me he thought you had "dropt the design since Mr. Driden's translation of "Virgil had been undertaken; but he had done his part "almost a year ago, and had it lying by him. Was "afraid he has done little of it, but believes a letter "from Tonson about it would set him to work."

2. Addison to Tonson, March 13 (no year).—Not being able to find Dr. Hannes at home has left his part with his servitor. Shall have his Urania by the beginning of the week.

3. Addison to Tonson at Amsterdam.—Has been two days at Rotterdam. Speaks of Tonson's edition of Cæsar.

4. Addison to Tonson, May 28.—Mr. Clay tells him to let Tonson know of the misfortune Polymnia met with on the road; the carrier was in fault. Tonson's discourse about translating Ovid made such an impression on him that he ventnred on the second book, which he turned at his leisnre hours. Ovid has so many silly stories with his good ones that he is more tedious to translate than a better poet would be.

5. 1735, August 28.—"My friend, I intend, God will"ing, to leave the country on Sunday next, with hopes "of London next evening. I suppose by the news I "receive per post that you are alive, but a certificate of "health under your own hand would have been most "acceptable to your old friend, Roger de Coverley." (Addison died in 1719, and Steele in 1729.)

6. Attorbury to Tonson, dated at Oxford, November 15, 1681.—Sends a list of subscribers (31); has got 6l. in crowns; some have not paid. Asks for the Oxford Prologue and for Dryden's Satyr, which he says he will return without transcribing a line. "My Whole Duty

" of Man waits for yonrs, and if you think it worth your " while to have the first miscellany the piece of Spencer " in 4to., which you know I owe you, sent up along with " it, it shall be done."

7. Aphra Behn to Jacob Tonson, August 1, 1685.—Tonson has bound himself for 6*l.* which she owed Mr. Baggs. She empowers Zachary Baggs, in case the debt is not paid before Michaelmas, to stop it out of moneys in his hands "upon the playing her first play."

8. The same to the same.—Thanks him for the service he has done her with Dryden, in whose esteem she would rather choose to be than anybody in the world. Angry with Creech; thinks her verse worth 30*l.*; hopes he will find 'em worth 25*l.*; asks him to speak to his brother to advance the price 5*l.* more. Cowley's David lost because it was a large book; Mrs. Philips's plays for the same reason. Begs hard for 5*l.* more.

9. Assignment by Richard Bentley to Jacob Tonson of one-third of Abstract of L'Estrange's Seneca's Morals. 1*l.* received in hand for 30*l.* At the back is a receipt for the whole amount and a direction for the Stationer's Company to assign.

10. Wm. Congreve to Tonson, August 8, 1723.—His kinsman Col. Congreve wishes that Tonson would lend Wm. Congreve's picture, to have a copy.

12. The same to the same, August 20, 1695.—Requests him to ask Sir G. Kneller to finish his picture.

13. The same to Tonson at Amsterdam, July 1, 1703. —Has been at the baths. "Your nephew told me of " copies that were dispersed of the Pastoral, and likely " to be printed; so we have thought fit to prevent 'em, " and print it ourselves."

14. The same to the same, at the "Judge's Head" in Chancery Lane.

15. The same to the same.

16. Copy of some of Congreve's last verses from the Harl. MS. 7318. An Epistle to Lord Cobham.

17. S. Compton to Tonson, November 21, 1727.—Will try to excuse him from being sheriff.

18. Thomas Creech (neither date nor address).—About his Juvenal; contains criticisms on the chronology of the Satires.

19. Wm. Davenant, at Francfort, to Tonson, April 20, 1702.—About subscription to the Cæsar. "Send to my " father the productions of our English poets, who are " all your friends, and never fail to communicate to " you their verses. You can't imagine how at this " distance one bankers after London lampoons. Pray " give my service to Mr. Congreve, and desire him to " let me be remembered in the dressing-room at Lin- " coln's Inn Fields."

20. J. Dennis to Tonson, June 4, 1715.—Is concerned at the attempt to lessen the reputation of Dryden by "small poets." Abuses Pope; Pope has always the same dull cadence and a continual bag-pipe drone; contrasts between Dryden and Pope. Five pages, and very amusing. A modern note says that it has been printed imperfectly.

21. Dryden to Tonson, July 6, 1697.—Tell Mr. Pate I can print no more names of his subscribers than I have money for before I print their names. . . . Let him settle for three yards of cloth by set-off. He (Dryden) is about to deal with a draper of his own persuasion.

22. Dryden's receipt for 30*l.* for copyright of Cleomenes.

23. Dryden's receipt, March 24, 1698, for 268*l.* 15*s.* for about 7,500 verses or less, of 10,000.

24. Dryden to Tonson.

25. The same to the same.—Had caught a great pike.

26. The same to the same.—About translation of Virgil.

27. The same to the same (no date).—Three days since he finished the 4th Æneid. The 6th is his greatest favourite. Mentions that money was then very scrupulously received, and that clipped money and 40 brass shillings were in some change sent to his wife.

28. The same to the same.—Asks him to let his wife buy a sieve of damsons to preserve, whole and not in mash.

29. The same to the same, October 29 (no year).—Has done the 7th Æneid in the country; intends in a few days to begin the 8th; when that is finished he expects 50*l.* in good silver, not such as he had formerly. "I " am not obliged to take gold, neither will I; nor stay " for it beyond 24 hours after it is due." (They were evidently then on bad terms.)

30. The same to the same (no date).—An interesting letter. He says that the translation of the History of the League was the best translation that ever was. Mentions Lord Roscommon's Essay; mentions his own verses; corrects a line—"let it be 'That here his con- " 'quering ancestors were nurs'd.'" Will lay by the Religio Laici till another time. Will have four odes of Horace and 40 lines from Lucretius. The story of Nisus and Eurialus, and 40 lines of Virgil in another place, to answer those of Lucretius. "I mean those very lines 'which Montaigne has compared in those two poets." Has no leisure for an Act of the Opera. Talks with Betterton about actors and the characters they were to have in the two new plays.

31. The same to the same.—(Amusing.) About his translation of Ovid's Metamorphoses.

32. The same to the same.—Asks him to say what is the most he will give for his son's play, "and if you " have any silver which will go, my wife will be glad " of it."

33 and 34. The same to the same.—In the latter he mentions Lady Chudleigh's verses (apparently to the Virgil). These, Wycherley thinks the best of any. . . . His own translation of Ovid, "de Arte " amandi." Asks Tonson to get him three pounds of snuff. . . . Let the printer be very careful, or he shall print nothing more; . . his son Charles is ill; the doctor fears a rupture; . . has great love for his son; . . requests him to ask Mr. Fraunce to enclose a letter, he (Dryden) will pay for double post. The post can't be trusted. Ferrand will do by them as he did by two letters which he sent his son about his dedicating to the King, of which they received neither.

35. The same to the same.—About his handwriting failing; so he writes a short letter.

36. The same to the same.—Has broken off his studies for the Conquest of China, to review Virgil and bestow more certain duty on him. Dr. Chetwynd; his promise of the Ode on St. Cecelia's day, which he desires Tonson to send him forthwith.

37. The same to the same.—Thanks him for sherry, the best he ever had. Asks him, in the Ode for St. Cecilia's day, to alter Lais to Thais twice. Wants to send a Virgil to Rome, and to send 30 guineas to Rome to his son.

38. The same to the same.—The remainder of his Northamptonshire rents have come up by the carrier, . . 16*l.* and about 10 shillings.

39. The same to the same.—"Send my MS. of the " Eneid to Sir Robert Howard to read in the country, " and bring back when he came to town."

40. A promise by Tonson to pay Dryden 250 guineas for 10,000 verses, 7,500 already in Tonson's possession. The 250 guineas to be made up to 300*l.* on a second impression of the 10,000 verses. Dated, 20th March 1698, signed and sealed by Tonson. Witnessed by Ben. Portlock and W. Congreve.

41. A similar document; the seal torn off.

42. Mr. Russells bill for the funeral of Dryden. Among the items are:—Double coffin, 5*l.* Hanging the Hall with a border of bays, 5*l.* Six dozen paper escutcheons for the Hall, 3*l.* 12*s.* Ten silk escutcheons for the Pall, 2*l.* 10*s.* Three mourning coaches and six horses, 2*l.* 5*s.* Silver desk and rosemary, 5*s.* Eight scarves for musicianers, 2*l.* Seventeen yards of crape to cover their instruments, 1*l.* 14*s.* Archievement for the herse, 3*l.* 10*s.* The total was 45*l.* 17*s.*

43. Verses by Cath. Brocerley to Dryden on his translation of Virgil.—One page. The writer says, "The " old critick burnt Statius as a holocaust to Virgil, so " we may burn Ogilby."

44. Duke of Grafton to Tonson.—Thanks him for a present of cider.

45. The Earl of Halifax to Mr. Smal in York Buildings.—Says his leg is not so well, and asks that he shall be in town on Wednesday by 11; asks him to meet him there to dress it. On the back are memoranda by Tonson about his son and daughter, and the altering of his will, &c.

46. A letter from E. Jekyll, May 17, 1718.

47. J. Jekyll at the Rolls to Tonson.—On the death of Mr. Cocks. Tonson being there, is asked to do all he can for Lord Somer's sake.

48. Basil Kennet to Tonson, at the "Judge's Head" near the Inner Temple Gate; dated C.C.C., 10th Sept. 1696.—Promises to contribute something for Tonson's 5th Miscellany.

49. A note of two lines from Sir G. Kneller.

50. From Sir G. Kneller.—Is sorry he shall not see him that afternoon, but will on Sunday next.

51. The (second) Duke of Marlborough to Tonson, the nephew, Nov. 29, 1729.—"I know 'tis only the " set of those pictures your uncle values, and not that " that I would give the world for." Asks to change for an original of Sir G. Kneller.

52. Luke Milbourne to Tonson. Dated, Yarmouth, Nov. 24, 1690. — Sends a poem which he made on Dryden's Amphitryo, which much pleased him. Tells Tonson to send others of Dryden's works.

53. Holles-Newcastle to Tonson, July 28, 1721.—Addresses him as "my dear old Friend," and asks to come for a visit.

54. Pelham to Tonson, 1721.—Acknowledges a present of cyder, and perry which he thought to be a different sort of cyder.

55. Holles-Newcastle to Tonson, 1721.—About a present of cyder, &c. And draft of a reply.

56. From H. Pelham, 1728.

57. From T. Bowyer, 1721.—The Duke of Newcastle desires Tonson's company in Sussex.

58. Pelham to Tonson (no year).—Lord L—— got so drunk last night at the Kit-Cat.

59. R. Newton of Hart Hall, Oxford, to Tonson, 1733. —About Lady Holford's gift of 1,200*l.* to be improved to 1,600*l.* to be laid out in land for endowments. Thanks him for presents of books.

60. Henry Newton to Tonson. Dated, Florence, 1709.

61. Receipt by Jacob Tonson, junr., to the elder Tonson, 1735, for books of the value of 50*l.*, for Hart Hall.

61(a). Thomas Otway, June 30, 1683.—Acknowledges that he owes 11*l.* to Jacob Tonson.

62. Alexander Pope to Tonson, Nov. 14, 1731.—"Almost ready to be angry with your nephew for being the publisher of Theobald's Shakespear, who according to the laudable custom of commentators first served himself of my pains, and then abused me for 'em." Suggests a scheme (to be talked over) for a Shakespear and other English poets that will beat all others, . . other literary matters (3 pages). In a postscript; "You live not far from Ross; I desire you to get me an exact information of the Man of Ross, what was his Christian and surname, what year he died and what age, and to transcribe his epitaph if he has one; and any particulars you can procure about him. I intend to make him an example in a poem of mine."

63. Copies of two letters from Pope to J. Tonson, jun., and two from J. Tonson, jun., in reply, 1731.—In the first, Pope expresses a hope that, in Theobald's proposed edition of Shakespear, Tonson will not publish any impertinent remarks on him (Pope). In the second, Tonson says that he will never do anything to forfeit Pope's opinion of him. In the third, Pope says, "All I should be sorry for would be if you were made the publisher of any falsity relating to my personal character." In the fourth, Tonson re-assures him.

64, 65, and 66 are from Pope, the first dated in 1732, the second no date, the third in 1735.—In the first Pope thanks Tonson for information about the Man of Ross; mentions why he made the Man of Ross better in reality. Has no thought of printing the poem (which is an Epistle on the Use of Riches) this long time. Mentions his portrait by Dahl sent to Tonson's nephew. Asks for a copy of his old friend Dr. Garth. "As to Dr. Bentley and Milton, I think the one above and the other below criticism."

67. Matthew Prior, Haye, Sept. 23/13, 1695, to Tonson. —Sends some verses "if worth printing," translated from Boileau.

68. Copies of Prior's poems, from Harl. MS. 7316.

69. D. Fulteney, Utrecht, July 3, to Tonson in Amsterdam.—About Vandermark, who wished to engrave for the Cæsar.

70 and 71. The same to the same.—Chatty letters.

72. Dr. Raby, at Berlin (no year), to Tonson.—The King has ordered the Urose to be painted, and to have prints made of him, and has promised him the first, which shall be Tonson's. The King will subscribe (for the Cæsar).

73. Lord Somers to Tonson. — Apologizes for not being able to come to a party.

74, 75, and 76. Letters from the Duke of Somerset to Tonson, two of them dated in 1703.—The first is a long one about Addison's being tutor to his son; his duty, and salary. In the second, he says that as Addison seems to consent, but wants to know particulars, he wishes Tonson to come and talk. In the third, he says that Addison has in effect declined. "Our club is dissolved untill you revive it; which we are impatient off."

77. Abraham Stanyan, at Augsbourg, Nov. 13, 1693, to Tonson.—Tells of his travels on the road to Venice.

78. C. Stanhope, Dec. 31, 1722, to Tonson.—Excuses himself for not coming to a party; asks to defer it till the Speaker is recovered.

79. Richard Steele, Sept. 26, 1718, to Tonson.—Has heard a good character of Caulfield, the barge-builder, and understands he is the only one now on the river: has been asked to speak in his behalf to the Duke of Newcastle for him to be barge-builder to his Majesty. Asks Tonson to speak for him.

80. George Stepney, at Lipstadt, 14/24 Feb. 1695, to Tonson.—A long letter. Sends a poem for printing on the melancholy subject; asks that it may be shown to Montagne and Congreve; . . . gives his own criticisms; . . . there is to be no name to them; hopes they will come out before the funeral. A copy for Mr. Prior, who perhaps may send some amendments. (Queen Mary died in December 1694.)

81. George Stepney, at Vienna, March 24, 1703, to Tonson.—Is glad that the Cæsar goes on well. Prince Eugene will subscribe; he has given his arms and titles for one of the cuts. Hopes to send the Margrave of Baden as a subscriber. "These two Generals are as learned as brave, and are perfect masters of humanity and learning." Prince Eugene wants one of Tonson's Horace. Hearty affection to Kit-Cat. "Often wish it were my fortune to make one of you at three in the morning."

82. The same, at Weissenberg, to Tonson, Sept. 26, 1704.—About the Cæsar. Prince Eugene very inquisitive to know when he is to make his appearance. Count Frise desires his name among the subscribers; he deserving it for his brave defence of Landau, and his care now in recovering it. Stepney will be answerable to Tonson for the money.

83. The same to the same, Feb. 18, 1705. Sends the letter and arms of Prince Eugene and the Margrave of Baden, and speaks of his own.

84 to 95. Twelve amusing letters from Sir John Vanbrugh to Tonson, dated from Paris, Amsterdam, and Herefordshire in 1703, 1714, 1722, and 1725, containing anecdotes and gossip of the club and friends, town news, and a little on politics. In the fourth, to Tonson at Paris, June 5, 1719, he congratulates Tonson on his luck in South Sea Stock. In the fifth, Feb. 18, 1719/20, he says that stock is rising, but he is only a looker-on. Sir R. Steele is grown such a statesman that he now takes the Ministry directly for his mark, and treats them in the House for some days past in so very frank a manner that they grow quite angry, and 'tis talked as if it would not be impossible to see him very soon expelled the House. He has quarrelled with the Lord Chamberlain, that a new license has been granted to Wilks, Cibber, and Booth, which they accepting of and acting under, have left him with his patent but not one player. And so the Lord Chamberlain's authority over the playhouse is restored, and the patent ends in a joke. A notice of the opera; 20,000*l.* subscribed; the King gives 1,000*l.* a year. He (Vanbrugh) is going to Heidegger's masquerade that night. In one dated July 1, 1719, he mentions his own recent marriage. In the next, a few lines in the middle are written and signed by Harriet V. (his wife). Vanbrugh abuses the Duchess of Marlborough, mentioning the money that was owing to him for Blenheim. In one, dated Oct. 25, 1725, he is very uncomplimentary to the Duchess of Marlborough, by reason of her getting an injunction against him by her friend the late good Chancellor, who declared that Vanbrugh never was employed by the Duke of M., and therefore had no demand on his estate for services at Blenheim. But he got his debt by Sir R. Walpole's help out of a sum she expected to receive. In one of Jan. 1722, he mentions the Duke of Marlborough's disposition of his property. The opera is supported: half a guinea for pit and boxes.

96. E. Waller, Jan. 22, 1679, to Jacob Tonson, at Mrs. Tonson's shop at Gray's Inn Gate, by Gray's Inn. —A short letter. Has the gout. Asks for any of Cambray's (Fénélon) works, if new.

97. Geo. Wilson, 2nd August, 1735.—Not important.

98. John Wallis, Serjeant's Inn, June 23, 1691, to some clergyman.—A long letter about the right of the University of Oxford to print Bibles. Claims for Oxford the exercise of printing before London, and the University brought in the art of printing.

99. Autograph draft of J. Tonson's will, March 19, 1731. 2 pp. 4to.

Then follow three vols. letters by Tonson; hints for verses on Dr. Hobbs, surgeon, cousin to T. Hobbs, of Malmesbury; Wycherley and he were of the same age, and born in the same town. Drafts of verses: several.

Tonson's will in his own handwriting, 27 Jan. 1734.

Bill for Tonson's funeral, March 31, 1735. The amount is 124*l.* 5*s.* 9*d.*

A letter from Philip Lempriere at Bath, 13 Feb. 1777, to Wm. Baker. He says that the wits and poets used to meet in a public house in Gray's Inn Lane, the sign a Cat, the man who kept it was called Kit; and they kept the name when they removed to the Devil or Rose Tavern, Temple Bar; he is not sure which.

The Kit-Cat Club, a poem, by R. B. Four leaves, 8vo.

The thanks of the literary world will be given to Mr. Baker for allowing an inspection and description of his most interesting collection, containing so many radiations from those who have left "long trails of light "descending down." And I thank him much for giving me the use of the volume in the room where hang the portraits of the members of the Club with which his ancestor's name is so intimately connected. Although Dryden's letters were known to Sir Walter Scott (see Scott's edition of Dryden's works), yet, as the contents of this volume are little known, it was thought better to briefly notice the contents of the letters of Dryden as well as of the others.

THE ORIGINAL CHARTERS, PAPERS, DEEDS, AND LETTERS OF CHARLES MICHAEL BERINGTON, ESQ., OF LITTLE MALVERN COURT,

(First Notice.)

In the library of Charles Berington, Esq., is contained a very large collection of early documents, ranging from the time of King John to the end of the last century. The greater portion of the collection has reference either to the history of the various families of which their owner is the representative, or to the property of which these families were the proprietors and occupants. Within a comparatively recent period large masses of these papers (especially the earlier ones) have perished by damp and otherwise; the portions however which remain are very considerable numerically, and of great interest and value. Their importance consists not so much in the light which they throw upon the general history of the nation, as upon the illustrations which they afford of the inner life of the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries, and in this respect they are worthy of a careful examination. The entire series has recently been most liberally submitted to my inspection by its owner, who is most anxious in every way in his power to forward the interests of the Commission. But the collection is too extensive to be exhausted in the course of a single visit, and I find it necessary in my present report to limit my notice to a general statement of the nature of the papers as they were presented to me, reserving to myself the privilege of a more systematic examination at some future period.

In dealing with these documents it may be convenient to classify them under certain chronological divisions, commencing with the Charters and papers anterior to the death of King Henry VIII.

The earliest Charters which have occurred among the bundles already opened are those which relate to grants made to the monastery of Little Malvern by Silvester, bishop of Worcester, and his successor in the same see, Walter de Cantilupe, confirmed by the earl of Gloucester of the period.

Charters relative to Presthemede, of the time of Edward I.

Charters relative to tenements in Newcastle-under-Lyme, temp. Edw. III.

Licence of Walter, abbot of Westminster, granting the request of John, prior of Little Malvern, to found an oratory at Bockebury, provided that the rights of the mother church of Longedone be not injured. Dated at Chaddesleye, 13 kal. Jun. 1289.

Charters respecting lands and tenements in Pershore, temp. Hen. VI.

Charters respecting lands in Leghe, granted by Alart Pepe, of Leghe, temp. Edw. III.

Lease of a tenement in Kersaltone, co. Surrey, "foranenst the cross," with a schedule of household necessaries left in the same (curious), dated 27 Hen. VII.

Letters and papers connected with the proceedings of the Council appointed by King Henry VII. for the management of the affairs of Prince Arthur and the Princess Catherine, his wife, while resident at Bewdeley. Among these may be mentioned the following:—

A letter from "H. Worcester" to the Princesse grace's counsail, without date.

Letter of John Russell, secretary to the said council, in answer to the above letter.

Letters (several) from John, bishop of Exeter, to the same.

Letters from Walter Devreux to the same.

Letter (holograph) of Thomas Audley, to "his brother "Russell, secretary with the Lady Princess."

Letters from the Commissioners for the pacification of the Marches of Wales.

Rules for the pacification of the same.

Various letters and papers of the time of Henry VIII.

Letter of William, Lord Wyndesore, to his cousin Russell, 35 Hen. VIII.

Depositions respecting the will of Thomas Holgrave.

Charters granted by the abbey of Gloucester, 28 Hen. VIII.

Letter (original) of Clement, abbot of Evesham, to "Mr. Secretary."

Depositions in a suit (23 Hen. VIII.) betwixt Thomas Foliatt, Esq., and John Frauncis.

Taxation of the subsidy for the first year, viz., 27 Hen. VIII. in the limits of John Russell and William Gower, Esqrs.

Various letters from Thomas Crumwell to Sir John Russell, Knight, and others, mostly undated, but one bearing the date 7 Dec. 30 Hen. VIII.

Appointment of Harry Russell, Esq., to be "Foster" of the late priory of Little Malvern, 23 Hen. VIII., with draft of his letter respecting the same.

"A device to make sure the manor of Hardwick;" two plans

Quietus given to John Russell, farmer, of Werepedyll, 24 Hen. VIII.

Lease of lands and tenements in Calais (5 Dec., 12 Hen. VIII.), by Sir William Barber, Knt., to John Russell, of the Frith, co. Surry, "squier."

Grant of tithes of corn in Besford, by "Johannes "episcopus Politensis, abbas Wigornie," to John Russell, Esquire, for his good counsel, 29 Hen. VIII.

Lease by the same abbot of Worcester, to John Russell, vicar of S. Andrew's of Pershore, of "Pershore "Mylls," 18 Hen. VIII.

Rentale terrarum et tenementorum nuper prioratus Minoris Malvernie.

Petition to the King for grant of restitution to Sir Richard Brunton and Joanna, his wife, daughter and heir of William Stanley, Esq., son of William Stanley, Knt., of lands, &c. forfeited by him. No date.

Letters-testimonial embodying depositions respecting the will of Thomas Holgrave, Gent., in 1527.

Grant of lands in Solihull, co. Warwick, by Richard Boteler, to Sir Edward Ferrers and others, 9 Hen. VIII.

Documents connected with lands, &c. in Solersbope, co. Heref., 24 Hen. VIII.

Account Book, containing the personal and private expenses of Thomas Holgrave, 15 Hen. VIII. (A curious volume.)

Letters to and from the family of Brocton (or Broughton), of Henley, co. Salop, from the reign of Hen. VIII.

Letters and papers connected with the descent of tenements and lands in Barrowe, co. Wigorn., between Henry Russell and Charles Brocton, 1 and 2 Philip and Mary.

Leases of lands in Ellefield, temp. Philip and Mary.

Letters-patent of Philip and Mary, granting to Henry Russell, Esq., and Charles Brocton, Gent. (in consideration of the faithful service heretofore rendered by the said Henry Russell, and of 413*l.* 18*s.* 6*d.* paid by the said Henry Russell and Charles Brocton), the demesne and manor of Little Malvern, with its appurtenances, &c., Barrowe, &c. Dated at Westm., 26 Sept., 1 and 2 Philip and Mary. The original, with the royal seal appended.

Household Book of Henry Russell, "since the death "of my mother."

General quitclaim, by John Webb, of London, Gent., of all debts due to him by Rowland Russell, of London, Gent., 40 Eliz.

Book of payment of Easter Dues of Little Malvern, 37 Eliz.

Another for A.D. 1609.

Another for A.D. 1614.

Letters from Richard Pigot, "from his chamber in "Oriel College," to Mr. Henry Russell, Little Malvern.

Letters from Matthew Bercw to Henry Russell, principal of Gloucester Hall, Oxford, 20 Eliz.

Letters of William Berowe of Bullocks Hall, county Hants.

Letters of John Higford, 1593.

Letters of John Halsey, 1601, 1604.

History of the priory of Little Malvern, by Rowland Reade.
Letters of Dorothy Lacon, 1647.
Letters of J. Grove, 1605.
Letter of Edward Penant, Avignon, 1765.

Mr. Berington permits me to state that he will be happy to afford every facility which I may require for the inspection of these portions of his papers which as yet remain unexamined; and further, that he is anxious to forward by every means in his power the objects contemplated by the Commission.

JOS. STEVENSON.

THE MANUSCRIPTS OF COLONEL MYDDELTON-BIDDULPH, CHIRK CASTLE, DENBIGHSHIRE.

The Manuscripts and greater portion of the old library are at present in a vaulted stone chamber on the first floor. The manuscript volumes are very few; the letters are numerous, but only a few of the time of Charles I are of public interest. On the partition some years ago of the vast estates of the Myddeltons, I think it most likely that great portions of the MS. correspondence went to one or both of the other coheiresses.

A 4to volume in English, 16th century, 227 leaves and one leaf of table, intituled, "History of the Kings "and Princes of Wales:" begins, "After that Cadwalla- "der the last King of the Britons descending from the "noble race of Trojans". . . . Ends (at 227a), "and "at this year the King built the castle and town of "Beaumarys. . . . After this there was nothing "done in Wales worthy memory, but that is to be redde "in the English Chronicles." At fol. 4 the author refers to Sir John Price's apology against the calumnies of Polydore Vergil.

A 4to volume in English, paper, 15th century, 33 leaves, imperfect at the beginning. It consists of medical recipes.

A folio volume in Latin, paper, 16th century, begins with fol. 64, and ends with fol. 85. It is a book of the Gaol Delivery of Newgate in London, for the 32nd and several succeeding years of Henry 8. It gives the names of the prisoners, their pleas and sentences, in very brief entries.

Books of orders at Quarter Sessions for Denbighshire from 1647 to near the end of the century; and a multitude of Rolls of the Quarter Sessions at Wrexham in the 17th century.

Queen Elizabeth's instructions to Henry Earl of Pembroke, President of the Council in Wales; dated at Windsor, 15th Sept. 1586; and a few other papers in other years relative thereto.

A 4to volume, paper, 17th century, contains lay and religious poems in English and Welsh.

A 4to volume, paper, 17th century, contains historical and genealogical notes in Welsh; about 180 leaves.

A folio volume, paper, 17th century, contains an account of the subscriptions of persons in all the parishes in London to the subsidy, 1643 and 1644.

A fragment of an 8vo volume, vellum, 14th century, beginning with fol. 55, and ending with fol. 100. It ends imperfectly in the 4th chapter of Articulus Septimus. It is a treatise on virtues and vices. The 19th chapter, De Elemosina, begins "Sanctus Judocus ex "regno Britonum;" there are other English examples.

Among the letters and miscellaneous papers, I noticed the following:—

1583. June 11. A notary public's declaration of Sir Henry Norris, captain of a company of English soldiers in Anvers, confessing that he owed to Sir William Middelton, an English merchant resident in Anvers, 37*l.* Flemish.

1636. June 19. Jonathan Edwards at Oxford to Walkyn Kyffin at Chirk. The King intends to come here (Oxford), and they are extremely strick to keep the city cleare and free from the sickness [in London] against he comes; on August 29th he will be here.

1636. Aug. 31. Jonathan Edwards to his brother, John Jones. He gives an account of the King's coming to Oxford, his reception and behaviour, the procession of the authorities, presentation of Oxford gloves to the King, his weariness at one speech, and satisfaction with another. A long and interesting letter.

1637. July 11. John Kyffin to Sir Thomas Middelton at Chirk. He is summoned to Chirke Castle and charged with half a musket; he has parted with all his property, except a pittance, to his two sons, therefore asks that he may be struck out from the list, and that they may be substituted.

1638. A long list of officers and gentlemen that have served abroad and are elected for His Majesty's service (to go into Scotland, 1638).

1639. May 27. Sir Edward Broughton of London to Gerrard Eyton. After matters of business he gives reports of the King's intended movements towards Scotland.

1644 and 1645. Various lists of men in differen regiments. Receipts for ammunition and arms by various captains.

1647. November 1. A letter from Chirk to Sir Thomas Middelton at Carew House in the Strand, about the charge on the Castle and the quartering of troops there by the Parliament.

1668. June 7. A news-letter from London.

1676. July. A note of a great storm in the county of Denbigh. Above thirty county bridges must be necessarily rebuilt or repaired.

1608. Nov. 2. A note of Muster of the clergy at Whelford; giving their names, the arms for which they were liable, and whether they were furnished or not.

It is worth noting that during the forage for MSS. in the old tower a very fair copy of Caxton's edition of the Polycronicon was discovered; it has six leaves of the table at the beginning, and wants all after the 4th chapter of the last book (the last book being Caxton's own composition). In other respects the volume seems perfect.

In the Library are a few old letters laid down in a volume. One is a holograph letter by Charles I, intimating his intention to come to Chirk Castle, and one by John Watts, giving an account of the defence of the Castle against the Rebels.

The Manorial Records are abundant. Among them is a very long roll for Moghant, 34 & 35 Edw. 3. Under the heading "Irrotulamentum pro magistro "dil Halstan" is the following entry:—"Jevan ap "Madoc Keffyn cepit firmam fraternitatis hospitalis "Sancti Johannis infra marchiam Powys pro 4*l.* hoc

Digitized by Google

" anno plegio Madoc Keffyn patris sui solum ad festa, " &c. . . . sut pena 20*s.* ad utrumque diem; et " nisi fecerit concedit quod intratur super se heredes " et executores suos pena et districtione super hoc " provise, &c."

Of the 13 Richard 2 is a large roll, Computus of the bailiffs of Richard, Earl of Arundell, and accounts of the farmers of the demesne there.

And a great number of court rolls of the times of Edw. 3 and Richard 2 and later, for Chirk and Moghant, including one of 1655 for Chirk and Chirkland, while the estate was in the hands of the Protector.

Colonel Bidduiph's hospitality and attention during my stay at his magnificent border Castle made me regret that the Manuscripts there were not still more numerous. A packet of interesting Civil War letters was a short time since carefully put aside, and unfortunately is not for the present at hand.

ALFRED J. HORWOOD.

COLONEL CAREW'S MSS. AT CROWCOMBE COURT.

Colonel Carew possesses a manuscript of the tenth century of great value and exquisite beauty. It is a copy of the Evangelia according to St. Jerome, with parallelisms according to the canons of Eusebius* of Cæsarea, who flourished in the early part of the fourth century, and who seems to have formed a sort of harmony of or concordance to the four Evangelists, which he divided into ten canons or tables, classing the events accordingly as the narratives occurred. In the left-hand margin level with the text St. Jerome† places the references to the like narratives in the other gospels, numbering from 1 to 10, thus,—

1. Matthew, Mark, Luke, John.
2. Matthew, Mark, Luke.
3. Matthew, Luke, John.
4. Matthew, Mark, John.
5. Matthew, Luke.
6. Matthew, Mark.
7. Matthew, John.
8. Luke, Mark.
9. Luke, John.

10. Solus, i.e., when the passage only occurs in one Evangelist.

The following examples will fully explain my meaning:—

Notior " opus me cogis facere ex vetere," and ending " Opto ut " in Christo valeas, et memineris mei, Papa beatissime. " Amen."

This epistle is followed by the prologue beginning, " Plures fuisse qui evangelia scripserint," and ending " quam viris ecclesiasticis canendas."

Then comes the Epistle of Eusebius to Carpianus commencing, " Eusebius Carpiano fratri in Domino " salutem. Ammonius quidam Alexandrinus magno " studio atquo industria unum nobis pro quatuor Evan- " geliis dereliquit," and ending, " Opto ut in Christo " valeas et memineris mei, papa beatissime." This is followed by Jerome's 2nd epistle to Pope Damasus commencing, " Sciendum etiam nequem ignarum ex simili- " tudine numerorum error involvat;" ending, " non " potest contra id comparatio esse quod solum est." Then comes the preface of St. Victor,† bishop of the city of Capua, beginning, " Cum fortuitu in manus meas " unum ex quatuor evangelium incideret ex absente " titulo;" ending, " et quæ sunt bona sectemur." Then follows the argumentum of St. Jerome on the Gospel according to St. Matthew, which begins, " Matthæus ex " Judæa sicut et in ordine primus ponitur, ita evange- " lium in Judæa primus scripsit," and ends, " et operan- " tis Dei intelligendam diligenter esse dispositionem " quærentibus non tacere."

Then begin the Capitula,‡ or brief abridgment of St. Matthew's Gospel, unfortunately imperfect, as it ends with the events recorded in chapter xxv. v. 33 of the present version; this is followed by a very elaborate illumination of St. Matthew writing his Gospel. Then follows an illuminated page containing the words: " Liber Generationis Jesu Christi." Then comes the Gospel of St. Matthew, which also is unfortunately imperfect. The verse 22 of the Vulgate, chapter ix., commencing, " Multi dicunt mihi," breaks off after " in tuo nomine dæmonia ejecimus," and the rest of chapter 7, to the middle of v. 18 of chapter 8.

Afterwards St. Jerome's Argumentum on St. Mark, which is followed by the Capitula, the last page of which and the portrait of St. Mark, with the page containing the illumination of the first verse of his Gospel, together with the first page of the Gospel are evidently missing, as it begins with the 17th verse of the first chapter, " Et " dixit eis Jesus."

St. Mark's Gospel is followed by the prologue or argument to St. Luke. Then come the Capitula. Then the illumination of St. Luke.

Immediately after the illumination of St. Luke there is another page also highly illuminated for the first twenty one words of the gospel, bnt an ornamental Q§ alone occurs. Then follows the Gospel itself.

After St. Luke's Gospel is the prologue or argument to St. John's Gospel, followed by the Capitula.

Then the illumination of St. John writing his Gospel, which is followed by another illumination of the first verse: " In principio verbum et verbum erat apud " Doum et Deus erat verbum." Then the Gospel itself comes.

Immediately after St. John's Gospel begins the " Capitulatio Evangeliorum," which is a lectionary, or list of lessons from the gospels read on Sundays and feast days at that time, extending over 27 pages. It is nearly the same as the Roman Breviary. The following specimen will explain its nature:

Incipit capitulatio evangeliorum:—

[I]n vigilia Domini de nocte secundum Lucam, capitulo primo:

In illo tempore exit edictum a Cæsare, usque: Pax hominibus bonæ voluntatis.

Mane prima secundum Lucam capitulo tertio. In illo tempore pastores loquebantur adinvicem. Usque: Sicut dictum est ad illos.

[I]n die natalis domini secundum Johannem capitulo primo. Initium sancti evangelii secundum Johannem:

In principio erat verbum, et verbum erat apud Deum. Usque: Plenum gratiæ et veritatis.

In natali sancti Stephani secundum Mathæum, capitulo ducentesimo quadragesimo. In illo tempore dicebat Jesus turbis Judæorum: Ecce ego mitto ad vos prophetas. Usque: Benedictus qui venit in nomine Domini.

[I]n natali sancti Johannis Apostoli secundum Johannem, capitulo ducentesimo tricesimo secundo. In illo. Dixit Jesus Petro, Sequere me, conversus Petrus vidit illum. Usque: Et scimus quia verum est testimonium ejus.

In natale Innocent[i]um secundum Mathæum, capitulo sexto. In illo tempore. Ecce angelus domini apparuit in somnis Josepho. Usque: Quoniam Nazarænus vocabitur.

[I]n natali sancti Silvestri, die tricesimo primo mensis Decembris secundum Mathæum capitulo ducentesimo sexagesimo tertio. In illo tempore. Dixit Jesus discipulis suis. Vigilate ergo quia nescitis diem. Usque: Super omnia bona sua constituet eum.

In octabas Domini ad sanctam Mariam ad martyres secundum Lucam, capitulo tertio. In illo tempore. Postquam consummati sunt dies octo. Usque: Priusquam in utero conciperetur.

[D]ominica prima post natale Domini, secundum Lucam capitulo tertio. In illo tempore. Fuit Joseph et Maria mater Jesu. Usque: Et gratia Dei erat in illo.

In vigilia de Theophania secundum Mathæum, capitulo sexto. In illo tempore. Defuncto autem Herode. Usque: Quoniam Nazarænus vocabitur.

[I]n Theophania secundum Mathæum capitulo quarto. In illo tempore. Cum natus esset Jesus in Bethleem Judæ. Usque: Per aliam viam reversi sunt in regionem suam.

In octabas Epiphaniæ capitulo decimo tertio secundum Mathæum. In illo tempore. Venit Jesus a Galilæa in Jordane ad Johannem. Usque: Hic est filius meus in quo mihi complacuit.

[D]ominica prima post Theophaniam secundum Lucam capitulo tertio. In illo tempore. Cum factus esset Jesus annorum duodecim usque: Et gratia apud Deum et homines.

After the Capitulatio Evangeliorum is the well-known letter addressed to King Alfred by Fulco, Archbishop of Rheims, who held that see from A.D. 883 to A.D. 900. The object of the letter is to introduce to King Alfred a priest named Grimbald, whom he praises highly for his piety and learning. Fulco's Epistle has been printed more than once. Michael Alford* first made it public in the year 1663 in his Annals of the Church of England, published in Latin under the title of "Fides Regia Britannica, sive Annales Ecclesiæ "Britannicæ." He states that he extracted the letter "e manuscripto codice Annalium Wintoniensium, qui "Liber de Hida appellatur."†

The second publication of Archbishop Fulco's letter was in the year 1722, by the Rev. Francis Wise, in his edition of Asser's Life of Alfred the Great, and was probably derived from the present manuscript. He says, "Epistolam Fulconis Rhemorum Archiepiscopi mihi be"nigne impertivit V.R. Thomas Ford, A.M. Eccl. de "Banwell in agro Somersetensi Vicarius, et Eccl. Wel"lensis Præbendarius, qui illam (in fine vetusti MS. "Evangelii scriptam, atque in latriuam tantum non de"trusam) ab interitu peropportune vindicavit. Hanc "nunquam vidit Flodoardus, utcunque alias in scriptis "Fulconis recensendis diligens inquisitor."

Now at the end of Colonel Carew's manuscript these words occur, "Th. Ford, 19th Sept.," ‡ which I think goes far to establish the fact that Wise derived his copy of Archbishop Fulco's letter from this identical manuscript. How it descended to the family to which it now belongs I have not yet been able to ascertain.

A list is added of the principal verses, paragraphs, and words which are omitted in the older MSS., such as the Sinaitic (middle of fourth century), Vatican (middle of fourth century), and Alexandrian (middle of fifth century), with the results of a collation of the corresponding portions of the Carew MS. Various readings or mistranslations are not noticed.

The references to the Sinaitic, Vatican, and Alexandrian MSS. are taken from Tischendorf's New Testament.

St. Matthew.

MSS. LATELY IN THE POSSESSION OF MRS. COLLIS, LEICESTER.

By the kindness of the Rev. Edmund Knight, Vice-President of St. Mary's College, Oscott, I have had the opportunity of examining some early writings, the property of Mrs. Collis of Leicester. A note of the more curious of these papers is given below.

I. "Th'order of Common Praier. The Ministracion "of Christes Holye Sacramentes and of Christian "Discipiyne, usede in the Englishe Congregacion "at Frankeforde."

This MS. consists of 26 folio pages in a contemporary English hand. It consists of the following parts:—

Digitized by Google

1. Preface, stating the reasons which have induced the Pastor and Elders of this congregation, with the learned of the same, to collect this compendious order, &c., which they offer to the whole Congregation to observe and keep for the present time.
2. "Th'order of Common Praier at Mornynge and "Evenynge."
3. "The Communion."
4. "Publique Baptisme."
5. "The forme of Solemnization of Matrimony."
6. "The Visitacion of the Sicke."
7. "A Catechisme, that is to saye, an Instruction to "be lerned of everye childe before he be brought and "admitted to receve the Lordes Supper."

The concluding question and answer in this Catechism are as follows:—

Question.—How comme thees thinges to passe?

Answer.—Thees thinges comme to passe bye a certeine secret meane and livelye workeinq of the Spret, when we believe that Christ, once for all, gave up His Bodye and Blonde for us to make a sacrifice and most pleasaunt offerringe to His Heavenlye Father. And also when we confesse and acknowledge Hym our onlye Saviour, Hye Bishope, and Mediator and Redemer. To whom is due all honour and glorye.

8. Th'order of discipline in the English Churche of Francksforde receyved.

a. Perteinynge to the whole Congregation.

b. Perteinynge to the Ministers and Elders alone.

9. A prayer for the desolate Church of England; for the city of Frankfort, with the Burgomasters and Magistrates thereof; and for the Church of Zurich; that all may be delivered from the cruel persecutions and tyranny of idolatrous Papista.

10. A prayer for King Philip and Queen Mary, that God would turn their hearts so that in England they may become of persecutors favourers, of hinderers promoters, and of blasphemers setters forth of God's Name and Gospel.

II. A MS. in 4to, consisting of 73 pages, containing, "The common crye of Englishe men made to the "most noble ladie Quene Eliz. and the High Conrte "of Parleament assembled at Westminster in the "monthe of Octobre, the eight yere of her moste "happie reigne for England."

The petitioners urge the Queen to marry, so as to avoid the miseries likely to ensue from a disputed succession in the event of her death without issue. They enlarge upon the dangers which threaten England from political combinations abroad and internal divisions; and from "Titlers, west and north," i.e., Ireland and Scotland. They complain that at present "Will rules, "and Reason is banished," whereas, if the Queen would settle the succession to the Crown, "gaping "cormorants would be choked with their own un- "saciable yet famished lust."

III. Portion of another Petition to Queen Elizabeth (the former having failed), praying that the succession after her and hers may be ordered and stablished.

Original draft with corrections, a fragment only of one leaf.

IV. Letter to Lord [probably Lord Robert Dudley, Earl of Leicester], protesting against a decree which "is either past, or even at hand to compel "us either against our consciences to wear the old "Popish apparel, or else with the loss of our "livings to be deposed from our ministry." The writer asks the "Earl's" assistance in this matter.

Contemporary copy, 7 pp. folio.

V. Notes upon the Treatise of R. against Bishop J.,* intended for a reply thereto, and a vindication of the Bishop. Divided into two parts,—

a. On the Canon of the Mass. 11 pp. folio.

b. Similar notes upon the doctrine of the B. Eucharist. 21 pp. folio.

 It is probable that Articles IV. and V. (the Letter to the Earl of Leicester, and the notes for the Vindication of Bishop Jewel), are to be ascribed to Thomas Sampson, Dean of Ch. Ch., Oxford, one of the most determined opponents of the square cap and surplice, who rather than conform to their use, resigned his Deanery. (See a letter from him to Henry Bullinger, with Bullinger's reply, in the Zurich Letters, pp. 153, 345.) Among the collections formerly belonging to Mrs. Collis are several other treatises, printed and in manuscript, one of which bears his name; all of them supporting the principles with which he was identified.

THE MANUSCRIPTS OF RICHARD CORBET, ESQ., AT MARKET DRAYTON

Here are some deeds of the 13th, 14th, and later centuries relating to Shropshire lands. The most noticeable are:—

A release by Hugh de Bois (de Bosco) to his lord, lord John de Verdun, of one pair of iron spurs, which Walter de Say was wont annually to pay for his land of Wytheges, and a release of all his land and wood which he had enclosed within the park of Stokes. Dated 42 Henry 3.

Grant by Hugh de Bois to Walter de Say, lord of Stokes, of all his part in Wythegyns, as set out by Roger de Pyulesdone, sheriff of Salop,* and other faithful neighbours, viz. (here follow the boundaries). Temp. Henry 3.

Hugh de Say to lord John de Verdun: grants all his land in North Stokes and South Stokes, in the county of "Salopiswyr," in exchange for the manor of Thober in Ireland, and six librates, ten solidates, and five denariates of lands and rents in Stabel iban in Ireland. The witnesses are Philip Lunell, Treasurer of London, dominus Arnulf de Berkele, clerk of the said Treasurer, &c. No date, but early in the reign of Edw. 1.

Grant by Helias de Say, son of Hugh de Say, of a rent out of land in Nordstoke to the Church of St. John the Evangelist of Haghemond. Seal of green wax, two inches broad: a man on horseback. In this grant he mentions Avice his wife.

Another grant by the same to the same of the same lands; but the words and witnesses are not quite the same. It has a seal of brown wax.

Confirmation by Robert de Say to the same church of the gift which his brother Helias de Say had made of the rent, "cum corpore suo." Witnesses, Baldwin de Hodenet, Stephen his brother, &c.

The last three are undated, but are of the time of Henry 3.

A narrow slip of parchment containing 2½ lines in Latin:—"This is the testament of Elias de Say of "Stoke. Gives his soul to God and his body to the "church of Haghemond, and with his body one mark "yearly, to wit, 12*s.* 4*d.* from William the son of Nico- "las de Blotchley, and 12*d.* from land of Hugh de "Stuche, six oxen from Suthstoke, one horse at North- "stoke, ten sums of rye on the land, and ten sums of "oats in the barn of Suthstoke." No date, but temp. Henry 3. A label for the seal remains.

Grants to the Abbats of Cumbermere, including one (by Hugh the son of William lord of Eton) of a piece of land next his meadow of Plathay sufficient to dry the hay when he cut that meadow, and a right of way. No date, but 13th century.

Grants to John de Verdun, lord of Stoke, who appears to have bought up the interests of many of his tenants.

Grants by the Abbat and Convent of Cumbermere.

Grant by Richard, son of Yvo, lord of Tunstal, of land in frankalmoyne "una cum presenti corpore meo." 13th century.

Early grants by Henry de Ferrars and Isabel his wife (who it appears was a daughter of Theobald de Verdun) in the 14th century; and by Wm. de Ferrars, lord of Stoke, in the 14th century.

By one of these deeds Isabel agrees to grant to two persons six score acres of land in fee tail at 12*d.* an acre, and fourteen score acres more, so that there be fourteen tenants and heriots on death and two appearances at the Court of Stoke. 6 Edw. 3. Two beautifully cut seals in red wax are on the skin, and not on labels.

Grants in the 14th century by the Corbets, lords of Hadleye.

In 1525, is a lease by the Abbat and Convent of Cumbermere to Griffin, son of Stephen de Lee, of the manor of Chesthull for 26 years by the service of one rose; the lessee to get license from the King to enter on the land, and to find hospitality for Cistercian monks.

By a deed of the 13th century, R. Abbat and the Convent of Cumbermere granted to William le Bake a burgage in Great Drayton.

* This name may be found in Blakeway's "Sheriffs of Shropshire;" but it is not found in the official list given in the Deputy Keeper's Report for 1870.

By a deed of 11 Edw. 3, Richard de Preyers, son and heir of Robert, granted a burgage in Great Drayton.

In 22 Henry 8 is an Exemplification of a recovery suffered by the Marquis of Dorset of the manor of Stokes;

And a release of the same date of the same manor by Richard Lord Grey;

And a receipt of the same date by the Marquess for the balance of the purchase money on the sale of the manor of Stoke upon Tyerne to Sir Thomas Aleyn; and the Deed of Sale.

A Deed of Exchange by Wm. Hill, clerk, rector of the parish church of Stoke, with Roland Hill, lord of the manor, of the parsonage for the Hall of Stoke; and confirmation by the Bishop of Lichfield and Coventry, and Henry the dean, and the chapter of the Cathedral. Signatures of Hill and the Bishop, and seals of all. 31 Hen. 8. And other documents connected with the exchange.

Private copies, on gilt-edged letter paper of the last century, of the 2nd and 3rd letters of the Prince of Wales to the King (Prince Frederick to George 2). In the 2nd he apologises for leaving Hampton Court, but the circumstances of the Princess obliged. In the 3rd he thanks the King for being godfather, and asks leave to come to Court. Appended is a copy of the King's reply by Lord Dunmore: "The Prince has his "orders, and the King does not make any alteration "in them."*

Perhaps the most interesting article in this small collection is a quarto volume, of papers written by different hands. It begins with "certyn ordinances "paynes in the Great Courtes of Drayton in Hales, "holden before Sir Rowland Hill, Kt., and begun in "the 38th year of King Henry 8." The last entry is for 1720. The rules are for the management of the town and its inhabitants. Penalties are imposed for playing at tables, cards, dice, and other unlawful games, and for affrays. Measures for corn are to be marked or sealed with the Lord's mark or seal. There are regulations for bakers, for trading, for roads, paths, and a variety of other matters.

I gladly acknowledge the assistance given and attention shown to me by Mr. Wilkinson, of Market Drayton (Mr. Corbet's agent there).

THE MANUSCRIPTS OF W. BROMLEY-DAVENPORT, ESQ., M.P., AT BAGISTON HALL, IN WARWICKSHIRE.

There is a large wooden case containing many hundreds of ancient deeds relating to Warwickshire property, and with them are a few Court Rolls of the Manor of Haseley. In one of the bundles of deeds was a paper indorsed, "John Weale's note of the grant to me of "Shakspeare's house, by goodwife Sharpe." The document is dated 4th of March 97, and is signed with "the mark of John Weale." It states that John Weale of Hatters, had "given, granted, and assigned to Job "Throckmorton of Haseley, in the county of Warwick, "esquire, and to his heirs for ever, all his right, &c., "in a certain cottage or tenement, with the appur- "tenances in Haseley aforesaid, wherein one Will[m] "Shakspeare now dwelleth." A hand of the last century has indorsed this document as of the year 1697; but the writing and the name of the grantee (Job Throckmorton) prove that the document is of the year 1597. The name of Shakspeare was not uncommon in the county; but, having regard to the Christian name and the date, an examination of the Court Rolls for Haseley may be suggested.

Several of the deeds are of the 12th century, and several dozen of the 13th century are grants to the Church of Bordelegh.

In the Library are a good many very interesting Manuscripts. The following four are bound in one volume.

Contemporary copy of Walter Travers's letter to the Lords of the Council, praying that the Archbishop's prohibition of his preaching at the Temple might be recalled. (The controversy is mentioned in Izaak Walton's Life of Hooker. The letter has been printed).

Johannis Rainoldi ultima prælectio habita 5° Julii 1593. Begins, "Moyses ex Aegypto filios Israelis;" ends, "et imperium in omnem æternitatem, Amen." (Folio, 8 leaves, closely written.)

A treatise headed—

"The grievous sigh & lamentation of a dutiful "subject at the view and remembrance of some law- "lesse procee[dings which] are and have bin used of "late dayes, contrary to the old awncient & honor- "able course of Justice of this realme in former tymes, "with an earnest desyre of the restitution & restaw- "ration of such things as have bin an honour & "renowne to our noble nation in tymes past." Begins, "I take it for granted as a thing cleare & out of "controversy that in regard of the princesse herself "under whom we live." Ends, "the peace & union "of the whole commonwealth, which the Lord prolong "& maintain to his glory, maulgre the contrarye "practises of all those disguised & malicious plat "framers." (Folio, 16th century.)

A comparison of the translations of the Bible; the vulgar Latin and that which is out of the original Latin and Greek.

There is a folio volume in which have been placed various original letters, amongst which are—

James 1 (sign manual) to Sir Jno. Fortescue, Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster (dated, Hampton Court, 7 Feb., 1 Jac.), directing him to "survey the "lands upon the borders of England & Scotland, "betwixt the rivers Sark & Leven, lately inhabited "by the Graymes & other disorderly persons, & "known in right to be our demesne," and to draw up a book for granting it to the Earl of Cumberland by the 40th part of a knight's fee; the rent to be left blank.

Letter by Wm. London (Bishop Juxon) appointing Abraham Wright to preach at Paul's on a certain day.

The proceeding to the Christening of the Prince, 27 June 1630. (Copy addressed to Mr. Abraham Wright.) (6¼ pages.)

A paper respecting certain privateers acting under King James's commission in 1692, who were taken and try'd as pirates.

Copy of Instructions for levying Ship money, Whitehall, 12 Aug. 1635. (3¾ pages.)

Privy Council letter issued on the prayer of the Duchess of Buckingham. A conspiracy was carried on by one La Meer and his mother, and divers other persons, against the Duke. The Attorney General is ordered to take to his assistance Sir James Butler, Kt., or any other Justice of the Peace, and take depositions and make report. Dated 3 March 1679.

Another Privy Council letter. Two of His Majesty's physicians, or any other appointed by the Attorney General, are to repair to John Gadbury at his house in Westminster, and report on his health to the Justices of the King's Bench on Friday, the 14th, by 8 a.m. Dated 12 May 1680.

A letter, dated Rome, 3 Sept. 1681, addressed to M. de Barillon, Ambassadeur extraordinaire de France à Londres, from le Cardinal Depres, recommending the bearer to the Ambassador's protection.

Another letter, dated Rome, 15 Oct. 1685. Beginning, "Very Reverend P. Confessor;" signed, "your "brother Vincent B." . . . . The person addressed will shortly have to go to England; the writer gives curious directions for dress and behaviour. The person addressed was the Rev. Ambrose Grimes, Confessor to the Nuns of St. Dominic at Brussels.

Original sealed order, dated 5 Jan. 1686, by Vincentius de Torre Martini, Provincial in England, ordering Grimes to come to England.

Memorandum by Lord Chief Justice Heath, of what took place on Strafford's impeachment, between the King, the Judges, and Bishops.

Original holograph letter by Ben Jonson, addressed, "To my right worthy friend, Mr. Geo. Garrard," sending an Epitaph (of 14 lines, also holograph) on 'Sell Boulstred. The lady's epitaph is rather poor, although Jonson, by his letter, thought well of it. I do not find it among his printed works, and therefore subjoin it—

Stay, view this stone, and if thou beest not such,
Read here a little that thou may'st know much;
It covers first a Virgin, and then one
That durst be that in Court; a virtu 'alone
To fill an Epitaph. But she had more,
She might have claym'd t' have made the Graces four,
Taught Pallas language, Cynthia modesty,
As fit to have increas'd the harmony
Of spheares, as light of Starres: she was earth's Eye,
The sole religious House and Votary,
With rites not bound, but conscience. Would'st thou all?
She was 'Sell Boulstred. In which name I call
Up so much truth as could I *here pursue
Might make the fable of Good Women true.

From Ben Jonson's letter it would seem that he composed and wrote the verses while Mr. Garrard's man waited.

Privy Seal Warrant by Anne, Queen of James 1, for John Woolf to be apothecarie to provide sweet powders, waters, perfumes, &c. 26 Nov. 1604.

Another, directing a patent for Sir Robt. Arton, our Secretarie of the offices of Secretary and Master of our Requests. Oct. 20, 1612.

Warrant, signed Jane Drummond, ordering patents for inalienable annuities for four musicians, viz., Lewis Richart, 155*l.*; Camille Prevost, 130*l.*; Claude Olivier, 100*l.*; and Peter de la Mare, 115*l.*, during their lives and service. Whitehall, 7 April 1612.

Fabian's Chronicle. Folio, paper. Down to 17 Hen. 6 it is by one hand of the 15th century; the remainder, ending 3 Henry 8, is by a hand of the 16th century. Ends, "It was then sold for 12*d.*; and for a mark a "quarter."

There are several MS. volumes by James Wright, a barrister of the Temple in the 17th and 18th centuries, as follow:—

Pedigrees and extracts from books. Folio.

Prosapiæ majores: baronial pedegrees from the Conquest to 1707. A thick folio.

Poems by James Wright. In quarto.

Historical Collections, in four 4to. volumes, from the death of King Charles 2 to 1714. These seem to be James Wright's original composition and the results of his own observation.

A translation of the Père d'Orleans' account of the Revolution.

Miscellaneous Collections relating to the County of Rutland.

Miscellanea and Collectanea (biographical, genealogical, literrary, and historical). A folio volume.

There is also a 12° volume of sermons by Abraham Wright (whose appointment to preach at Paul's has been previously noticed).

ALFRED J. HORWOOD.

THE MANUSCRIPTS OF W. BROMLEY-DAVENPORT, ESQ., M.P., AT CAPESTHORNE, IN CHESHIRE.

The manuscripts here are not so numerous as those at Baginton, but are nevertheless interesting.

A folio volume, paper, partly of the 15th century, contains a miscellaneous collection, chiefly by Humphry Newton of Powmill, Co. Chester, Esq., born (according to entries of births, deaths, and marriages at the beginning of the volume) on Thursday, 3rd October 1466, and married to Elena, daughter and heir of Thomas Fiton, Esq., of Pennial, on the 7th April 1490. The contents are—

Another poem in a later hand, written down both margins. The first line is very indistinct at the end.

Begins "The God of love." The second column.

Ends "Then met I that may that was bright shene
And kist her and clipped her ever at my will.
She said that she loved me & that night then
I said that she myxt me let save & spil."

The remainder is very faded on the first margin of the next page.

Littera amandi, et nomen de illâ est expressum. Eight lines in English, beginning—
"Most soveren lady comfort of care."
(The initial letters make Margaret.)
Alia de alia. (The initials make Elin).
Alia de homine. (The initials make Brian).
Three stanzas of eight lines each, on the Month.
Three stanzas, eight lines each, beginning—
"Fare well that was my lof deare."

A poem of nearly 20 lines, beginning—
"I pray you . . . to me be true

An alliterative poem of 50 lines.

Begins "On clife yat castell so knettered
As cloude make knagged & knattered."

Philomena, Fabula. Fifty-six stanzas of 7 lines.

Begins "Meved of corage by virtue of the season
In pryme tens revolved yere by yere."

At the end "Explicit fab. de Philomena. Humfrey Newton."

In this poem is an allusion to the death of "the Duke of Warwick."

An old table of contents at the beginning of the poetry contains amongst other items "Vera fabula "que Johannes Ludgate faciebat, et in octavo verau," which seems absent. At the end are some recipes for ink and colours. "Explicit liber quoth Humphridus del Newton." In the middle of this very curious manuscript volume was bound up a large portion (51 leaves) of the rare edition, printed at St. Alban's in 1486, of Dame Juliana Berners's Treatises.†

A folio volume, paper, of the 17th century, contains "Forma coronacionis regum et reginarum Angliæ," beginning, Imprimis princeps noster coronandus ante

* Author of The Sphere of Gentry.

* These are supposed to be by Sir John Fortescue, Chancellor to King Henry 6. See Viscount Clermont's Life and Works of Chancellor Fortescue.

† The printed portion and the MS. have lately been severed, and bound separately.

The search of the Records in the Tower. (Half a page, showing what the different rolls contain.)

Offices in the Court of Common Pleas at Westminster in the gift of the Chief Justice (except five): with their duties. (2 pages.)

The contents of the Patent to Dr. Chambers and Mr. Browne, for fines, &c., 5 Charles 1, 1629. (Dr. Brown, was Sewer in ordinary to the King.)

A folio volume, paper, 17th century, contains collections for the History of Cheshire. Grant to Macclesfield School by King Edward 6. Documents regarding the Forest of Macclesfield. Copy of Inventory made 3 Edward 6, of plate, church vestments, &c. at Alderley. Note of Alderley parish money (a Ralph Hollinshede of Heywood, gentleman, is party to a deed of 1580 as one of trustees of Charity land). Names of the Justices of the Peace, 1603. Account of Alderley and its lordship. Notes of the County Palatine. The myse of the county, 1502. Account of Nantwich, Prosbury, and Macclesfield. List of Sheriffs since 1574 to 1663.

There are loose papers, among which I noticed a Copy of Verses by Henry Marten on the death of his nephew, Chas. Edmonds, Esq., who died 7 July 1661, at 30. There are 36 lines, dated Tower, 21 July 1661. They are very poor. Marten was the regicide; he died at Chepstow in 1680.

Housekeepers and wardrobers fees at Whitehall, Hampton Court, and Theobalds. 1625. (1 page.)

Note of officers in the King's house and the auditors places.

Declaration by Sir George Booth, 1659–60, against the Parliamentary Government.

Certificate, signed and sealed by P. Venables and H. Lucy, that Philip Ward and his servant had not been in any place infected by the plague. Sept. 7, 1665: and Warrant by Robert Napper, Mayor of Dorchester, to allow them to fetch something of Ward's from Dorchester and go to Capesthorne. Sept. 25, 1665.

These two last items show the prudent care taken to prevent contagion.

Besides the above are several manuscripts which deserve a short notice.

A Book of Offices, 15th century, Grolier binding. Another, of French origin, 15th century, with most exquisite paintings.

Psalter and Service Book, large 8vo, beautiful.

Petrarch's Sonnets and Triumphs. Folio, vellum, 15th century, in fine condition; but about a quire is wanting at the end.

Geoffrey de Imola de arte loquendi liber ad papam Innocentium III.; accedit Amphitrion sive de Jovis et Alcmenæ amoribus. 14th century. The first work was printed by Leyser. Roscoe says that the second is not in the Holkham MS.

Speculum humanæ salvationis. Large quarto, German work of the 15th century. A remarkable volume. The latin text seems to be that of the celebrated block book. Each of the 45 chapters has at its head four coloured drawings.

Roman Missal, folio, vellum, 15th century. The first page is illuminated in a most gorgeous and beautiful manner.

Clementis V. Papæ Constitutiones a Johanne XXI. confirmatæ et Avinione publicatæ, 1318. This is of the 15th century, with the commentary of John Andreas.

There are a great number of deeds of the 13th and 14th centuries, concerning lands now or formerly the property of the Davenports at Capesthorne, Merton, Somerford, &c.; and concerning the serjeanty of the forest of Macclesfield; and a roll 3 inches wide and nearly 2 feet long, giving an account of robbers beheaded by the Davenports who held the office; the roll is, I think, of the time of Edward 2.

Among the deeds I noted especially the following:—

An Inquisition (temp. Hen. 3), with seals of the jurors, returning that Vivian de Davenport had against his will exchanged with Ranulph, formerly Earl of Chester, his park, &c. of Macclesfield for the serjeanty of Macclesfield and the puture to the said serjeanty belonging. This feudal office, formerly involving the power of life and death, without appeal, has ever since remained in the family, and is now vested in Mr. Bromley-Davenport.

A deed (temp. Ed. 1), being a promise by Hugh de Calveleigh to let certain land go to his son; penalty of 20*l.* of gold to the Queen, and the like to the relief of the Holy Land; and he renounces all exceptions by the civil and canon law.

A document (temp. Hen. 4), dated Candelwikstret, London, 7th Nov., being the admission of Roger Calveley of Kyllingale, co. York, who was apprentice of John Creek, citizen and tailor of London, and was sworn temp. Richard Merlawe, Mayor, and John Proffyt, Chamberlain. Entered in book C. of purchase of liberties and of franchises. Seal of red wax with device and legend.

Order, by Edward son of Henry 6, as Earl of Chester, to take the outlawed persons named in the schedule. It is addressed to John Davenport, and is dated 37 Hen. 6. The schedule contains many names.

A parchment roll of the 15th century, containing general and English history down to Hen. 5. It is enclosed in a case with glass front, about 2 feet high. Each end of the roll is on a roller, so that it can be unfolded and any part be consulted without opening the case.

A roll of the 8 James 1, containing the taxation money, for Macclesfield, Wm. Davenport being principal collector.

Letters patent (8 Hen. 6) appointing John de Davenport to collect the proportion of the Northwich hundred of the subsidy of 1,000 marks for the support of the King in his wars.

In a cabinet are numerous letters of the last century; but the few mentioned here are all that require notice.

Several letters from E. Digby, M.P. in 1741, 1742 and 1743, to J. Davenport, Esq., of Capesthorne, giving him news and accounts of proceedings in Parliament. One dated from Coleshill, in 1741, comments on the Duchess of Marlborough's will, her legacy to Pitt, &c. One in 1742 comments on the votes in the House of Lords on the Gin Act.

A letter from D. Davenport to his maternal grandfather, John Wood of Capesthorne, dated Feb. 1, 1745, states that "the infection among cattle about town (London) is "very bad, and has carried off most of the cows, but "has not affected any oxen, so that people eat beef as "usual and drink milk; for the cattle that are infected "it is said give no milk. Veal is the only thing objected "to, and I believe very few eat that."

Digby's letters contain much about the Duke and Duchess of Beaufort's divorce. One letter notices changes in ministerial posts.

A letter from Liverpool in 1746 is noticeable, having regard to recent discussions on the etymology of the name, because the stamped post mark is Leverpool.

At both his houses Mr. Davenport so welcomed and entertained me and lightened my labours that I cannot in my remembrances place Baginton after Capesthorne, or Capesthorne before Baginton.

ALFRED J. HORWOOD.

The Manuscripts of C. Cottrell Dormer, Esq., Rousham, near Oxford.

This is an interesting collection. In the 16th century William Dormer married Mary Sidney, an aunt of Sir Philip Sidney, and became by this marriage brother-in-law to one Earl of Leicester and uncle to another. In the next century the Cottrells were faithful to their king and his family when in trouble and in exile, and in that and the next century held office at Court. The letters and papers at Rousham are the results of those connexions and employments, and are of peculiar interest.

A packet of letters numbered—

1. Copy of a letter from the King of Navarre (on his departure) to his wife (no date). This is a translation into English. He regrets the unhappiness of his wife; mentions the injuries to those of his religion; "we "have received advice from the States that they will "make war upon us." Asks her to recommend the inhabitants of Navarre to make ready for her defence.

2. Sir Philip Sidney to the Earl of Leicester. Salisbury, 26 Dec. 1581. Thanks for his care of him; excuses his not coming.

3. John Talbott to the Earl of Leicester, 18 July 1581, Aldersgate Street. Asks his influence to procure the writer's liberty.

4. M. Southampton to the Earl of Leicester. Cowdry, 15 Dec. 1591. Bespeaks his favour for one of her children.

5. The same to the same. Cowdry, 25 Oct. 1591. Bespeaks favour for herself; is left so badly off by her husband.

6. The Countess of Bedford to the Earl of Leicester. 27 Dec. 1591. With a new year's gift.

7. Copy of a letter (neither date nor signature) to the Queen (Elizabeth), asking pardon and forgiveness.

8. W. Herle to the Queen. Greenwich, 1 July 1583. Asking pardon for one of his friends, John Herlle, of Oxfordshire, heir to the ancient house of Tilleglace, Brecknock.

9. Thomas Bromley (Attorney-General) to the Earl of Leicester, 14 Dec. 1575. Touching a complaint made against him to the Queen.

10. "Copy of my letter to Her Majesty the last of "April, sent by M. D. Clarke from Flushing." 1585. "Being here ready to take shipping when any wind "would serve me to return to your h[ighness]. Your "Majesty's letter with your last appointment sent by "Brown the messenger is commen to my hand and "hath brought (and that is the worst turn) more heavi- "ness to my heart than for anything to this hour I have "ever felt."—Defends himself, and speaks of his service of 30 years.

11. Copy of the Archbishop of Canterbury's submission. 19 Jan. 1590. He had refused to obey only for conscience.

12. Anthony Montagu to the Earl of Leicester. Cowdrey, 4 Dec. 1581. About the affairs of the late Earl of Southampton; puts forward his cousin, Edward Gage, as the most likely person to manage the affairs, and asks for his liberation from prison.

13. Sir Philip Sidney to the Earl of Leicester. Salisbury, 15 Dec. 1591. Asking (seemingly) for penalties on papists to the extent of 3,000*l.*; less will not suit him. "Truly I like not their persons and much worse their "religion, but I think my fortune very hard that my "fortune must be built upon other men's punishments."

14. Katherine Suffolk to the Earl of Leicester (March 1580/1579). Complains of her sons unadvised marriage to an unpleasant woman; defends herself; has retired for quiet to her little unwholesome house of Hampstead.

15. H. Pembroke to the Queen. Wilton, 24 Oct. 1591. Wants to renew a lease of the Manor of Downton held of the Bishop of Winchester which Mr. Thomas George is seeking to get over his head.

16. Philip Dormer's verses on Easthampstead House: begin, "Adieu ye tollsome pleasures of the town" (about 50 lines).

17. M. Southampton to the Earl of Leicester. 14 Oct. 1592. About her late husband's affairs.

18. F. Walsingham to the Earl of Leicester. 6 Nov. 1578. Hopes to get leave to meet him on Friday seunight, "and to entertain your Lordship with a Friday's "drinking after the ancient and catholic order." Incloses a copy of the Emperor's Ambassador's letter betraying the broken state of that country.

19. W. Burghley to Sir Christopher Hatton, Kt., vice-chamberlain to Her Majesty. 2 July 1581. Says that her Majesty will have his (Burghley's) opinion for the allowance of M. Bullyngton to be Bishop of Gloster; the bishops of Sarum and Rochester commend him; speaks against the marriage of bishops, as preventing hospitality.

20. Sir Philip Sidney to the Earl of Leicester. Charinton, 2 Aug. 1580. Has brought home [his] sister; has a bad cold which keeps him from Court; doubts not her Majesty will ask for him, "but so long as she sees a silk doublett upon me her Highness will thinke me in good cace."

There are a considerable number of letters from Sir Chas Cottrell to Robert Dormer, Esq., of Rousham, his son-in-law; Peregrine Bertie to the same; John Dormer to his father Robert, nearly all on family matters, and all at the latter part of the 17th century.

In a letter from Sir Chas. Cottrell to Robt. Dormer, Nov. 15, 1683. He says, "Charles was touched by the "King yesterday, by which and his drink together his "lip is now very well, and will I hope be no worse."

In a letter dated 24 Nov. 1683, he says, "The Duke "of Monmouth his peace is made and is come this "night to Whitehall."

On Dec. 8, 1683, Chas. L. Cottrell tells Robert Dormer that yesterday he was "at Tower Hill to see Col. "Sidney beheaded, who said nothing to the people, but "delivered a speech in writing to the sheriff." The head was severed at one blow "It is said that the "Duke of Monmouth, but a few days since restored to "favour, is now forbid the Court."

On the 7 Feb. 1685, Chas. Cottrell mentions the death of Charles II., and the quiet accession of James II.

On Jan. 5, 1683 he notices that the small-pox is rife.

There are also some letters from Sir Wm. Trumbull, son-in-law of Sir Chas. Cottrell.

A folio volume contains letters from Sir Chas. Cottrell to C. L. Cottrell, while abroad at Paris and elsewhere in 1674 and 1675, and to a son, who died young, of the latter; and

Two letters from Frankfort, 30 Sept. and 9 Nov. 1676 from R. Rockwood (who was in the service of the Elector Palatine). In the second he says that the Elector would be happy for C. L. Cottrell to come to Germany.

Reasons against repealing the Test Act, 1687; begins, "[t]he just apprehension."

Le conjuration du Chevalier de Rohan (12 pp.).

Account of the Court and Electoral family of Hanover (26 pp.); begins, "Sir, it would be hardly worth the while."

Another account of the same (11 pp.).

A folio volume contains many original letters by and relating to members of the royal family while in exile during the protectorate. Sir C. Cottrell was steward of the household to the unfortunate Queen of Bohemia, daughter of James I., and it was much wished that he should be tutor to her nephew the Duke of Gloucester. Thus, as might be expected, Mr. Cottrell-Dormer possesses many interesting letters and papers of and relating to the royal family during their residence abroad. There are letters from Queen Henrietta Maria to the Duke of Gloster, from the Queen of Bohemia to the same, from the Princess Henrietta and from (apparently) the Duke of York. The letters of Queen Henrietta Maria are dated in the year 1660, but the others have no year. They are dated from Paris, the Hague, Breda, and other places, and do not contain much of public interest. Two letters from Charles II. in 1652 are respecting the intended appointment of Charles Cottrell, and are addressed to the Queen of Bohemia.

Two letters from N. Oudart in 1646 about payments of money for the Duke of Gloster and Charles II., order dated 21 Jan. 1660 for the payment of money to the late Duke of Gloster's servants, giving their names.

A letter from E. N. to Chas. Cottrell dated Hague 7/17 Dec. 1652, notices that the French King was about to acknowledge the English republic. Several letters from Edward Hyde (afterwards Earl of Clarendon) to to Sir C. Cottrell, some on personal matters and some containing notices of public matters.

Several letters from M. Maurice (in the Queen of Bohemia's) to C. Cottrell. In one dated Cologne, 3 Sept. 1655, he says that he thinks when Cromwell is made King, there will be an oath of allegiance to that villain and of abjuration of the King and his family. A few days later he notices the bad state of the French army in Flanders.

Several letters from Morley, afterwards Bishop of Winchester.

On the 11th Sept. 1655, Hyde announces the King's choice of C. Cottrell to be Secretary to the Duke of Gloster, and in a postscript, says "you will have a jolly "journey."

In June 1656, the King at Bruges, signs an order for 500 guilders per month to the Duke of Gloster, C. Cottrell to keep 2,000 annually as his salary.

Another folio volume contains letters from Sir C. Cottrell to his grandson, about 1650; and

Memoires des assistances et liberalités faites en consideration de la reyne de Boheme par les deux rois de la Grande Bretagne derniers defuntz a la maison electorale palatine en ses adversités et aux princes et princesses de la dite maison en leur exile. 1620 to 1641 (6½ pp.)

Sir Abraham Williams's account of the Queen of Bohemia's arrears and demands in consequence on England, June 6, 1651. In French, signed by A. Williams. And a translation into English.

Original commission by the Queen of Bohemia to C. Cottrell concerning her demand for her jointure on her son the Elector, Nov. 2, 1651. Memoranda for C. Cottrell's assistance, signed by Elizabeth (8½ pp.).

Passport for C. Cottrell, signed and sealed by Elizabeth, and a passport by the elector.

Other papers on the subject, propositions and offers by the elector.

Papers about the Queen of Bohemia's debts. 1651, &c.

Instructions signed and sealed by her, for C. Cottrell on his entering her service.

Accounts of what he sold and what he paid, and list of jewels.

Order for the government of the Queen of Bohemia's family, sealed by the Queen (11 leaves).

A list of her household.

List of new year's gifts, 1632, signed by her.

Directions signed and sealed to pay C. Cottrell's arrears.

C. Cottrell's letter of vindication to the Queen of Bohemia, Nov. 1, 1656 (5 pp.).

Many letters to him by the Queen, the elector her son and his Minister, the Princess Elizabeth, the Abbess of Maubuisson. Several from the Princess Sophia, with answers to several. Some by the Queen of Bohemia are in cypher. Some have been written partly with invisible ink made legible by application of heat.

There are letters by Charles the Elector while at Heidelberg in 1655.

Several letters from Charles the Elector at Ratisbon 1653 and at Heidelberg 1654.

Many letters from the Princess Sophia ranging from 1654 to 1706.

Another folio volume contains Pym's speech in the Parliament dissolved in 1640; begins, "He that takes "away."

A true relation of the taking of the Spanish Plate ships, 9 Sept. 1656, by Captain Stayner (3 pp.).

A true relation of the destroying of the Spanish ships about the island of Tenariff, 20 April 1657, from the first intelligence we had of them as we lay before Cadiz (6 pp.). This has a note written on the back "For the "Duke of Gloster."

Voyage to the Indies, 1655 (3¾ pp.); begins, "7 April "1655. I went aboard the John and Susan, Stephen "Limberg master."

Copy of the Protest, 1677, of Peers on the commitment of the Earl of Clarendon.

The King's speech 8 March 1672 to the Lords and Commons.

Copy petition against Popish recusants by the Parliament.

Copy of the King's speech in 1677.

The Earl of Shaftesbury's case, 1677.

Copies of two of Danby's letters, 1677.

Order by Charles II. for (some person) to go beyond seas for the present. Whitehall, Feb. 28, 1678/1679.

The Earl of Shaftesbury's speech in the House of Lords, 31 March 1679.

The Earl of Ossory's reply thereto.

Names of conspirators discovered by Titus Oates.

Notes of the King's speech to the Council about the Duke of Monmouth, 12 Dec. 1683.

Copy of the Duke of Monmouth's letter.

Copy of Sir John Fenwick's letter to his lady immediately after he was taken.

Copy of a recantation by a papist embracing the reformed religion (8 or 9 leaves).

Copy of a letter by Father Peters, Almoner to the King of England, to Pere la Chaise, Confessor to the King of France, touching the present affairs of England (5½ pp.). Begins, "Si j'ai manqué."

Observations of most towns and harbours and landing places round the coast of England, from Barwick Roade to Carlyll. Signed, "Your Highnes most humble "servant, Johne Strachan." (6 leaves.)

The Office of Master of the Ceremonies was no sinecure under the Stuart Kings. The "Observations of "Sir John Finett" published by Howell in 1656 show the serious and often ludicrous labours and anxieties of him who held the office. Sir Charles Cottrell succeeded Sir John Finett, having first been his Deputy. A fair manuscript copy of Sir John's Observations is at Rousham; it contains 590 folio pages besides the table. As his death and epitaph are given at p. 576 it would seem to contain a little more than Howell printed. Sir Charles Cottrell and his successor Sir Clement Cottrell kept notes of their doings in office and of the presents which they bore from the Sovereign to Ambassadors, and of what they received in return from Ambassadors.

A folio volume contains,—

Fees to be paid by a Baronet or by a Knight.

Certificate of Sir C. Cottrell being sworn Master of the Ceremonies, 1660.

Copy of the patent revoking Sir B. Gerbier's patent and granting both offices to Sir C. Cottrell, and other papers respecting the office down to 1727.

A folio volume contains,—

List of presents given by Kings Charles II. and James II. to Ambassadors and foreign Ministers. (31 pages.)

The like by King William and Queen Mary. (15 pp.).

The like to foreign Ministers by Queen Anne, delivered by my father, then Master of the Ceremonies, July 6, 1702. (5 pp.)

Presents to foreign Ministers, &c., 1710, and by Kings George I. and George II. (Ends in 1758.)

Another folio volume contains,—

A Journal by Sir C. C. Dormer, Master of the Ceremonies to King George III. It begins in 1741 when he was assistant, and ends in 1779. (116 folios.)

Accounts of Ambassadors sent to his Majesty since his re-establishment in 1660. (454 pp. and index.)

The above MSS. by the Masters of the Ceremonies are full of curious and amusing anecdotes and remarks.

There is a box labelled "Correspondence relating to "Prince George of Denmark, husband of Queen Anne." But it contains only receipts for presents, copies of royal answers to addresses by Ambassadors and Presidents, mostly marked entered. They have been imported probably into the folio collections.

A folio volume contains a Journal by Sir C. Cottrell in London and on the continent for 15 months, commencing in 1740. (About 12 leaves.)

Papers relating to the affairs of Villiers, 2d Duke of Buckingham.

A letter from Lord Henry Jermyn, 1650, concerning the Duke's debts.

A folio volume contains letters of Lord Carnarvon, H. Jay, Stephen Gough, and J. Hewson, a servant of the Duke of Buckingham, 1650–1654. The letters of Gough touch on the Duke's pictures, including one of Mercury, Venus, and Cupid. There is a receipt by Abraham Cowley for 150 agates for the use of Lord Jermyn. This volume relates chiefly to the Duke of Buckingham's affairs and the sale of his effects.

Another folio volume contains some letters on political affairs by Sir Clement Cottrell, about 1711; and

A copy of the harangue by the Marquis Sauli, Envoy Extraordinary from Genoa, to the Queen Anne, at his public audience in 1711;—and of the Queen's answer, —and a translation into French of the harangue.

Copy of the speech to Queen Anne of the Germanic Ambassador from Vienna at his public audience in 1711; and of the Queen's answer.

Account of Count Galla's reception.

Copy of letter by Sir C. Cottrell to Grimani, the Venetian Ambassador, about going to Westminster Abbey;—and His Excellency's answer.

Many papers on State Ceremonies and forms, and letters about Ambassadors' audiences, down to 1733.

Another folio volume contains a copy (temp. Geo. I.) of a journal of a tour abroad.

Journals of Sir C. Lodowick Cottrell, in 1669 and later years, in France and elsewhere. At p. 283 is an account of Sir Wm. Trumbull's receptions at Leghorn, Pisa, and Florence, 1687 and 1690.

Eight small quarto volumes contain letters addressed to Charles Cæsar commencing in 1710, and to his widow commencing in 1717. Charles Cæsar was M.P. for Hertford, was sent to the Tower in 1705, and was Treasurer of the Navy in 1711. His wife was in correspondence with many political and literary persons. In this series of letters I noticed several from the Duchess of Marlborough and Pope. Others are by Robt. Harley, Bolingbroke, Wm. Shippen, and H. Bromley, and Mrs. Masham. And there is one letter (complimentary only) from Jonathan Swift, dated Dublin 1730. There is an index to the entire collection of the Cæsar letters.

I must be permitted to add that Mr. Cottrell-Dormer's hospitality and urbanity at Rousham left me nothing to desire.

ALFRED J. HORWOOD.

THE MANUSCRIPTS OF J. R. ORMSBY-GORE, Esq., M.P., OF BROGYNTYN, CO. SALOP.

The manuscripts at Porkington consist of forty volumes numbered, and numerous letters of the 16th, 17th, and 18th centuries. As will be seen from the brief sketch below, they afford much interesting matter illustrative of English and Welsh history and literature. The volumes within the scope of the commission will be first briefly described.

No. 1. A folio volume, paper, 16th century, in Welsh. It contains a few chronological stanzas, genealogies of N. Wales; computum manuale, by David Nanmor; a tract on heraldry; and genealogies of families of North and South Wales.

No. 2. A folio volume, paper, 16th century, contains Welsh poetry to p. 433, by various persons; a table, seven leaves of Welsh heraldry, and a few more poems.

No. 3. A folio volume, paper, 16th century, 578 leaves; contains Welsh poetry of the 14th and 15th centuries. At the beginning is a list, in pencil, of the authors.

No. 4. A folio volume, paper, 16th century. A Latin and Welsh dictionary to the end of the letter D.

No. 7. A folio volume, paper, 17th century. Welsh poetry by various authors.

No. 8. A 4to volume, paper, 17th century. Welsh proverbs translated into Latin (Welsh & Latin), by Dr. John Davies, of Mallwyd (about 103 leaves).

No. 9. A 4to volume, paper, 17th century. The laws of Hoel dha, transcribed from the library of Thomas Allen, of Gloster Hall, Oxford.

No. 10. A small 4to volume of 211 leaves, of which the first 25 are vellum, and the others are paper, 15th century. The volume has been described by Sir F. Madden in his preface to the romance of Sir Gawain, printed for the Roxburghe Club; but as only a few copies were printed, it is well here to give a fresh description.

Fol. 1. Secundum Anticos Grecorum; being short prognostications for the results of sickness; lucky and unlucky days, and astrological notes; all in English.

Fol. 2*a*. Chronological and historical notes ending on 3*b*, the last being of the battle of Agincourt.

Fol. 4*a*.–8*b*. Kalendar, description of the veins in the human body, and a table of eclipses.

Fol. 8*b*.–4*a*. The knowledge of the impressions concerning the wedyring (a tract on the weather in English).

Fol. 12*a*.–27*a*. Romance in verse of Sir Gawain and the earle of Carliste (printed by Sir F. Madden).

Fol. 28*a*.–53*b*. A treatise of grafting and planting trees, and the craft of limning of books (printed by the Warton Club, 1855, p. 66). At the end, on a scroll, the name H. Hattii is written.

Fol. 54*a*.–57*a*. A poem beginning "Lovely lordyngs ladys lyke." (Warton Club, p. 1.)

" 57*b*. The ten wives tale, beginning "Love lystynes to " me" ends, " He is not worth a nay."

60*b*.–62*a*. A poem beginning "Lord, how shall I me " complayne." (Warton Club, p. 6.)

Fol. 62*a*.–64*a*. A poem, beginning "As I went on my " playing." " Under an holt upon an lylle."

It may be remarked that in Leicestershire is a place called Holt-on-the-Hill. It is possible that the author's locality may be thus indicated. Printed by Warton Club, p. 9.

Fol. 646.–79*a*. A poem in seven stanzas, beginning "The fadyr of pytte and most of mysericord;" it is the vision of Philibert the hermit giving a conversation between the soul and body. (Warton Club, p. 12.) A French poetical version of this vision was printed at Paris, 1486, at the end of the Danse Macabre. Similar in spirit are some of the beautiful coplas of Don Jorge Manrique, a Spanish poet of the 15th century.

Fol. 79*b*.–81*b*. A poem, beginning "Lo worldly folkus, " though this processe of dethe." (Warton Club, p. 39.) These poems contain the verses, "Earth upon earth."

Fol. 81*b*.–83*b*. A poem, beginning "Bi a forest as I " gan fare." (Warton Club, p. 43.) It is a lamentation by a hare.

Fol. 83*b*.–86*b*. The Knight and his Wife, a poem, beginning "Ther was a knyit in a cutre,
"That a ryche man was wont to be."

86*b*.–89*b*. Two short poems on the virtue of meekness, illustrated by stories of St. Martayne and St. Anthony, and a poem in honour of the Virgin, beginning "Of alle " the briddes that ever theyt were." After, a few medical receipts come 91*a*.–129*a*. The life of Saint Catherine. After a short prologue, the text begins "In the greate cite of " Alexandyr."

Fol. 130*a*.–132*a*. A poem, beginning "Be trewe and " hold that ye bave hyite."

Fol. 132*a*.–135*b*. The Stacyons of Rome. (Printed by Early English Text Society, 1867.)

135*b*.–138*b*. The Wife's Advice to her Daughter, a poem, beginning "The good wyf wold a pylgrimage."

Fol. 139*a*.–150*a*. The story of the friar and the boy, begins "God that dyed for us all." (Warton Club, p. 46.)

Fol. 150*a*.–152*a*. A poem, beginning "As I stod in a " ryalle haulle." (Warton Club, p. 62.)

Fol. 152*a*.–154*a*. A short comic poem, beginning "Harkens to my tale that I schall here schow."

154*a*.–155*b*. Two love letters in verse, one begins "Homoure wit all manneres of heylle;" the other begins "Have alle my herte and be in peys."

Fol. 155*b*.–157*a*. A poem, beginning "As I cam by a " forest syde."

Fol. 157*b*.–184*a*. The siege of Jerusalem in prose, begins "Al men that wil here of the sege of Jerusalem."

Fol. 184*a*.–188*a*. The technical words for numbers of animals, birds, &c.

Fol. 188*a*.–199*b*. Characteristics and qualities of men, beasts, and birds.

Fol. 191*a*.–193*b*. A prophecy in verse, beginning "when " the cocke in the northe hath lyld his neste."

Fol. 195*a*.–197*b*. An English poem, headed with, and every verse ending with, the words Timor mortis conturbat me. It begins "Timor mortis conturbat me. This is my song in my olde age.

Fol. 198.–202. Two or three Christmas carols, and the song of bringing in the boar's head.

Fol. 203*a*.–207*b*. A poem, called Mercy and Righteousness, begins "Bi a forest as I gan walke;" ends "for " mercy passes ryzttusnys.

Fol. 207*b*.–211*b*. A tale of the merchant, beginning "Lystens, lordynges, I yow pray, How a merchand can " his wyf betray."

No. 12. A 4to volume, paper, 17th century, Welsh poetry.

No. 14. A 4to volume, paper, 17th century. History of the Gwydor family, by Sir J. Wynne, with additional pedigrees and notes. At the end of the volumes is the autograph signature "Ellis Humphrey." Mr. Wynne, of Penarth, tells me that the pedigrees are by R. Humphreys, Bishop of Bangor, afterwards Bishop of Hereford.

No. 16. A small folio volume, vellum, 13th century, by an English scribe. The Psalter glossed, Latin, double columns; imperfect, beginning in the middle of the 16th Psalm.

No. 17. A 4to volume, vellum, 13th century, Latin, double columns. Geoffrey of Monmouth's British history, not divided into books. On flyleaves at the end of the volume are seven columns of French verse of the 14th century, headed "Co est la chartre an diable fet al " Cuveitus."

Begins "Beau mester le mi direz,
Le tenure sicum entendez.
Volunters le vus dirrai,
A la manere ke jo sai.
Sachent tresuz ceu ke oir mettunt. . . .

Ends "De quor o de dreit amur
Vers son prince e vers nostre seignur.

No. 19. A small folio, vellum 15th century. Tretyse of the seven poyntes of trewe love and everlastynge wisdom drawen out of the booke that is wretten in latyne and clepede Orologium Sapientie. Table and proemium of 7 leaves and 91 leaves of text. The introduction or address is to a lady (not named) by her chaplain (not named). The author of the Latin work was John of Suabia; the French translation by an unknown person has been several times printed.

No. 20. A 4to volume, vellum, 15th century, 105 leaves. This volume contains The Pricke of Conscience by Richard Hampole.

Begins "The mirie of the fadyr alle mystihy,
"The wyrth of the sone alle wytty,"

Ends (93 b.) " To the wuche place than he alle us bryng.
" That for oure hele on rode gan hyng.
Amen."

Then follows: Trigentale de matre cujusdam pape."

Begins " Some tyme in Rome a pope ther was " That had a moder full fayr of face."

Ends (95 b.) " God of hevene brynges us thedyr
" That we may evere have joye togeder.
Amen."

The remaining nine leaves are occupied with the seven penitential psalms in English verse, probably by Hampole.

The Pricke of Conscience and the Trental of Pope Gregory have been printed from other manuscripts.

No. 21. A folio volume, vellum, 14th century.

At the head of the first page is written, in a hand a little later than the text of the volume, " Liber " epistolaris quondam Ricardi de Bury, Episcopi " Dunelmensis;" and there is also the note " liber " monachorum Sancti Edmundi regis martiris." The volume according to a second numeration of the leaves begins now at fo. 53; after 199 comes 1000, and the numeration is continued to 1094 where the volume ends imperfectly. Five leaves, between 113 and 119, are absent. It is a beautiful specimen of writing of the reign of Edward III. The contents are copies of letters by and to different Popes to and by various Kings of England and other countries, letters to and by archbishops, bishops, and other ecclesiastics; many of the letters are to the King's officers in Gascony. With very few exceptions, the dates of the letters are not given; but the name or initial letter of the Pope or King, or Archbishop or Bishop, in the case may be, and the names of the persons mentioned in the body of the letter, would, I believe, with some trouble, and aided by reference to Rymer's Fœdera and various Chronicles, render it possible to add the dates to most of the letters. That the letters are not here dated may be thus explained. The volume was doubtless compiled as a book of reference for the Bishop of Durham and his Secretary, when a formal letter was required to be written. There are marginal notes showing the occasions of the letters, and now and then noting the merit of the style: and in the middle of the volume is a collection of blank forms for harangues and letters on various occasions composed apparently in A.D. 1255 by P. de . . .

Some of the letters are of the time of Henry II.; some of the time of Richard I., and those of the times of Kinge Edward I. II. and III. are numerous. It is probable that some of the letters are little, if at all, known. For instance, it is well known that Richard I. declared Arthur, Duke of Brittany, his heir, if he himself should die without issne; and he arranged with Tancred, King of Sicily, a marriage between a daughter of that King and the young duke; and Tancred paid 20,000 ounces of gold to Richard in consideration (partly) of the arrangement. (See Radulphus de Diceto col. 657, ed. Twysden.) The Fœdera, however, does not mention (although Hoveden does) Richard's letter to Pope Clement at fol. 33 bis of this volume, which shews that Richard agreed that he would repay the money if the marriage did not take place by reason of the death of either the Duke or the young lady, or by reason of the death of Richard or the Duke. Mr. Ormsby-Gore has very kindly entrusted this volume to me for the purpose of fully examining the contents, for the use of the Commission.

The Prince of Wales has the measles . . a pretty sight to see the King and the Princess meet at St. James's . . . very moving . . she had cryed all night, her eyes were all swelled; she knelt and kissed his hand; could not speak, would not let his hand go; ho kissed her; came three or four times and spoke to her.

1749, June 28. F. Godolphin to his sister. Prince George was carried off by the Prince of Wales to Kensington on Sunday, and was sent for into the King's closet before chapel, where his Majesty knighted him and invested him with the riband, assisted by the Dukes of Dorset and Grafton; and the little man was sent to stay with his Aunt Caroline till chapel was over; which prevented her hearing prayers and sermon which was to have been performed that day by the Provost of Eton, who was not sorry to be excused, having an aguish disposition upon him, and can never be well long together in London.

1608. Bond from Griffith Vaughan to Ralph Lord Eure, in the penal sum of 60l. The condition is that if Griffith Vaughan, on the grant of Lord Eure, had obtained by the King's Patent the confirmation of the Charter of Harlech, for having the two great sessions, and the four quarter sessions, to be always held at Harlech, and should pay 30l., then the bond was to be void.

Exemplification under the Great Seal, March 5. 1st James I. of a release by Henry VII. of several customs in Wales. (This is printed in the Archæological Journal, vol. 21., p. 64.)

Narrative of sundry remarkable accidents which befel cattle in the county of Merioneth, these four years last past (5 pp. 4to.). The accidents were caused by certain mysterious vapours. (Quære, printed in the Philosophical Transactions.)

Court Rolls of Breannyarth, county of Montgomery, temp. Hen. VI., and court-books for the same manor, of later date. (This manor was granted to an ancestor of Mr. Ormshy-Gore for taking prisoner, Oldcastle Lord Cobham.)

Before closing this paper I must record my obligations to Mr. Ormsby-Gore, who although Brogyntyn was under repair and not occupied, yet made me his guest in his temporary residence on the borders of the park. And I had the advantage of the assistance of Mr. Wynne of Peniarth, then a visitor, whose MSS. are described on other pages of this Appendix.

Also a breife " abstract of the Revenues of most of the Princes of " Christendome, Anno D'ni 1636."

The abstract consists of two pages.

This volume contains a great many blank leaves. Not printed.

VOLUME 4, indorsed "Old Manuscript," relates entirely to Papal Affairs.

1. A MS. of 71 pages, giving a very full description of the form and ceremony used at the election of Cardinal Adrian bishop of Dercluso, to the Papacy as Adrian VI. The state of Italy at this period [1521-2] is also described. [It likewise gives the character of Wolsey as mentioned in the conclave.] Not printed

2. A MS. of 148 pages, headed "The conclave of " Pope Gregory XIV^th wherein are Recompted dis- " tinctly and orderly all the actions that happened in " the same, Anno D'ni 1591." Not printed.

Printed, London, 1642.

These MSS. are in all probability the work of an ancestor of Mr. Harvey, who travelled extensively in Southern and Eastern Europe in the 16th century, and to whom may probably be traced a curious picture of J. C., now at Ickwell Bury, which purports to be a copy of the engraved "Vatican Emerald" sent by Bajazet II. to Pope Innocent VIII. as a ransom for his brother Djem, taken captive by the Knights of Malta. (See von Hammer's History of Turkey, vol 3, p. 365, and C. W. King's Engraved gems, p. 103.

17. Also a genealogical table commencing with Edmund Ironside, [A.D. 1017].

VOLUME 7. A MS. of 3 pages, of an imperfect list of Members returned to sit in Parliament, 3rd Sept. 1654.

1. Part of a diary kept in 1710 by John Harvey, giving an account of his stay in Rome and his introducing Dr. Newton, the first secretary of Florence, to the Pope. The MS. vol. relates their reception; that it was considered advisable that with a view to Dr. Newton preserving his character of envoy from England, he should not kiss the Pope's foot, but only make an obeisance, and that at the interview which ensued "the Pope told us " that he gave his missionaries in England strict orders " not to meddle with political matters, and desired us " to acquaint Her Majesty of these facts, and called on " Cardinal Paduucci to witness to the fact, and recom- " mended the Catholics in England to Her Majesty." This paper was quoted in the House of Lords' debate a few years ago on the question of the position of the English representative at Rome.

2. A MS. containing the account of some great riots which arose in Bedfordshire in 1757, owing to the enlistments for the militia.

Since the publication of the report of last year, Mr. Harvey's collection of printed pamphlets, broadsides, &c. relating to the political history of the 17th century has been examined and catalogued. Owing to the enormous number of papers contained in this collection, it would be quite impossible to give any adequate account of their contents. Your Commissioners, however, see no reason for departing from the opinion expressed last year by Mr. Horwood, that the collection is very valuable. It is probably as complete a collection as any can be of the publications of that time relating to the current events of the day, and is luckily also in an admirable state of preservation. It may be mentioned that amongst other pamphlets contained in it there is a very perfect copy of the "King's Cabinet opened" (see Report of 1870, p. 12); a Report of the proceedings at the Common hall, whither the captured letters were sent (see Report of last year on the House of Lord Papers, Clarendon, IX. and Rushworth, VI. 42); and a pamphlet containing the letters of King Charles I. captured at the battle of Sherborne, of which Clarendon speaks in the following terms, Bk. IX. 1645. "Lord " Digby and those officers and gentlemen who remained " about him were compelled to retreat to Skipton, with " the loss of the Lord Digby's baggage, in which was " his cabinet of papers, which being published by the " Parliament, administered afterwards so much occa- " sion of discourse." (See too Rushworth, VI., 66-82, where two of the letters are printed.)

A complete catalogue being now in existence, this collection is thereby thrown open to historical investigation without any further difficulty.

EDMOND FITZMAURICE.

THE MANUSCRIPTS OF H. B. MACKESON, ESQ., OF HYTHE, CO. KENT.

These are miscellaneous letters and papers, chiefly of the 17th century, relating to the town of Hythe; they throw some light on the internal management of the town, and on its relations with others of the Cinque Ports, and will supplement the information to be derived from the corporation books and records.

The earliest document is a fragment of a roll of expenses, of the first half of the 14th century. The next (No. 82) is a fragment of four leaves of vellum of accounts of payment of the Brodhulle of the Cinque Ports (temp. Ed. 3).

The next is a computus (in Latin) for one year from 1 May 1412, of John Colyn and William Palmer, wardens of the goods and chattels of the chapel of St. Leonard of Hythe. They account for arrears; rents (ending with 20*d.* from Margaret Chesseman for the farm of one cow), 17*s.*; collections at feast days, Sundays, &c., 33*s.* 7½*d.*; indulgences, 16*d.* (a few pence each, most likely for dispensations); legacies, &c., 66*s.*; the sum total of receipts was 6*l.* 7*s.* 2*d.* Among the expenses are outlays for mending the great cup; the correction of the Missal and Antiphonary; stuff for church ornaments; a burner; cleaning the church; oil and tallow for greasing the bell; for the exchange of six old viols for six new ones, 12*d.*; making a bier to carry the dead to the church; for a chest in the chancel of St. Mary, 6*d.*; a fan for the clock (le vane pro le clokke), 4*d.*; for the rack by the high altar, on which the towel hangs, 8*d.*; for a piece of leather called buckskin (bokkeskyn) bought of William Waltone for the Gradual, 13*d.*; for ribands of red leather for the said Gradual and for mending the clasps, 6*d.*; for binding the great Missal and old Gradual, 4*s.* in part of 6*s.*; in the purchase of one book called "Legende" 6*s.* The total of expenses was 7*l.* 0*s.* 9½*d.*

Fragments of a book of accounts of the Guild of the Assumption of the Virgin Mary for the reigns of Edw. 4, Hen. 7, and Hen. 8. The accounts are on narrow slips of paper. The first is for 6 Edw. 4 and the last is for 24 Hen. 8. The Guild was evidently small in number, and the contributions and expenses were small. The first entry contains the names of the brethren and sisters of the Guild and their contributions; a man and his wife paid 6*d.*; a man or a woman paid 3*d.* or 2*d.* The expenses were for wax 6 lb. at 7*d.* per lb., making up the same, 6*d.*; fire for the same, id.; ale during the making thereof, 1*d.*; pro sippis in the church, 4*d.*; bread, 9*d.*; ale, 9*d.*; meat, spices, and vinegar; and for the writing the account. Other accounts give the names of new members and their payments. In the 12 Edw. 4 are payments to the cook, dishwashers, turnspits, and for spits. In the 7 Hen. 8, a bushel of wheat cost 8*d.*; and the payment for mass, dirige, and bell was 15*d.*

Fragment of assembly book for 22 & 23 & and 24 Hen. 8, showing the election of jurats, &c., bye-laws, notes of leases of town lands, &c. &c.

34. Writ or proclamation by King Richard 3 to William, Earl of Arundel, Constable of Dover Castle and Warden of the Cinque Ports, that no person is to fit out any ship without giving security not to attempt anything against the King's subjects, friends, or confederates, namely, the Kings of Spain and Portugal, the subjects of the Duke of Austriche, &c. &c., under pain of forfeiture as rebels and traitors. If any Mayor or &c. suffer any ship of war to depart without oath being taken, then he is to satisfy the persons damaged. Dated at Westminster, 2 & 3 Ric. 3. 11 August.

A letter from William, Earl of Arundel, to the Mayor, jurats, and bailiffs of the Cinque Ports, on the above subject. Dated 2 Ric. 3.

35. January, 1 Ric. 3. Copy of letter by William Earl of Arundel, Constable of Dover Castle, directing the Mayor, &c. to elect two persons to the Parliament to meet on the 23d January.

21 January, 1 Ric. 3. Copy reply by the Mayor, &c., saying they have chosen John Sonde and William Waryn.

186. Fragment of Chamberlain's account of the 15th century.

185. Computus Villæ et portus de Hithe, 37 Hen. 8.

203 and 11*. Jurat's accounts, temp. Ed. 4 and Hen. 7, and Chamberlain's accounts, temp. H. 6 and later.

9 Hen. 7. Admission of Freemen. 5*.

1 & 2 Edw. 4. Account of — Fisher before four of the jurats, in the Common Hall. These relate to town matters.

No. 26. 1570, March. Letter from Henry William Crispe (at Dover Castle) to the bailiff, jurats, and commonalty of Hithe; complains that they have not attended to the Lord Treasurer's request to elect William Cromer as one of the burgesses of the Parliament, and advising them to elect Mr. John Rede.

Draft of a letter [by the bailiff, &c.] to their Right Honble. and singular good Lord, acknowledging his letter of the 3d instant (March); they plead their liberties and deprecate his anger.

1570, Feb. Draft of a letter from the bailiff, &c. of Hythe to their Right worshipful, . . . acknowledging a notice from Thomas Honywood that he requested that Mr. John Heles or Mr. Robert Honywood might be returned that Parliament for one of the burgesses.

Drafts of other letters to the Lord Treasurer about election of Members of Parliament.

The above evidently form part of a letter book.

1620. A receipt for 5*l.*, the proportion for Hythe of 100*l.* charged to the Cinque Ports for suppressing the pirates of Argim and Tunis. They were charged at the rate of 33*s.* per ship. (No. 1.)

1619. Copies of letters between the Cinque Ports. (39.)

1644, May 13. Draft of letter from the jurats of Hythe to ——, justifying Curteis the town clerk about appointing a bailiff to Yarmouth (in the herring season).

1641. Bond from Andrew Palcologus of the port of St. Katherine, near the Tower of London, and another.

Form of condition on a bond against eating flesh in Lent, 1636. (187.)

Fragments of court book, 1642. It was the King's court before the Mayor, &c. (143.)

Large bundle of legal proceedings in the court of the Mayor during the reigns of Charles 1 and 2 and the protectorate; showing the progress of the suits, which seem chiefly Trespass and Debt.

When the suit was between persons in distinct jurisdictions, the process was more tedious. A letter dated in 1688 is from the bailiff and jurats of Lydd to the Right Worshipful their very loving com-barons and friends the mayor and jurats of the port of Hythe. The writers acknowledge the receipt of the Original, Alias and Pluries, in a suit of their addressees brother and com-baron Geo. Thurburn of Hythe, jurat against their resesant and justiceable John Collyer of Lydd, innholder. The Lydd authorities explain the suit to the defendant; they relate how he pleaded, and thereupon he puts himself on the approvement of the said brothers and combarons according to the ancient usage and custom of the Cinque Ports, two ancient towns, and their members time out of mind, &c.; whereupon according to the said custom they have appointed the said brother and com-baron to be before them in the King's Court of Record to be holden at Lydd at the Guildhall on, &c., with such witnesses as he can produce and make his said approvement; request them to advertise their com-barons of this. Under the seal of the bayliage.

There are many others of like character with the above, in the 17th century, and numerous papers in lawsuits during the same period, and writs to Commissioners to try causes.

A letter from Dover Castle, 20 Juno 1668, states that Nic. Bland, the King's polterer, has embezzled 2,000*l.* of the King's; directs the seizure of him and the woman with him; his description follows.

1659. Letter to the Corporation with a proclamation by Richard the Protector, for Papists and supporters of the late King to repair to their abodes; and a writ for the posting it up in public places. (42.)

1658, Dec. 9. Copy writ by Richard the Protector, for election of a Member of Parliament.

1656. Letter of the Mayor, &c. of Sandwich to John Lambert, Esq., John Disbrowe, and Robert Blake, Constable of Dover and Warden of the Cinque Ports, certifying the choice of John Thurbarne to be a Baron to sit in Parliament. (49.)

Copy of letter by James Duke of York, about election of Corporation Officers, 1668. (54.)

Large bundles of proceedings in law-suits in the 17th century.

Fragments of assembly books and chamberlain's accounts for the 17th and 18th centuries, and of letter books for the 17th century.

Letters and copies of letters regarding election of Members of Parliament, 17th century, and election of Corporation Officers.

No. 69 is a fragment of the accounts of the Corporation, and in No. 29 is an item of a payment for the proclamation to apprehend Col. Ludlow.

No. 3*. A book of presentments, 1636.

No. 4*. Copy of Council letter dated 31 December 1634, not to suffer any subsidy man to embark in any of the Cinque Ports without licence from the King.

No. 2*. Copy of order dated Whitehall, 28 March 1655, for imbargo on vessels.

No. 72. Fragment of a muster roll for Winchelsea, 1644.

There are a number of letters and copies of letters from private persons of the 16th and 17th centuries on town matters.

Mr. Mackeson has made some progress in arranging these fragmentary and miscellaneous papers. I beg to acknowledge his very kind attentions to me during my stay at his house.

DOCUMENTS SENT BY FREDERICK PEAKE, ESQ., OF BEDFORD ROW.

The documents sent for examination are, it seems, all that remain of the charters of the Standish family, seated in Lancashire at an early period. They are 55 in number; 51 are of the reign of Edward 3d, and are important for the history of the family and parish and church of Standish during this reign, for which the latest County History (that of Mr. Baines) gives little or no information.

2 Edw. 3. Feb. 2. The King's charter under his great seal giving license of John le Waleys chaplain, to grant 2 messuages and 60 acres of land in Standish and Longetre to a chaplain to celebrate divine service at St. Mary's altar in the parish Church of St. Wilfrid, in Standish, for the souls of himself and his ancestors, and license to the chaplain to take and hold to him and his successors. Tested at York. The fine paid was 40*s.* Great part of the seal in green wax remains. Inrolled, Hil. Term, 4 Edw., ro. 124.

(2 Edw. 3.) The next document is the deed of foundation of the Chantry; it is not dated, but must have followed close on the license to amortize. After stating that the Chantry was to be served perpetually by a chaplain, Henry le Waleys grants the 2 messuages and 60 acres of land, to be holden by the said chaplains and their successors. Henry was to be patron for his life, then Richard le Waleys and his heirs; but in default of due appointment of a chaplain for one month, the right was to go to John de Standish and his heirs, and in default of due appointment by him or them for 15 days, to the Prior of Barstoghe for the time being, saving otherwise the right of the heirs of Henry. (It is noticeable that it is not said that a chaplain had been appointed, and the grant of the land is not made to any certain person.)

In 1329, John, the son of William, lord of Standish, grants by deed to a man, his heirs and assigns, (i.e., in fee simple,) two places of land in Standish and elsewhere; to be holden of the grantor and his heirs by homage and service, and a rent of 6*d.* (This was long after the statute Quia Emptores.)

In the 6 Edw. 3, John, the son of William de Standish, had succeeded to the manor; for a fine is levied, whereby the manor was settled on John, the son of William, for life; with remainder to his son William and the heirs of his body by Margaret, daughter of Adam de Holecroft; with remainder to the heirs of the body of the said William; with remainder to Henry, the brother of William, and the heirs of his body; with remainder to Edmund, brother of Henry, and the heirs of his body; with remainder to Ralph, brother of Edmund, and the heirs of his body; with remainder to the right heirs of the said John, the son of William.

In 9 Edw. 3, Henry le Waloys was rector of the church of Standish, and in the 37th year Gilbert de Standish was parson of the church.

In 10 Edw. 3, John de Standish and Thomas de Longetre ratify past approvements, and agree that neither will in future approve without the consent of the other. (From a deed in the 36 Edw. 3 it appears that Longetre was a hamlet of Standish.)

In 1337 is a deed by Henry, son of John le Waleys, declaring the foundation of the Chantry, the service, the assignment of the messuages and lands, and regulations of patronage as before.

In 22 Edw. 3, Richard de Longetre grants to John de Standish that he and his heirs may have a mill or mills on the water of Dogles. In consideration thereof John grants to Richard some land to hold to him and his assigns for ever. (The word heirs seems to be omitted by mistake.)

27 Edw. 3. Fragment of a pardon to Ralph, son of John de Standish, for having killed some person or persons, or having been concerned in their deaths.

38 Edw. 3. Geoffrey de Urmestone and Adam his brother grant to Robert, son of Edmund de Standish, and David de Yrlond, chaplain, and their assigns, the wardship and marriage of the lands and of the heir of Monsire John de Arderne, i.e., of Ysabel, daughter of the said Sir John, which they had in lease from Thomas Abel and John Comin of Nubold, to be holden by the said Robert and David of the noble Thomas de Beauchamp, Earl of Warwick, until the full age of Ysabel, paying to the Earl 5 marks yearly.

In 19 Edw. 4, Sir Thos. Gerard, Kt., Thos. Gerard of Ince, Esq., Gilbert Langton, and Edmund Wynstanley give a bond for 200*l.* to Alexander Standish, Esq., with a condition, in English, to keep the peace until the first day of the next session for Lancaster, there to be holden before the King's Justice of the Assize.

In 20 Edw. 4, is an award by (and signed and sealed by) Thomas Stanley,* steward of the King's house, on certain differences between the four persons who gave the bond and others (named) on the one part, and the said Alexander Standish and William Longtree on the other part, directing payment of money to be distributed among such persons, tenants and servants of the said Gilbert Longtree, "as have had blody stroke in the "said matter."

In 9 Hen. 8, John, Abbat of the monastery of St. Mary of Cumbermere and of the convent of the same place, collector of the first moiety of the tenth of the two whole tenths of the King, by the clergy of Canterbury in the last Convocation granted in the archdeaconry of Chester, deputed, testifies that he has received of the rector of the church of Standish 13*s.* 4*d.* for the first moiety of the said tenths, and acquits him. Under seal of office. (Seal gone.)

The deeds give valuable information for the pedigrees of the Standish and Bradeshaghe and other families in Lancashire, the incumbencies of the churches of Standish, Hexham, and Hyton, and the names of lands in Standish, Longetree, and places adjacent.

ALFRED J. HORWOOD.

P.S.—I have placed the deeds in their proper sequence, and numbered them. Some of the seals are nearly detached from their labels and should be secured.

THE CHARTER CHESTS OF THE FAMILY OF NEVILLE OF HOLT, IN THE COUNTY OF LEICESTER. (F. PEAKE, Esq.)

Two large boxes full of deeds and papers were submitted for inspection by Frederick Peake, Esq. The contents are the old charters and evidences of and documents relating and belonging to the ancient family of Neville of Holt.

The deeds of the end of the 12th century are numerous, of the 13th century still more so, and of the 14th century multitudinous; and are very valuable for the family and topographical history of Leicestershire and places in other counties. Some of the grants are to and by the Chaworths: in a deed of the 12th century the name is given as "de Chawrciis."

There are about 20 ancient grants to the Monastery of Bradeley.

A long and interesting letter, in Latin, under seal, by Walter, Archbishop of Rouen, to Richard the Dean of Lichfield and the precentor of the same church, with reference to the patronage of the Church of Chakenden. Walter was Archbishop of Rouen from 1183 to 1207, and had previously been Archdeacon of Oxford.

A deed of the 12th century is curious, because on the inner sides of the label, to which the seal was attached, are written the names of the witnesses, just the same as in the body of the deed.

The pedigree of the Courtenays has always been a matter of interest; therefore, I notice a deed of the 12th century by John de Curteney, son of William son of Audelin, witnessing that he is bound to acquit Alexander of Ledes (Leeds) against suit to the Court of Roger Mubray demanded in respect of lands of the said Alexander, and whereof John is mesne between them.

In the 44th year of Henry III. is a certificate of admeasurement of the whole pasture of Kirkby in the Moor (in Yorkshire) by twelve persons named. They declare that every bovate of land can support one horse, one ox, one cow, one calf, 20 sheep, four pigs, viz., one sow and three male pigs, and three geese, and no more animals or cattle. Some of the twelve seals remain.

* He was first Earl of Derby.

Two Charters by Henry III., one in the 41st year of his reign, tested at Chester 12 Sept., granting to Thomas de Chaworth free warren in several manors, including Medburn. A large portion of the Great Seal in green wax still remains.

Two Charters by Edward I., one in the 35th year of his reign, tested at Carlile 26th May, granting to Jollan de Nevill and his heirs a market every week in his manor of Pykehale in the County of York, and a fair there for 10 days in every year commencing on Lady Day.

In the 15th Edward II. is a Letter of Attorney from Sir John Cantelowe authorising a person (named) to deliver seisin of the Castle of Rossesys and other lands in Scotland (granted to him by Edward I.) to Sir John de Bishopsdene, according to the terms of his charter to Sir John. The charter granting the lands &c. does not appear; it would have been interesting to have known whether it was in English or Scotch form.

In the 7th Edward III., Sunday after the feast of St. Philip and St. James, is a deed in French between Sir Geoffry Ridel of Wittering and John of Layntone. John undertakes to go in person well mounted, armed, and attired as befits a man-at-arms, to aid Sir Edward de Baliolf, King of Scotland, and remain in his wars, and to prosecute and challenge the right of Sir Geoffry in Scotland. And if John cannot be received himself to perform his agreements, he will provide a sufficient substitute to the satisfaction of Sir William Marmion and the parson of Thorinhawe, and will cause the substitute to be received for the said Sir Geoffry before the Constable and Marshal of the host, and his name to be entered on the rolls as being received for a man-at-arms; and he has given a bond to Sir Geoffry, which bond is to remain with the parson.

In the 38th Edward III., is a conveyance of a messuage in Northampton. The wife of the grantor was examined in court, acknowledged the deed and released her dower. And because their seals were not well known, the seal of the mayoralty was attached. Laurence Hodden, the Mayor, and two of the bailiffs are among the witnesses. The seals remain.

Of the middle of the 14th century are some memoranda on vellum regarding the Chapel of Cressing in Essex, and the burdens of the rector of Witham in respect thereof.

In 1366 the perpetual vicar of Witham was found liable by custom to provide a proper missal for Cressing Chapel; and the certificate, with seal of the Archdeacon of Colchester, to that effect is there.

Anything new about William of Wykeham is welcome. A deed dated 8 July, 16 Richard II., in beautiful preservation, discloses the fact not mentioned by Bishop Lowth in his life of Wykeham that the Bishop made a settlement of considerable property in Oxfordshire on some of his kindred. By this deed Thomas Conk and John de Keten, clerks, grant to William of Wykeham, Bishop of Winchester, all the lands, &c. in Broughton, Northnewenton, Wynescote, Stanlake, Brighthampton, Norton Brtyn, Bradewell, Wyttinge and Wilcote, in the county of Oxford, with the appurtenances; and moreover the manors of Broughton, Northnewenton, Wynescote and Stanlake, which manors they had granted to the Bishop by fine, to hold to the Bishop for his life, with remainder to Thomas of Wykeham (son of William Perot and Alice his wife), kinsman (consanguineo) of the Bishop, and his brothers John and William successively in tail male, with remainders to the said Thomas, John, and William successively in tail general, with remainder to Wm. Ryngebone and Edith his wife, and the heirs male of the body of Edith, with remainder to Thomas le Warrener, and Joan his wife, and the heirs male of the body of Joan, with remainder to Guy Ayno and Agnes his wife, and the heirs male of the body of Agnes, with remainder to William Manyel and Isabella his wife, and the heirs male of the body of Isabel, with remainder to John Beneyt of Bottele, and the heirs male of his body, with remainder to the said Edith, Joan, Agnes, Isabel, and John Beneyt successively in tail general, with remainder to the right heirs of the Bishop.

In the year 1414 John Seynulle, Knight of the Hospital of St. John of Jerusalem, proctor of indulgences of the Castle of St. Peter, states that Pope Alexander V. has granted to all who contribute to their ability to the defence of the castle, liberty to choose a confessor to give full remission once, in the article of death, and certifies that two persons (named) had contributed, and might choose a confessor. Dated at Temple Bruere. The seal of indulgences for the Castle was affixed, but is now gone. The form of absolution is at the back.

One letter of the 15th century has been preserved. It has no date, but I think it must be of the year 1417; it is of such interest that a copy cannot be dispensed with. It is as follows:—

My ryght worchypfull master and mastres, I recomend me unto you, desyr to here of your welffare evermore. Plesse hytt your gude mastercyp ye schalle understand be thys wrytteynge that the Kyng our sofran lord with all his lords and in a spechall my lord schambrylen the were in gude helthe and mere the xxvij. day in Julii, and the were att agyngcort at this day aboyff wretten, and there the were R. worshypfully in the cherches; and the mayre of the toun and the Kaptens of the frenshe men were in agyncort iij. days afore that the Kyng came thedur, and there was ij. lords among the frenche men that be a lii (allies) unto the Kyng of yngland; and when the understood that the Kyng wold cum thedyr, the brynt up all the small touns bettwene callis and agyncort und all the subbars of egyngcort; and as for all wallyd touns bettwyne egyncort and calles the be undur the Kynges abeschans, lowyd be god; and the lords wywys of france aboyf wreten lalyr un to the kyngs gude grace to have there lywys and there lyvelode, and the wyll be tru men unto the Kyng; and as for the french kyng, he ys in Paryshe as the understond, and the kyng of ynkland has mayde a woy that he wyll not ibyd ij. nyghts in a toun to be hawe understandyng whedur the frenche kyng wyll gywe hym batell or not; and yf he wyll not, he wyll gywe him batell, he wyll a say whedyr he may make the frenche kyng to remewe hys resetyng place, &c., this ys my fayll; for a man of yrech yfeld brouge thys tydynge to my ladie for ware troythe fro my lord chamburlene; that knoys god, who haiv yow in hys blessyd kypyng; wretten in hast (Addressed) Unto Master Thomas Palmer, sqwyere, Holt of the hyll.

Henry VI.—A long paper roll, the commencement is torn away. It consists of charges (in English) against William de la Pole, Duke of Suffolk, by reason of his dissolute life, his corrupt dealings in France, bringing about the loss of Anjou and Maine, and his acquisitions of offices and property. It is most likely one of the charges referred to in the rolls of Parliament as having been made against him. It is not the same as that printed in the Paston Letters, vol. iii. p. 63. A copy of this Roll will be deposited in the Public Record Office.

Henry VI.—Petition, in English (on vellum, much decayed), by Sir Henry le Scrop, son and heir of Richard le Scrop, for seisin of certain lands of which Sir Richard died seised, under a grant in 6 Edw. II. to Sir Henry le Scrop, the petitioner's great grandfather.

21 Henry VI., Dec. 1. Commission to levy an aid granted to the King in a previous Parliament.

Henry VI.—In this reign are three charters by Humphrey, Duke of Gloucester, who styles himself "Regum filius frater et patruus."

3 Edward IV., July 6.—Mandate to the Sheriff of Rutlandshire to make proclamations in his bailiwick of the ordinance against the adulteration of wool made in the Parliament, 3 Edw. IV., and a similar ordinance made in the Parliament in the 8th year of Henry VI., late "de facto et non de jure" King of England.

3 Edward IV., July 1.—Commission to several persons to levy the share of the county of Rutland of an aid of 37,000*l.* granted by the Parliament then sitting.

9 Edward IV.—Grant (in English) by the Princess Cecille "the Kynges moodar, and late wyf unto Richard "rightfull Kyng of Englande and of Fraunce, and lord "of Irland," to Thomas Blacusley and his assigns, for 11 years, of the herbage of the park of Whaddon, in the county of Buckingham. The seal of red wax is perfect; France and England quarterly, impaled with Neville. This deed is noticeable, because of the grantor's assertion of the right of her late husband to the Crown.

Seals, with armorial bearings, are numerous on the deeds of the 14th and 15th centuries. I specify in particular those of Chaworth, Bishopesdon, Talbot, Nevile, Marmion, Hastings, West, Humphry Duke of Gloster, and Joan, widow of King Henry IV. Those of Chaworth are very remarkable. And specially noticeable is a very large seal of the Monastery of St. Andrew at Rochester; it is of green wax, and has on one side a finely executed representation of the martyrdom of St. Andrew. Attached to a document mentioned below is a seal (about five inches long, but broken) of Cardinal Pole, at the base is his shield of arms; the quarterings agreeing with those on his tomb. Attached to another document mentioned below is the seal of the Prerogative Court beautifully executed. Christ scourged, surmounted by a canopy, and the arms of the see impaled with the private arms of Thomas Cranmer, the then archbishop.

5 Henry VIII.—A certificate by the Abbat of the Monastery of our Lady without the walls of York, and the Mayor and four Aldermen of York, as to the identity and pedigree of certain persons who appeared before them.

13 Henry VIII.—A grant by Charles, Duke of Suffolk, with his seal and autograph signature.

2 Edward VI.—A vellum document of 11½ pages, in Latin, under the seal of Cardinal Pole, reciting malicious charges of immoralities against Thomas Nevill, of Holton, in the county of Leicester, and the proceedings thereon, and acquitting him. A notarial certificate is at the end.

1556, April 1.—An instrument of dissolution of the marriage between Anna Warde daughter of Christopher Warde of Cuerdale and John Wansford of Kirtlington, Esquire, by reason of a previous contract "per verba "de presenti" between her and Ralph Nevill, and declaring Ralph and Ann to be lawful man and wife: under the seal of the Prerogative Court, Cranmer being Archbishop. Notarial certificate of Thomas Argall is at the end.

In the 37 Eliz. is an inventory of the goods and chattels of Francis Paynell of Boothbie in the county of Leicester, Esquire, upwards of 10 feet long. A cast of goss hawks and a falcon were valued at 4*l.* A pair of virginals was valued at 10*s.*

In this large collection are the following wills and probates.

A.D. 1360. Will of John atte Well of Drayton.
40 Edw. 3. Another will of John atte Well.
10 Hen. 4. Will of Wm. Bishopsdon Esq.
23 Hen. 6. Will of Sir John Basynges at Empyngham.
4 Edw. 4. Will of John Jay of Witham.
1466. Will of William Hardyng of Witham.
1469. Another will of William Hardyng.
1485. Will of Hugh Smyth of Witham.
1508. Will of Isabell Nevill widow of Thomas Nevill, Esquire.
1610. Will of George Cliffe of Cressing in Essex, cook (a copy).

There is a pedigree on vellum (16th century) of the Carringtons of the North. This is a very interesting document. The pedigree ends with Sir John Carrington who died A.D. 1446 and contains a copy of his own statements to his wife Milicent; it is in old English, and the phraseology and spelling show that it must have been copied from a document of the 15th century. Sir John was a partisan of Richard II. Fearing the cruelty of Henry IV. he fled abroad and assumed the name of Smyth; after a time he returned to England, made himself known to the Abbat of St. Osyth in Essex, lived with him, and was by him supplied with money so that he was enabled to marry, and he died at an advanced age.

A folio volume, paper, 16th century, contains copies of various state papers in the reigns of Henry VIII. Edward VI., Mary and Elizabeth. The contents are as follow*:—

ALFRED J. HORWOOD.*

THE MANUSCRIPTS OF MRS. PRESCOTT, OXFORD SQUARE.

Mrs. Prescott (née Cromwell Russell) is a lineal descendant of Oliver Cromwell, the Protector, and possesses some interesting letters and papers which she most obligingly submitted to my inspection. Besides the letters and papers relating to the family, Mrs. Prescott possesses some personal relics of the great man; a copy of a cartulary of Carisbrook, and some original documents relating to the distribution of the funds collected for the relief of the distressed and persecuted Vaudois. (Milton's fine sonnet on the persecution will occur to the reader's recollection.)

1628, April 28. Copy of the Lord Keeper's speech to the Lords, and of His Majesty's answer to the remonstrance.

A catalogue or schedule of the shipping of this Kingdom taken by the enemy in the last three years. (This gives the numbers of ships of different tonnages, their values in money and their respective ports. The total was 260 ships, value 197,000*l.*, besides other ships not named belonging to other ports. I have seen it in print.)

* After this Report was printed another parcel of papers was sent by Mr. Peake. It comprises some letters by Count Gastaldi (at London) Envoy from Genoa, during the years 1760 to 1760.

1648, March 28. Copy of a letter by Oliver Cromwell to Richard Cromwell.

1649, Aug. 13. The same to Dorothea, wife of Richard Cromwell.

1652, Dec. 10. The like.

1655, August 14. Sir Francis Russell to his son-in-law Henry Cromwell (son of the Protector) in Ireland; promises to send him his hounds.

1655, Nov. 21. Oliver Cromwell to his son Henry; mentions that certain persons are dangerous and may be made the heads of a new rebellion.

1655, June 15. Order to Mr. Waterhouse to pay Mr. Robert Walker 24*l.* for a draught of his Highnesses picture; (signed, Simon Cannon); and the receipt below signed by R. Walker.

1655, Aug. 10. Lady Faunconberg to Henry Cromwell; raising of the siege of Londonderry; conversation between Lord Faucouberg and the King, who said he wanted money and did not intend to raise men.

1657, December 19. Katherine Russell (wife of Sir Francis) to her daughter Mrs. Reynolds; gives an account of the death of General Reynolds who was drowned on his return home.

1657, January 19. Sir Francis Russell to Henry Cromwell, Lord Deputy of Ireland, respecting his daughter Reynolds' claims on the estate of her late husband General Reynolds.

1658, January 18. Return signed by the Earl of Themond and others, of the revenues of public institutions in Ireland. Includes Trinity College, Dublin, the new college, allowance for public library, professors, schools, &c. (a large skin of parchment).

1658, May 1. Return (on parchment) of the state of the revenues of Ireland made in obedience to Oliver Cromwell's commands for one year ending 1658 (the assessment and parochial letters excepted). The balance towards pay of the army and special purposes was 18,465*l.* 1*s.* 3½*d.*

(1660, July 30). Case of Oliver St. John, Esquire, concerning his actions during the late troubles. A defeuce. 1. As to his friendship with Cromwell. 2. That Thurloe related to some of the army that Cromwell and St. John advised the King's death. 3. About his escaping to Holland.

(No date). An account of money disbursed for mending of the Toyle for his Highness the Lord Protector; for the service done in Greenwich park.

1660, June 9. Cockpitt, George Monck to Col. H. Cromwell, at Sir Francis Russell's, Chippenham, Cambridgeshire. Thinks it not yet convenient for him (Cromwell) to come up; when it is seasonable will acquaint him.

Papers relative to Henry Cromwell's pardon, and testimonials in favour of his conduct while he was Lord Deputy of Ireland.

1664, Feb. 20. License by Manchester, Ashley, and Anglesey to Henry Cromwell, of Spinney, to repair to London for his private occasions.

1684, April 16. Copy will of Benjamin Hewling of London, and letters by him. (His daughter Hannah married Henry Cromwell, second son of Henry 4th son of the Protector.)

1685, Sept. 16. A letter to Mrs. Hannah Moreley, relative to (inter alia) Mr. Hewling and his brother Benjamin Hewling, executed in the Duke of Monmouth's rebellion.

1690, December. Certificate of Henry Cromwell being sworn of His Majesty's (William 3rd) most Honourable Privy Chamber in Ordinary.

A letter undated, from Henry Cromwell to his wife; and one dated Dec. 18, 1690, from Richard Cromwell to his daughter Anne, and another in 1696 to Clark, Baron of the Exchequer.

Many papers, pedigrees, and memoranda, used by Mr. Oliver Cromwell for his published Memoirs of the Protector, and his sons Richard and Henry; and letters of a domestic nature by and to members of the family in the 17th century.

(No date). Copy Declaration of Sir Charles Coote, Lord President of Connaught, and the officers and soldiers under his command, against the oppression of the army, and saying that they will not side with those who uphold the oppression of the army, but will side with the Parliament.

A clear and exact account of the 16,500*l.* remitted by the order of his Highness and Council to be distributed among the poor distressed Protestants of Piedmont, &c., perfected by Samuel Morland during the time of his abode in Geneva, in qualitie of his Highness's Commissioner Extraordinary for the affairs of the Valleys; viz., $\frac{20}{30}$ Nov. 1655 to $\frac{21}{1}$ Nov. 1656. This is a large folio volume, and contains copies of letters by Thurloe, and of letters by Pell and Morland to Thurloe. At fo. 74 is the conclusion by Morland, and he submits his accounts to Cromwell. Signed by Morland. Appended are many original receipts and vouchers by Goldsmiths, and by Pastors of the Churches of the Valleys.

A large folio volume (about 80 leaves filled), begins with a memorandum that Tuesday, 24th Nov. 1657, the Right Honourable Lord Henry Cromwell was sworne Lord Deputy of Ireland. This is followed by copies of letters during Henry Cromwell's tenure of office. The first letter is dated Dublin, 25th Nov. 1657. The letters are to Secretary Thurloe, Lord Fleetwood, Lord Broghill, Oliver Cromwell, and others. In a letter to Lord Fleetwood, dated 20th December, 1658, the Lord Deputy says that he is very ill. The last is a letter to the Speaker of the Irish Parliament, dated 15th June 1659.

A small folio paper, 16th century, contains A trew copy of the black book of the priory of Carisbrook, and a survey of the manors and lands thereunto belonging. The cartulary ends at fo. 83*b*. It is all translated into English. Then follow The customs of the manor of the priory of Carisbrook delivered to me John Kingsmill, by some of the tenants of Carisbrook in a Court holden there, to be their customs for 40 years since.—After this comes a rent roll of the possessions of the late priory of Carisbrook, taken in 1573. Folios 174–231 are occupied by a copy of a survey of the manor of Freshwater. The site of the priory of Carisbrook was held by Sir Francis Walsingham. The volume seems to have been compiled by John Kingsmill.

After I had looked over the MSS., Mrs. Prescott was good enough to show me two swords formerly belonging to the Protector, and the very large hat worn by him when he dissolved the Long Parliament, and several other personal relics. One thing of great beauty is a small cabinet presented to him by the Grand Duke of Tuscany; it is of fine Florentine mosaic, enriched with fruit and flowers in pietra dura; its three drawers contain numerous vases of opal-coloured Venetian glass, filled with soaps, powders, and oils, the perfumes of which are still fragrant.

His medicine cabinet is of black wood, fitted with numerous silver cups, boxes, and instruments, but none of the drugs remain.

THE MANUSCRIPTS OF J. J. ROGERS, ESQ., OF PENROSE, COUNTY OF CORNWALL.

The volume and papers sent by Mr. Rogers for examination contain transcripts and notes of letters of the 17th and 18th centuries, addressed to and by members of his family. The originals are in the possession of Mr. Rogers.

The letters noted in the papers relate to local politics and family matters.

The letters and fragments of letters copied into the 4to volume contain some matters of public interest, and the notes and illustrations which Mr. Rogers has added make them fully intelligible and interesting.

Eleven letters are from Charles Rogers to his father, John Rogers, who lived at Truthwall, near Godolphin House in Cornwall. A few are written to and by John, son of the said John Rogers. Fourteen or fifteen letters and fragments of letters are from Francis Godolphin, father of Sidney, afterwards Earl Godolphin and Lord High Treasurer in the reign of Queen Anne (Francis was a stout Royalist and in the service of King Charles I); letter and a fragment of a letter by Mrs. Godolphin, most probably the wife of Francis; and a copy of Queen Anne's letter, dated 10th (or 13th, see the Earl's reply) April 1710, to Earl Godolphin, on the occasion of her appointing the Duke of Shrewsbury to be Lord Chamberlain, and of the Earl's reply, dated she 15th of the same month.*

The first document copied, and which precedes the letters, is a printed form of application for a loan by King Charles I, before the meeting of his first Parliament. It is addressed to James Prade, of Lelant, and asks the loan of 20l. It was sealed with the privy seal, and has at the foot a receipt by Francis Godolphin (one of the persons named as receivers) for the 20l.

The letters from Francis Godolphin begin in 1638-9, and the last is probably to be dated in 1645.

They relate to the movements of the King and of the armies on both sides, the King's dealings with the Scots, the public events connected with Land, Strafford, and Finch (the Lord Keeper), and reports about them, parliamentary and other proceedings.

In one, undated, the writer mentions that the Londoners came daily to Whitehall and Westminster Hall in great numbers with swords and clubs, demanding justice against Strafford . . He adds, "The king shed "many teares to-day and is extreamly sadd."

In a letter of Aug. 1642 he recommends John Rogers to have powder and bullets needful for so many men as lie in the house.

In another, undated, he says that he has received the King's warrant to carry over 200 more for safeguard of the fort at Scilly for the summer; and that the estates of divers delinquents and the tithes of divers parishes were directed towards the maintenance of the place. That the woods of certain delinquents (named) were to be sold, and ont of the proceeds 600l. in the first place to be for provision of the magazines of victuals at Scilly.

Mrs. Godolphin in one of her letters says she hears that tin will sell but for 7d. a pound in Bristol (Aug. 1643).

23 May 1660. Letter from Chas. Rogers mentioning the appointment on that day of Sir John Vaughan to be Lord Chief Justice.

13 Nov. 1668. Says that the King was expected from Newmarket, where he had seen a horse race.

19 Feb. 1669. Has heard to-day, how true he knows not, that there was a vote in the House for 800,000l.

12 March 1669. Sir Peter Killigrow is getting an Act of Parliament for building a key (quay) at Falmouth, but Sir William, he thinks, will obtain a proviso for saving his rights in the harbour-dues to him, as lessee of the manors of Penryn and Minster. Nich. Courtney is endeavouring an Act for the regulating of attorneys. Great debate in the House of Peers about a separation endeavoured by Lord Roos from his lady, he designing to marry another woman. The Bill against Conventicles is past the House of Commons and gone up to the Lords: it is sharp, as the matter well requires, but yet without a premunire, which was once intended. . . A report that our countryman Kempthorne has behaved himself gloriously against the Turkish pyrates . . one ship against six . . . yet able to seize a very rich prize and bring her off.

28 Dec. 1669. Half a dozen highwaymen taken this week; some very eminent, such as Waldron, Da Val, &c. . . . four or five days very hard frost; the Thames nearly frozen over.

12 June 1685. John Rogers, junr., gives an account of his jornrey from London. About Branford (Brentford) he fell in with Mr. Hambleton (some time bedchamber man to the late king), with two servants and himself well armed. Reached Bagshot at night. On Thursday Capt. Saahfield, an Irishman, and 2 servants overtook him, and lay at Sutton that night. Friday at Salisbury, overtook 3 companies of foot with 8 pieces of cannon and ammunition, which came from Portsmouth. Saturday, at Dorchester, overtook Col. Kirke's regiment of foot, who, with about 60 lords and gentlemen with him, well hors'd and armed, marched Sunday all day to Chard, being informed that Monmouth was then at Taunton; but news coming that he had gone to Bridgwater, all the forces at Chard, about 2,500, Lord Oxford's regiment of volunteers, about 100, intended to join forces with the Duke of Albemarle; who with about 10,000 lay at Williton, and so to fight him as soon as possible. Friday last about 16 or 17 horse of Monmouth's met with about the same number of Lord Oxford's, in all but 2 of the former killed: on our side only the lieutenant killed; which makes Monmouth's party decline him every day. . . About 30 gentlemen of Honiton secured and kept prisoners to prevent rebellious actions.

3 Oct. 1685. A news letter containing town, county, and foreign news and gossip; and a particular account of persons condemned for the Monmouth rebellion, viz., at Taunton Castle, Taunton Gaol, Bridewell, Ilchester, Wells, Bridgwater, and Exeter and Dorchester. In all 839 to be transported, 322 to be executed, and 45 to be pardoned.

Queen Anne in her letter to Earl Godolphin thinks that the title of Duke will reconcile the Marquis of Kent to his loss of the office of Lord Chamberlain.

The Earl in his reply gives his reasons for not thinking the new appointment judicious.

MSS. VOLUMES of IRISH PARLIAMENTARY DEBATES in the possession of Mr. W. M. TORRENS, M.P. for Finsbury.

Mr. Torrens has in his possession 37 MSS. volumes, quarto, of the debates held in the Irish House of Commons, between 1776 and 1789, with the corresponding shorthand notes contained in oblong note books interleaved with blotting paper.

The history of these volumes, so far as it can be ascertained, is as follows:—

The notes are believed to have been confidentially made by a shorthand writer under the direction of the Government, to the influence of which he probably owed the possibility of his presence in the House, as regular reporters were not admitted at that period. The collection was preserved till 1817, at the Stamp Office, King William Street, Dublin, when it was sold as lumber on the Union of the two Exchequers in that year. In 1842 these MSS. volumes were advertised in a catalogue by Messrs. Grant and Bolton, booksellers, Grafton Street, Dublin, and purchased by Mr. Torrens, to whose kindness I am indebted for these particulars.

Mr. Torrens has before now expressed his willingness to place the collection at the disposal of the Governors of Trinity College, Dublin, or of the British Museum. No notice has, however, as yet been taken of this offer with a view to publication.

Previous to his purchase from Messrs. Grant and Bolton, Mr. Torrens, to satisfy himself of the identity of the matter contained in the shorthand notes with that contained in the MSS. vols., placed some of the former in the hands of experts to have them deciphered. The result of their labours was entirely conclusive as to the date of the stenographic cipher known to have been in use at the period, and of the accuracy of the transcript in the quarto volumes, so far as it goes; and they further expressed themselves satisfied that had they sufficient time allowed them, they would be able to supply the lacunæ, which to some extent impair the completeness of the transcript, which is otherwise clear. The existence of these lacunæ lead me to think that the transcript in the MSS. volumes is the work of a different hand from that of the writer of the original shorthand notes.

The hitherto published debates of the Irish House of Commons begin in 1782, six years later than the date of the earliest debate given in the MSS. vols.

The speeches in the published volumes, like those in the reports of the English Parliament, supposed to have been edited by Dr. Johnson, are essentially wanting in the marks of discussion as it occurs in a popular assembly. They bear the impress of having been to a certain extent arranged and revised according to the fancy of the editor, and the style characteristic of the different speakers is consequently in a great measure lost. In this respect the MSS. vols. present a marked contrast. I was able to appreciate the difference by a comparison of the accounts given respectively in the printed and the MSS. vols. of the debates on the repeal of Poyning's law in 1782, and the motion for retrenchment in 1783, during which the famous altercation between Flood and Grattan took place, which ultimately led to the arrest of the former by order of the Speaker to prevent a breach of the peace.

One of the speeches delivered on the latter occasion I have given below, as an example, with the speech as reported in the printed volumes placed in parallel columns. The difference between the two, it will be observed, is considerable. I have supplied the missing words wherever I thought it could do so with a probability of being right in my conjecture. The words so supplied are in brackets [ ]. Beyond this I did not like to go, the province of the Commissioners being rather to call attention to the existence of documents than to give any lengthy extracts from their contents.

Mr. Grattan's Speech on Oct. 28th, 1783, on Sir Henry Cavendish's motion for Retrenchment.

Printed Reports, Vol. 2, p. 39; also Mr. Grattan's Speeches edited by his son, Vol. 1, p. 177.

I shall not trouble you long nor take up the time of the House by apologizing for bodily infirmity or the affectation of infirmity. I shall not speak of myself or enter into a defence of my character, having never apostatized. I think it is not necessary for the House now to investigate what we know to be fact. I think it would be better to go into the business as the House did upon another occasion without waiting the formality of the report of a committee. As to myself, the honorable reward that a grateful nation has bestowed upon me for ever binds me to make every return in my power, and particularly to oppose every unnecessary expense. I am far from thinking with the honourable gentleman as to the Speech, and I believe he will find instances where economy has been recommended from the throne but prodigality practiced. This was the case in Lord Harcourt's administration, an administration which had the support of the honorable geutleman; therefore, he of all men cannot be at a loss to reject that illusory economy which has so often appeared in the speeches of Lord Lieutenants. With respect to the Genevese, I never could have thought it possible to give the speech such a bias as has been mentioned, and that people will be deceived if they give credit to any declamation that infers from the words of the speech anything but an honest economy in applying the public money fairly to their use. The nation has derived great honour from this transaction, and I would be sorry to have it tarnished by infereuce and insinuation. In 1778, when the burdens of this country were comparatively small, I made a motion similar to this; the honorable gentleman then opposed me. I have his sanction now that I was right and he was wrong; and if say this, that though gentlemen may for a while vote against retrenchments, they will at last see the necessity of them; yet though I think retrenchment absolutely necessary, I am not very sure that this is just the time to make it in the army, now when England has acted justly, I will not say generously, —now when she has lost her empire, when she still feels the wounds of the last unhappy war, and comforts herself only with the faithful friendship of Ireland. If in 1769, when the liberties of Ireland were denied and those of America in danger, it was thought unadvisable to retrench our army, there can be no such reason to reduce it now, when both are acknowledged and confirmed. When we voted 4,000 men to butcher our brethren in America, the honorable gentleman should have opposed that vote, but perhaps he will be able to explain the propriety of sending 4,000 Irishmen thither. But why not look for retrenchment in the revenue, and other departments. In my mind the proper mode would be to form a fair estimate of what would be a reasonable peace establishment, and reduce our several departments to it.

The MSS. vols.

[I shall not trouble you long nor take up the time of the House], not that I labour under any infirmity or affectation of infirmity. I shall not speak of myself, [I am] not reduced to an apology. I shall speak to the question, [I shall ask] merely this, shall the House now reject what we know to be a fact, [while] at the same time we may not have in point of order sufficient information. I know the House upon former occasions, before the report of the committee of accounts, voted that the expense of the country ought to be retrenched. [It may be] informal till that report, [it is] not with the context. Perhaps [it may be] more advantageous to let the motion pass declar[atory] [of] retrenchment, which every man must admit. I ought to be for Publick Retrenchment, because I have been the cause of public expense. [The] honour a great country has conferred upon me, my exertions which this House has been pleased to call meritorious—the public grant—so shall I deserve that reward by making compensation to this country by opposing every species of unnecessary expense. The [motion] does not go far enough. The Minister will not avail himself of it. I believe that the honorable gentleman will find instances of speeches where economy was promised and where that promise was violated in an administration favoured with his acquiescence. The administration of Lord Harcourt held out economy. I do also recollect that that promise was forgot. I recollect that the honorable gentleman was a supporter of the Government.* He of all men cannot be at a loss to know that illusory ideas of economy were held out in the speech of the Lord Lieutenant. It is necessary to come to particulars. I should be sorry [if] the Government were so misunderstood that it was supposed that it meant [anything disrespectful] to that glorious body of men [the Genevese]. Nothing was recommended but an honest disposition of publick money. [It is impossible] to conceive that either the Government or the Parliament meant to condemn the idea of a free country. This nation has derived honour from the transaction. I should be extremely sorry it should be tarnished by anything. Resolutions of retrenchment are in some things negative, they must be accompanied with something more. Notwithstanding the resolution of 1771, a monstrous expense was incurred. A mere resolution is in itself inadequate. There was such a resolution in 1773, by the committee of accounts, "that the expense ought greatly to be re- "trenched." I remember it was negatived. I believe that the hon^ble^ gentleman on the floor was one of its supporters. Another motion in 1777 I made, after every increase had been made in every article. The public expense had greatly increased. I remember the honorable gentlemen on the floor spoke against that motion. He spoke against that motion when [the public expense was] comparatively greater, for it [then was] comparatively greater. I do not agree [that] this country ever since 1771 in point of expense has been increasing egregiously, but recollect [that] during eight years Government was honoured with his support. I state this not to reflect upon him; when [though] men shall speak against it and vote against it they will see the necessity of deserting their uniformity and exclaiming against [further expenditure]. I am very far from saying a reduction of the number of your forces [is advisable] at this moment. The proposition would be inadmissible. When Great Britain has justly, I will not say generously liberally, when Great Britain has justly acknowledged the liberties of Ireland, opened the plantation trade, and has adopted the principles of a sister, and when Great Britain has lost part of her Empire, this is not the period when Ireland should withdraw her army. The army was to be increased in 1769 when the liberties of America were in danger, when the liberties of Ireland were denied.

I do allow England has diminished her army. That is a paltry argument. She has not diminished her expense. An addition of four millions! Is that not [the case]? Therefore I say the situation of England, so far from being an argument for diminishing the army of Ireland, is an argument against it. [While] sparing 4,000 men to butcher our brethren in America [the sentences that follow are imperfect]. The best method would be this,—let us see what would be a reasonable expense for our establishment, let us form an estimate upon it. It would be better than a resolution of retrenchment. I should concur with the idea of the hon^ble^ baronet. [It would] be better to recur to methods more forcible to put a stop to expense which is not supported by necessity but must impede our growing commerce.

The speeches, it may be mentioned, are all given in the first person. In some places such little points are mentioned as the fact of Mr. Flood's having been very hoarse when he rose to speak, the words "very hoarse" being written in brackets between the name of the speaker and his opening words.

These various considerations lead me to suppose that the contents of these volumes are genuine, and may be found to contain information of importance on a very interesting and brilliant period of the history of Ireland.

EDMOND FITZMAURICE.

* Mr. Flood was Vice-Treasurer in Ireland in the administration of Lord Harcourt.

Inventory of Effects of John, Viscount Lisle, and Earl of Warwick, 1545–50.

Having had the pleasure of becoming acquainted with Mr. W. H. Turner, of Turl Street, Oxford, I have lately received from him, for inspection, a manuscript consisting of 14 closely written leaves of wire-wove foolscap paper, of the date probably of 1551; they were found by him, in the present year, neatly stitched together all round, and concealed, as a sort of padding, to give substance to the cover of some old book (now lost), which had lain unnoticed in the office of Mr. G. Dayman, Solicitor, of Oxford, and his predecessors in business, for probably upwards of a century.

When discovered by Mr. Turner, the leaves in general were in fair condition, though somewhat tattered at the margins. On examination by him, they were found to contain a series of Inventories (A. D. 1545–50) of the clothes, arms, trinkets, and furniture, mostly year by year, with the Library also, belonging to John, Viscount Lisle, afterwards Duke of Northumberland (beheaded in 1553), at Ely House, London, with an account, in most instances, of how the various items were ultimately disposed of. By the kind favour of Mr. Turner, who is always ready to further the cause of historical and antiquarian research, I have been enabled to extract from its items a few of the more interesting passages, for the purposes of this Report.

The writing (cursive), though pale and somewhat indistinct in some places, is legible throughout, of fair character, and apparently that of the same person from beginning to end; J Hough most probably, who seems to have held the office of either steward or valet, at Ely House, to Viscount Lisle. The first series of entries occupies pages 1 and 2, and has the following heading:—
"Thys apparell following my Lord Lisle had whan
" J Hough was put to attend on his L. first, which was
" Anno Domini 1545 and the 28th [sic] of December."
The second Inventory occupies pages 3, 4, and has this heading:—"An Yventory of all thapparell that my " Lord Lisle had yn the yere of oure Lord 1546: which
" declareth on the one margyn whan any thereof was " made, and on the other whan it was yeven awaye."
Similar Inventories occupy pages 5–17, for the following years, down to 1550 inclusive.

Page 18 has the following heading:—"A note of all
" the velvet shoes that my Lord Lisle hathe had since
" the 23 of December, which are in number 46 pare, and
" 2 pare of velvet slippers, 1545."

The items in p. 19 are entered under the following head:—"A note of all the buskyns, botes, and bote hose."

P. 20 commences,—"A note of rapires, daggers,
" swerdes, and bucklers, in the Yventorie omitted;"
the list extending to p. 22.

P. 23 is headed,—"A note of all the stuffe that my " Lord Lisle hathe in the wardrope at Ely House, made
" the last of Januarie Anno 1550:" the Inventory extending to p. 27, and including, after a few articles of furniture, a list of his Lordship's wardrobe at that date, the books constituting his Library, and various articles of a miscellaneous nature.

One of the most interesting features in the Inventories of clothes in the earlier part of the manuscript (pp. 1–17) is the fact that in almost every instance the name is added of the person to whom the article was ultimately given, or how it was lost or otherwise disposed of. The items are some hundreds in number: a number of those which have seemed to me most deserving of transcription are here added,—"Item, a Spanishe cloke of broode " cloth gardit with velvet, yeven to Mr Calverd at the " White Hall 1545 [6] Mar. Item, a cote of black velvet

Chief Baron Willes's Letters and Observations on Ireland.

In the collection of Mrs. Willes of Goodrest in Berkshire, widow of the late Edward Willes, Esq., of Newbold Comyn in Warwickshire, are two manuscripts relating to the social and economical condition of Ireland about the middle of the last century, which appear to me of very considerable value for the history of that country. Having, through the kind courtesy of the possessor, had the opportunity of examining these manuscripts, I venture to offer to the Commission a short account of their character and contents.

Both volumes are the work of an ancestor of the present owner, the Right Hon. Edward Willes, who was Chief Baron of the Exchequer in Ireland, and afterwards a Justice of King's Bench in England, in the middle of the last century.

The first is a series of letters addressed by Chief Baron Willes from Ireland to his friend the Earl of Warwick, transcribed from the original, and, as it would seem from an allusion in one of the letters, collected into a volume, by direction of Lord Warwick.

The second is a collection of the autograph notes and memoranda made by the Chief Baron of his observations upon matters which fell under his notice during his residence in Ireland, with his reflections on the general condition of that country and its inhabitants. Many of these notes evidently served as the materials of the Chief Baron's letters to Lord Warwick, and are repeated or expanded in these letters. But a considerable proportion also are entirely independent, and relate to matters regarding which the letters are altogether silent.

Mr. Willes, after a successful career at the bar in England, was appointed, as was not uncommon for members of the English bar at the time, Chief Baron of the Irish Exchequer, in succession to Chief Baron Bowes, who in 1757 was promoted to the chancellorship of Ireland, with the title of Lord Clonlyon. Mr. Willes was appointed in the March of that year, and landed in Dublin on the 3rd of the following May. He held this office until the year 1758, when he returned to England, and died at Newbold-Comyn in the same year.

To this interval 1757–68, the Letters to Lord Warwick and the Notes and Observations both belong. Of the former only four bear dates, the first in 1757 and the fourth in 1762; but there can be no doubt that they all belong to the years between 1757 and 1768.

During this interval, beginning with the Lord Lieutenancy of the Duke of Bedford, and ending with that of Lord Townshend, was laid, as is well known, the foundation of the struggle which terminated in the assertion of the legislative independence of Ireland. But neither in the Letters of Chief Baron Willes nor in his Notes and Observations will any trace be found of the subject or the progress of this political contest. The interest of these papers is almost exclusively social and economic; and in this particular they supply a body of information which will be sought in vain in any of the printed sources of the history of Ireland in the eighteenth century. They go at least some way to fill up the almost total blank in the social records of Ireland which lies between the days of Dean Swift and of Arthur Young.

The Letters to Lord Warwick are six in number, and might better be called reports, being written from the several circuits through which the Chief Baron travelled in his capacity of Judge of Assize.

The first is dated from Carlow, August 11, 1757, and contains a brief account of the Leinster Circuit.

The second and third relate to the North Eastern Circuit, which comprised the counties of Louth, Monaghan, Armagh, Down, and Antrim, the second letter being dated from Dundalk, March 28, 1759, and the third (written at the close of the Circuit) from Dublin on the 25th of April in the same year.

The fourth relates to the North Western Circuit, comprising the counties of Longford, Cavan, Fermanagh, Tyrone, Donegal, and Londonderry. It is dated from Kochfield (the Chief Baron's suburban villa), the 23rd September 1762.

The fifth, which bears no date, was written from Clonmel, and relates to the Munster Circuit, which at that time comprised Waterford, Tipperary, Cork, Limerick, and Kerry. It is very minute and elaborate in its details, and enters at greater length than many of the others into the particulars of the natural history of the district which it regards.

The sixth (likewise undated) relates to the Connaught Circuit, in which, along with the five shires of the province, Leitrim, Roscommon, Mayo, Sligo, and Galway, the county of Clare was at that time included.

It is remarkable that these letters hardly contain a single allusion to what might have been expected to prove for a lawyer the most attractive topic—the legal business of the assize, or the state of the law and its administration in Ireland. Probably, in deference to the tastes of his correspondent, the Chief Baron avoids all professional topics, and confines himself entirely to the social, commercial, and agricultural condition of the country, with occasional reference to its scenery, natural history, and such of its antiquities as might be expected to interest his friend.

It would be out of place in a cursory notice like the present to enter into a minute criticism of these valuable Letters. It will be enough for the purposes of the Commission to have directed to them the attention of those who feel an interest in that phase of the more recent history of Ireland which they represent. The Notes and Observations are chiefly valuable as a supplement to the Letters, in respect of matters not directly treated therein. The first letter, for example, that upon the Leinster Circuit, which was written within a few weeks of the Chief Baron's first arrival in Ireland, is very meagre in its account of the country comprised within the limits of that circuit, and is especially disappointing upon the ancient and important counties and corporate towns of Kilkenny and Wexford. Now regarding both these, much additional information is given in the Notes, among which I may particularize those which refer to that fertile field for speculation among British ethnographers—the Baronies of Forth and Bargy in Wexford. In like manner, it is in the Notes that the Chief Baron treats of Dublin and its institutions. These notices of the capital, from the very form into which they are thrown, are loose and unfinished; but they contain many interesting minutiæ not noticed by other writers, some of them curiously illustrative of the spirit of the times.

It is on the more serious social and economical questions, however, that the judgment of so able and so disinterested a witness is especially valuable; and I cannot help regretting that Chief Baron Willes's Letters on Ireland were not made public during the animated discussions upon the state of Ireland last year. His account of the land system, such as he found it in his day, would have proved a most valuable contribution to the history of Irish land-tenure, and would have tended to show that the anomalies which last year's legislation was designed to remedy, were of ancient date, and had exercised from immemorial time that depressing influence on the fortunes of the country, which reached its crisis in the famine of 1846–7.

Even still, I venture to hope that they will attract the notice of some judicious editor. The Letters, although transcripts, are in a condition of completeness (with the exception of a few blanks which could be easily supplied), which might relieve an editor from almost all the trouble of supervision; and in experienced hands, the "Notes and Observations" might, with little difficulty, be thrown into such a form, as at once to complete the descriptive account which the Letters supply, and to fill in some illustrative particulars in which the Letters may appear deficient.

The Hengwrt and Peniarth Manuscripts of Wm. W. E. Wynne, Esq., at Peniarth, co. Merioneth.

The Hengwrt Collection has been long and justly famed for its wealth in valuable Welsh MSS.; but its value is not limited by those. It also contains numerous volumes in English, Latin, and French, illustrating the Civil and Ecclesiastical History, the Jurisprudence, and Romance literature of this country.

The Peniarth Collection is now united with the above. The whole are in worthy hands. Mr. Wynne has himself recently compiled a brief catalogue,* which is printed in a recent volume of the Archæologia Cambrensis.

History.

Brut y Tywysogion. A 4to. volume on vellum, of the 15th century; used by Mr. Williams in compiling his edition (No. 10). Another copy also used by him is contained in No. 51.

Brut y Brenhinoedd. Seven copies, mostly rather imperfect, Nos. 15, 27, 50, 305, 313, 315, and 318. Of these the first three and the fifth are determined by

* Mr. Wynne gave me the use of this Catalogue as far as No. 334, all that was printed when I was at Peniarth, and a portion of the remainder then going through the press.

Mr. Wynne to be of the 14th century, the fourth and seventh to be of the 15th century, and the sixth to be the 13th century.

Geoffrey of Monmouth. Two Latin copies, Nos. 316 and 317, respectively of the 13th and 15th centuries; and a copy in Welsh of the same history (No. 536), of the end of the 13th or beginning of the 14th century. The existence at any time of the British original, which the author says he had from Walter the Archdeacon, has long been matter of doubt and dispute. No. 546 of this Collection (a volume of Miscellanea) contains notes and memoranda concerning MSS. in the reign of James I. It seems as though the writer had noted down persons to whom he had lent, or from whom he had borrowed, or who possessed, or perhaps only to whom he intended to speak about MSS. One entry may raise a hope; it is "Hugh Turberville, the "Book of Walter Archdeacon."

Beda's Ecclesiastical History. Folio of the 12th century. (101.)

Henry of Huntingdon's Chronicle. Folio of the 12th century. (102.)

Alured of Beverley's History. 4to. of the 15th century. (145.)

Nennius. A 16th century copy. (228.)

The English Brut Chronicle. Folio, paper, of the 15th century; imperfect at the beginning; ends with the death of Henry V., and his burial; "nobly interred "at Westminster; on whos sowle Jhu have mercy." (115.)

Another copy of the same. Folio, paper, 15th century, imperfect at the beginning and the end; begins at cap. 35, after the death of King Lud; ends with part of cap. 270. "How Edmund of Woodstock, that "was Earl of Kent, and the King's brother, Edward "of Carnarvon, was beheded at Wyncestre." (320.)

This copy agrees with No. 115.

Another English Brut Chronicle. Folio, paper, 15th century, imperfect at the end; begins, "In the noble "land of Surrye;" ends in the reign of Henry V., cap. 4. "How King Henry landed at Toke and gate "the town and the castell, and after went to Caane "and gate ytte." (429.) The first 16 pages are supplied from another copy. The text towards the end in this copy is fuller than in No. 115.

Another copy is numbered 442.

A Life of William the Conqueror, composed seemingly temp. Hen. II., is in a 12mo. volume of the 14th century; begins, "Pater Willelmi Conquestoris fuit "Robertus dux Normannorum;" ends on the 15th leaf, "cum sanctis omnibus in æternum gaudent." (239.)

An account of the Kings of Scotland; begins, "Hec "est generacio regum Scociæ post tempus Pixtorum. "Kynethus filius Alpini . . . " ends with the English Barons' letter to the Pope, dated at Lincoln, A.D. 1300. (239.)

A folio volume, paper, end of the 16th century; contains excerpts from Giraldus Cambrensis' History of Wales, Henry of Huntingdon and other Latin writers on the early history of Britain. At the end, "De rebus "in Cambria gestis precipue a Maylgwyn Gwyneth;" from Saul to Owen Glendwr, temp. Hen. IV., about 100 leaves, followed by a few entries under Hen. V., ending with the marriage of Katherine to Owen Tudor, and his escape from Newgate in 1438. After this come about five pages of Welsh heraldy and pedigrees, and then four entries for the history, the last in 1457. (225.)

Cotemporary, or nearly cotemporary, Latin notes on a fly leaf in another volume (133), give the death of Owen Glendwr on the day of St. Matthew the Apostle, 1415; and an eclipse of the sun on Tuesday, the feast of St. Botulph, 1433.

A Collection for English and Welsh History to about 1003; and a long work on ancient British History, by John Lewis of Lynwern, who dedicates it to King James I. Chapter 1 is of the prophecies of the Britons. In chapter 3 he says, "Now I am foulne into a labyrinth; "heare I hold a wolf by the ears, being come to "Brutus whom White calls Brotas."

No. 85 of the Peniarth Collection is a vellum roll much damaged by damp; it is the original duplicate signed by Francis I. of France, of the treaty and contract between Henry VIII. and Francis for defence against the Turks, dated at Calais 18th year of the most Christian King and of the said Defender of the Faith, the . . . . . ; 80,000 men were to be raised, of which 10,000 were to be horsemen. The roll is about 2 feet long by 8 inches wide.

There is a vellum deed under the hand and Great Seal of Queen Elizabeth, A.D. 1563. It is much decayed and mutilated. The signatures of some of the Queen's Council are at the back. It seems to be a security for 21,000 florins, advanced by a merchant in Antwerp to Sir Thomas Gresham (the Queen's agent) in 1548.

Extracts and copies from the Red Book of Caus. These are copies and minutes of charters, appointments to offices, &c. &c., relating to the estates in England and Normandy, of Humphry Stafford, Duke of Buckingham, killed at Northampton, 1460. Appointments of stewards and receivers, orders for payments, presentations to benefices, engagements of military retainers (curious), lawyers and a physician, receipts for money, &c. They are in Latin, French, and English. The volume was written by Robert Vaughan of Hengwrt in the 17th century. (223.)

A folio volume, paper, 16th and 17th centuries, contains copies of—

Instructions for Sir Wm. Bowes, and letters to him regarding Border causes to be imparted to the Bishop of Durham; and Memorial for him when sent into Scotland in 1589; and Memorial for him when appointed Treasurer of Berwick, 1598.

Instructions for Lord Eure, Warden of the Middle Marshes, 1595.

Instructions from Lord Eure, for the government of the Borders against Scotland, delivered to Her Majesty, 1596.

Instructions for George Cary, of Cokington, co. Devon, Knight, to go to Ireland with the Earl of Essex as Treasurer at War, 1598.

Instructions for Sir Thomas Shirley appointed Treasurer of the Forces in the Low Countries, 1586.

Instructions to Lord Sheffield as Governor of Brill, 1598.

Answer to be delivered by Bowes, Her Majesty's Ambassador in Scotland, to Colonel Steward. (About Denmark and Scotland having agreed to let the King of Spain know that they disapproved of the invasion of 1588.)

Instructions for Mr. Bodley, as Councillor of State in the United Provinces.

Instructions for Sir John Norris and Sir J. Drake having the chief charge of the army to go to the coasts of Spain.

Duke of Buckingham's report of his negotiations in Spain. 11 pp.

The King's Speech, 19th Feb. 1623.

Other speeches of the King and the Speaker to the end of the reign of James I.

Some speeches by King Charles I.; and proceedings in the impeachments of the Earl of Bristol and the Duke of Buckingham.

In the same cover with the above is a petition to Charles I. by Sir Robert Heath, Attorney-General, for leave to subpœna Sir William Colton, Knight and Baronet, J. Selden, Esq., and Gilbert Burrell, gentleman, and for leave to signify the King's pleasure to John, Earl of Clare, Robert, Earl of Somerset, and Francis, Earl of Bedford, to appear to answer for copying and disseminating a tract which led people to suppose that the King was to reign unconstitutionally (a copy of which is given in 19 pages, beginning, "The proposition for your Majesty's service containeth "two parts").

A transcript of Leland's Commentaries (66*), slightly imperfect, will supply the passages left blank in Hearne's edition of the Itinerary.

Extents of the Lordship of Denbigh, county of Carnarvon and county of Merioneth, folio, paper, 17th century. (87.)

Extents of the Lordships of Bromfield and Yale, 8 Edw. II. to 7 Hen. VI. (103 and 222.)

There are many volumes of transcripts (by Robert Vaughan, of Hengwrt, in the 17th century) of historical matter, chiefly relating to Wales.

The volume 3 P. contains a copy from the original (believed to be at Mostyn) of a short account of the Rebellion in North and South Wales in Oliver Cromwell's time (47 pages). The chronological series ends at p. 21, 1642 to 1650 and 1651; and from 1645 is in Welsh. Then follow short notes of affairs from 1600 to 1636.

Ecclesiastical.

The life of St. Cadoc, a small folio, parchment, of the 14th century, 48 folios (227). The first part of the passion is wanting. And No. 157 is a copy by the hand of Robert Vaughan, of Hengwrt, in the 17th century; but in this the genealogy, &c. (8 leaves) have not been transcribed. This transcript was used by the Welsh Manuscript Society in printing their "Liber "Landavensis."

Nearly all these Charters are in inflated terms.

There is a roll of the 15th century, "de terris pri- " datis per Griffith ap Aron." Out of two Welsh words the law scribes of that day forged the word pridiare, and conjugated it as a verb. It signified to take or hold in pledge. Griffith pridavit, &c. de E. ap Aron for 4*l.* paid to E. by Griffith. The words of grant were "ad pridiam habendi," and it was usually for four years; if the mortgagor did not pay the debt in four years, the mortgagee was to hold for another four years; and so on.

In 17 Henry VII., at the Quarter Sessions for the County of Merioneth, a Welshman described as King's Advocate asks and obtains the justices' permission to purchase a messuage, &c. in Peniarth, to hold to him and his heirs and all free children of his body "nomine " kynnoys" of the chief lord, &c.

Drafts and one original of petitions and bills to the President of the Council of North Wales. (547.)

Rolls of account (several long skins of parchment in fine condition) of Sir Wm. Griffith, Kt., Chamberlain of North Wales, 12 Hen. VIII. The office was granted to him by Henry VII., in the 23rd year of his reign.

From a document at fo. 33 of the vol. 103 and 222, bound together, it seems that land in the Lordship of Bromfield and Yale was of gavelkind tenure, and in default of males went to females.

In No. 404 is an original award settling the boundaries between the Abbey of Vale Crucis and the sons of Yvaf, son of Mereduc, A.D. 1257.

English.

A tall narrow folio of the 15th century, vellum, (No. 226) contains The Mirror of Life in English verse by William of Nassington, translated from John Waldby's Speculum Vitæ; and

Speculum Ecclesiæ in English, translated from the French of Edmund Rich, Archbishop of Canterbury;

And other English verses on religious subjects, one begins:

"Whoso ken suffre and hald hym stille
I trow he schale fynde hit for the best."

Another begins:

"Ihu is god a curteys lord
And corteysly can schaw his myght."

The volume No. 92 contains a translation into English by Grostête of the treatise on Husbandrie (by Walter de Henley). Begins: "The fadre in his old age seithe unto his son."

Then followed (but it is torn out) "Plantynge and graffynge of almaner off trees & vynes."

A good book of St. Gregory of his moder, begins

"A noble story wretyn I find,
A pope it wrot to have in mynde."

6¾ pp.

A good book of kervynge and service unto a prince or eny other estat as ye shall find her after accordenge. 13 leaves.

This volume is of the 15th century. At the beginning are four leaves of an English treatise recommending war against France, of the end of the 15th or beginning of the 16th century. England is likened to a worthy lord of a commodious land who has wedded a worthy lady fair and pleasant and in great poverty, he takes counsel of the lords spiritual and temporal and his menyal meny (the Commons of Parliament). They advise him that the lady's pride must be abated. The watching of the French ports to be allotted to certain counties.

A fine copy in vellum, 15th century, of Chaucer's Canterbury Tales, No. 154. (This has been used by the Chaucer Society). Part of the 1st book, the 2nd book and part of the 3rd book of his translation of Boethius, 15th century. (328.)

The Mystery of Antichrist, small folio of the 15th century, not quite perfect. (229.)

Sir Kenelm Digby's Journal written by his own hand when he was Admiral of the Narrow Seas (11. P.) This has been printed for the Camden Society.

Sir Kenelm Digby's discourse concerning the vegetation of plants, folio (21 P.) This has a few corrections by Sir Kenelm's hand.

A 4to. volume of English Poems, written about 1650. These the late Mr. John Bruce decided, from internal evidence, to be the compositions of William Arundell, second son of Thomas 1st Lord Arundell of Wardour. (34 P.)

In a small 4to. volume, vellum, 15th century, is an old English treatise beginning, "This is the abbey of the holy goost that is founded in a place that is cleped the conciens. Mi dere bretheren und sustren, I see well that manye wolde ben in religione," ends (on fo. 8.) "ze shalle be delivered thurg the bisechinge of his dere modere seint Marie. Amen. Her begynneth a boke that speketh of a place that is cleped the abbey, &c. . . . The charter by God . . (legal form in English.) Ends (fo. 22), "he that for love of mans soule synful dyde on the rode tre. Amen." (In the British Museum Add. MSS. 15058 is the Abbey of the Holy Ghost in Welsh, ascribed to John Elcock, Bishop of Ely.)

The Cato Parvus and Cato Magnus translated into English, with an Envoy not printed in Caxton's edition, folio, vellum, 15th century. (38 P.) This volume contains also in Latin, The Wars of Alexander the Great, and the story of the Three Kings of Cologne.

A portion of the play of Holofernes in English, a MS. of the 16th century (508.) This I did not see.

Welsh.

There are several romances in Welsh poetry, viz. The Gest of Charlemagne and Roland, 14th century (No. 36). The Gest of Charlemagne, 15th century (No. 46). The Legend of the Saint Graal, 15th century (No. 49). The story of Geraint ap Erbin, 13th century (No. 59).

A dramatic Mystery in the Cornish language, small 4to., paper, 16th century. Begins "Hic incipit Ordinale "ac vita Sancti Mereadoci Episcopi et Confessoris." At the end "Finit per dominum Nad Ton. Anno Domini 1508." The volume is of 168 pages. (310.)

The volumes of poems by Welsh Bards of the 16th and 17th century are numerous.

No. 60 is a most valuable Dictionary (Latin and Welsh) by Thomas ap William, in 3 volumes 4to. of the 16th century. Mr. Wynne told me that Dr. Davies's Dictionary, of which this is the basis, is little more than an index to it.

The volumes of Welsh genealogies are numerous and valuable. I may mention that the printed History of the Gwydir family by Sir John Wynn, 4to. Ruthin, 1827, has been interlined and much illustrated by Mr. Wynne, whose memory is as accurate as his knowledge is copious. Vol. 48 of the Peniarth collection contains Mr. Wynne's collections for the History (ancient and modern) of Merionethshire.

There are several folio volumes of letters chiefly of the 17th century. In vol. 36 P. is a note of all such things as were bought for 30 soldiers at Salop, and Chester for the county of Merioneth. A Council letter in 1631, signed by T. Coventry and others, to the Commissioners touching knighthood for the county of Merioneth; and a letter by Colonel John Jones (the regicide), 1639. Also a very important original, signed J. Marr (the Earl of Marr) to Lewis Price of Gogerthan, dated from the Council board at Innspruck, April 7, 1717. "By permission of the King, who arrived incognito " on the 3rd, I am ordered to acquaint you and other " loyal men that (pursuant to the full result of our " retinue in Council assembled) the last push for a " happy restoration to old England is to commence at " or about 30th of Oct. next . . . the advice is to be " conveyed by a bark bound to England, who is to " consign his charge to a conscientious persecuted " clergyman, who is to dispense His Majesty's plea- " sure to all honest bonny lads in the principality of " Wales; . . . the expedition is to be regulated by " our march from Millford to the west nuder command " of Lord Ormond at the same juncture, as I have to " bear the like station in North Britain as in last " year;" he prays God for success. In the same volume are letters from Bishop Goodman and Drummond bishop of St. Asaph.

In the volume 72 P. are numerous letters from Mrs. Elizabth Presland, wife of Richard Presland, of Walford, Shropshire, to her sister, written in 1765–1771; these contain very interesting notices of places and persons, and the social state of the upper classes.

Out of the united Collections of Hengwrt and Peniarth (about 600 volumes) I selected and have given brief notices of such items as appeared desirable for the purposes of the Commission. For the contents of the remainder Mr. Wynne's catalogue must be consulted.

I must be permitted to express my thanks to Mr. Wynne for the continual assistance which he gave during my examination of his MSS., and the pleasure I experienced in having such a host as the owner of Peniarth.

ALFRED J. HORWOOD.

SPECIMEN CALENDAR OF THE PAPERS RELATING TO ARCHBISHOP LAUD'S VISITATION.

[1.] 1634.—"Articles for the Cathedral Church of "Canterbury to be enquired of in the Metropolitical "visitation of the most Reverend Father in God, William, "by God's providence, Archbishop of Canterbury, "Primate of all England, and Metropolitan in the year "of our Lord God 1634."

These Articles, signed by Land, consist of 15 interrogatories on the following subjects:—

1. The due taking of the oath by all members of the church on admission.
2. Other benefices held by members besides their offices in the church.
3. The observance of the Constitutions of 1604, relating to the residence of the Dean and Prebendaries on their prebends and their other benefices.
4. The number of the choir, and performance of daily service.
5. The manner of performing divine service.
6. The use of "seemly garments and attires, as, namely, "all graduates their surplice and hood for their "degree of school, and other inferiors their surplice "and cap."
7. The number of sermons and lectures.
8. The safe keeping of the muniments; the members of the foundation, their maintenance, and the mode of their election.
9. The instruction and education of the choristers.
10. The annual rendering of accounts by the treasurer, &c.
11. The state of the buildings.
12. Whether the preachers "in their sermons do use "to pray for the King's Majesty" and the Royal family, "and do give unto his Highness in their "prayer his whole style."
13. The personal character of the members and residents within the precincts.
14. Capitular meetings.
15. A general enquiry as to any offences or crimes contrary to the statutes.

[2.] 1634.—Additional articles for Canterbury Cathedral, five in number, signed by Sir Nathaniel Brent, Vicar-General:—

1. "Imprimis, what new buildings are within the "precincts of the church, what lay dwellers, what "inmates, and what inclosures?
2. "Item, whether the church and close be made a "common thoroughfare, and what postern doors "are made to private houses?
3. "Item, whether the offices of the church be sold or "granted in reversion, and whether the officers do "live in the town?
4. "Item, whether the free school be neglected or not?
5. "Item, whether prebends be denied their dividend in "corn the first year?"

[3.] 1634, April 24th.—"The answer of the Cathedral "Church of Canterbury to the Articles proposed in "the Visitation of William, Lord Archbishop of Canter-"bury;" signed by Dean Bargrave, Doctors Warner, Kingsley, Jackson, and Peake, and Prebendaries (?) Paske, Casanbon, and Blechynden. The document is so mutilated that several of the answers cannot be recovered. The notes are on the margin of the answers to which they refer, and are in the handwriting of William Dell, Secretary to Archbishop Land.

1. (Reply mutilated.) Note.—"The inferior officers "are to be sworn."
2. Full information as to the preferments held by the several members. [Partly mutilated.]
3. The Dean and three prebendaries have kept their full times of residence. Dr. Jackson has frequently preached at his benefice, but resides wholly on his prebend. Dr. Frewin has not resided "by "reason of his government of a college in Oxon, "the statutes whereof do allow him a short time "of absence." Mr. Blechynden resides on his prebend. ["The rest is illegible from mutilation]. Note.—"Let admonition be given them that they be "careful to keep as much residence upon their "benefices with cure as may be."
4. The choir though not according to "the foundation "of the church" is conceived to be full, and daily service is sung, "excepting the negligence of some "particular persons whom we do and shall daily "more and more endeavour to reform."
5. Divine service is duly performed "according to "the Book of Common Prayer, by singing and "notes according to the Statutes of this Church."
6. [Answer mutilated.] Note.—"Let it be enjoined."
7. [Partly mutilated.] There is one sermon every Sunday, and two on the three principal feasts, besides "extraordinaries," as H.M. inauguration, the rogations, the sessions, and the fifth of November; a lecture (not required by the statutes) is performed by Dr. Jackson, who receives 20*l.* a year for his pains.
8. Some muniments are kept according to statute, some according to custom. The members of the foundation agree with the statutes, to which reference is made, and they are maintained out of the revenues. The mode of election being a subject of dispute with "the incorporation," is submitted to the decision of the Archbishop.
9. The choristers are "well ordered," and are instructed by the usher of the free school.
10. Accounts are rendered yearly.
11. The cathedral is in good repair, "except Arundel "steeple." Particulars of buildings out of repair:—
    The churchyard is "profaned by 4 fairs yearly "there kept time out of mind, by sinks, by "annoyance of a stable, and other buildings." Notes.—"I shall look that the steeple and houses be "repaired." "Let me have inquiry and satisfac-"tion concerning the fairs, sinks, and stable, &c."
12. Preachers pray for the King and Royal family, but sometimes omit "to praise God for all those who "are departed out of this life in the faith of Christ." Note.—"Let the canon be observed."
13. No such "criminous persons" are known except one Wootton, an almsman, who has been often reproved for "intemperance in drink." For recusants of other sort reference must be made to the sacrist. Notes.—"Let Wootton be called to an accompt." "Let the sacrist be commanded to "give in a note, &c.
14. Capitular meetings are duly held.
15. Answered separately (vide infra.)

Then follows "our most humble answer to the articles "additional."

1. Particulars of new buildings within the precincts, of houses inhabited by laymen, and of enclosures there. Notes.—Let a full consideration be had of "this answer and a proposal of such remedies as "shall be fitting for the several particulars." "Inquire by what legal power these inclosures "were made.
2. The close is a thoroughfare, not the church. There are divers posterns to private houses "besides "large windows in the houses of some townsmen, "by which they may easily come into the "church." Note.—"Let an exact accompt be "taken of this answer, especially of the win-"dows."
3. Offices have been sold by way of resignation; none granted in reversion, unless patents for lives conjunctim et divisim be considered such. Officers live in the town, except four or five who have deputies. Note.—"I like not the sale of offices "under the colour of resignation, &c. No more to "be admitted."
4. Free school has been much neglected, but amended of late. Note.—"I hear somewhat amiss of the "schoolmaster. Let it be amended."
5. "As for the dividend of corn it is managed accord-"ing to the ancient custom of the church to "which Dr. Peake is now willing to submit, and "all of us humbly entreat your grace to confirm "the same for the clearing of future differences."

[4.] 1634.—"A more special answer to the 15th "article."

It acknowledges various practices which they conceive to be against the statutes, viz.:—

1. The want of 200*l.* in the treasury.
2. A charge of 5*l.* per annum in regard of 150*l.* given by Dr. Nevile, which cannot be traced.
3. Wages not always paid quarterly.
4. Want of punctuality in distributing the almsmoney.
5. "That some double rents and entertainments "reserved upon leases have in former times been "sold away."
6. Absence of the principal officers from the church, and non-residence of some of the prebendaries.

The Rev. the President of Ampleforth will have no objection to permit access to the Manuscripts described above under such conditions as he may consider satisfactory.

JOS. STEVENSON.

CLARE COLLEGE, CAMBRIDGE.

The various documents are described in the order in which they were shown to me by Mr. Ewbank, Deputy Bursar of the College.—

A Minute-Book, or Register, in quarto form, of 43 leaves of paper, and one of parchment, some of the original leaves being now wanting; in old leather binding, and in a somewhat tattered condition: its entries are in Latin throughout. The earlier part is in a hand of the close of the reign of Edward III. or of that of Richard II.; but the writing soon commences to be of the time of Henry VI. The volume begins with a list of the books then forming the College Library; partly miscellaneous and partly under various heads. The latter are, Dialectics, Grammar, Geometry, Perspective, Astronomy, Arithmetic (Arsmetrica) and Music, Civil Law, and Canon Law. Under the head of Chronicles (Cronicæ) we find,—(translated from the Latin)—"Chronicles of the Britons, and Beda on "Illustrious Men. Also, the Chronicles of Freculfus, "beginning, on the second leaf—Verum homines "primi sæculi," and on the last leaf but one,—"Karoli "Magni." Also, the "Chronicles of the Abbey of Rie-"vaulx." The List of the "Books of Divine Offices" (pp. 9, 10), with the values annexed, is as follows, (tr.):—"First, a very beautiful Portifory, once be-"longing to Elizabeth de B[urgh], Lady Clare, in value, 5*l*. A Missal of the same shape and writing, "5*l*. A most sumptuous Psalter, which belonged to the "same lady, 10*l*. One Antiphomar, with no musical nota-"tion, and without the Legend, 10*s*. A very beautiful "Legend, 5*l*. A book of Peculiar Masses, 12*d*. A Porti-"fory, full, but without notation.—Another Portifory, "20*s*. Another, with notation, but without the Legend, "6*s*. 8*d*. An Antiphonar, with notation, and with a "Gradal therein, formerly belonging to the Chapel of "Lady Elizabeth de Burgh, 5*l*. Another, like it in "every way, 5*l*. A cawchere (registry-book) without "notation, on the right hand, in the South side of the "Chapel, 5 marks. Another, on the left hand, in the "North side of the Chapel, 5*l*. A Missal for the high "altar, which formerly belonged to Lady Elizabeth "de B[urgh], 5 marks. Another, of smaller size, 50*s*. "Another, but newer, 4*l*. Another, of very great "beauty, 5*l*., kept in the chest. A Portifory, without "notation, the gift of Walter, clerk to the Master, 40*s*. "Another Portifory, of the Holy Ordinal, 10*s*. An "Epistolary, 2*s*. An ancient Gradal, 2*s*. Another, for "the Mass of the Blessed Virgin, 12*d*. A book of "Placebo and Dirige, on the North side of the Chapel, "with a Legend of Saint Etheldreda, 2*s*. A small "Psalter in the Chapel, 2*s*. An Ordinal, 10*s*." It has been, to some extent, an impression that the scholars of this College attended divine service in the South aisle of St. Edward's Church, from the time of its foundation until 1535, when the old Chapel (taken down in 1763) was built. The Chapel above mentioned was possibly one attached to the Church of St. Edward, and set apart for the exclusive use of the scholars of this College; but if, on the other hand, which seems most probable, a Chapel annexed to the original buildings of the College is here alluded to, this is apparently the only notice of the existence of such a Chapel that has come down to us.

The "Ornamenta Capellæ," or Ornaments of the Chapel, are entered on a leaf of parchment, forming pages 11 and 12, the date being apparently the close of the 14th century. The various articles are costly and sumptuous, and of a remarkably diversified character, the value of each being annexed. The following is the list, in a translated form:—"First, one principal set of "vestments of red, with figures thereon, for priest, "deacon, and subdeacon, with 3 copes of the same work, "very curiously made, value 60*l*. One frontal, with "heads of the Apostles and arms, curiously made, 3*l*. "One corporal, in a curious case, containing figures of "the Nativity of Christ and his Epiphany, 40*s*. One silver "necklace (monile) for fastening the cope; and it has "the arms of the Foundress in four parts, 3*l*. Two silver "necklaces, one made with the arms of Lady Elizabeth "in the middle, 3*l*. One necklace, in the middle of "which is the letter I, with a coronet of perle, 3*l*. One "necklace, having a bote of silver in the middle, 6*s*. 8*d*. "Three necklaces for women, of like pattern, in one of "which is a lion, in another a man, in the third, a rose, "10*s*. One necklace, in which is the letter M. with a "coronet, 12*d*. Five cloths for the altars, of cloth of "Reyns [Rennes in Britanny, linen cloth being probably "meant], 30*s*. One frontal, with the head of the "Saviour in the middle, and with heads of the Apostles, "and branches, 40*s*. A set of vestments of chekyre "(checker), for priest, deacon, and subdeacon, with a "cope; and a table, with a counter-table, and a cover "for the pulpit (ambonis), of like work, 40*l*. Two cur-"tains of checker, of other work, 40*s*. One cushion of "great value, with three curious figures, 40*s*. Six "other cushions, of different make, and alike in shape, "20*s*. One pokete [or small bag] of green silk, 6*s*. 8*d*. "Eight figures and ten coronets, for vestments to be "made, 20*s*. A set of vestments of white silk striped, "for priest, deacon, and subdeacon, with the counter-"table, and cover for the pulpit, and of one colour, but "without a cope, as also, two curtains, 20 marks. One "white frontal, with branches and flowers, 40*s*. Orna-"ments for the two lower altars in the Chapel, of white "silk, with curtains, 4*l*. One corporal in a cover of white "silk rayed, 10*s*. A set of vestments of blue silk, with "most minute beasts thereon, and flowers and branches "interwoven, for priest, deacon, and subdeacon, and a "frontal and table of blue rayed, with a cover for

In p. 15 reference is made to a deed of conveyance by the Chancellor and University of two houses in Mylne- street, in the Parish of St. John, for the first foundation of the College, in the last year of Edward II. (a.n. 1326). In a conveyance of the first year of Edward III. there named, mention is made of Robert de Spalding, one of the first Fellows of the College; to which a note is added, to the effect that afterwards, in the time of Master Ralph Kerdyngtone, "third Master of the College," Robert was deprived of his fellowship, by spiritual judgment as well as temporal, for having alienated the place formerly known as "Spaldyng Hostel," and then called "Borden- " hostele." Ralph Kerdyngton, it deserves remark, has been hitherto looked upon as being the second Master of the College. Mention is made also of Schools in "School Lane," as being given to the College in the time of Edward III.; and two Schools in "Gloverney " Lane" (or Gloucester Lane), opposite the Gloucester School (Scliola Glovernie), are named in the second year of that reign.

In p. 17 [a loose leaf, but in the same hand as the pre- ceding one), a list is entered of Benefactors of the College, mostly in respect of their gifts of books. Among them is named Master Michael de Haynton, "Chancellor " of the University, and formerly Fellow of the College." Also, the legacies left by William Wymbylle, Master (in 1421), and the gifts made to the College by Master John Donewych, "Doctor Decretorum," Chancellor of the University, and Master of the College (in 1371). Several books are enumerated, and it then proceeds (tr.),—" He " also gave a cup with a gilt foot of curious work, and " the cup is a mazer cup. Also, the cup that is called " le welle" [the nut, i.e., cocoa-nut] with a foot and a gilt cover. Also, 12 silver spoons, " with a finger-napkin." Master John Chateryz, Master of the College [in the latter part of the 14th century],— " gave a piece of silver covered with arms at the " bottom, and it has a cover with an eagle within." Master John Wace—" gave one fedyrbede (feather-bed) " with a long cushion, and two brass pots." Master William Radewynter "Master of the College [at the " beginning of the 15th century], made 13 marks to the " Master's purse, for paying his daily expenses, that so " the Masters who followed him might not be too much " molested in their multiplied going to and fro the " common chest."

From p. 19 we learn that William Wilflete, Master of the College [from 1436 to 1455, when he either resigned or was removed],—" gave to the building of the new " wall on the bank of the stream (rivii) as much lime " as was needed, 40*s.* in value. Also, he procured to- " wards the building of the Library out of the goods of " Robert Wright, his parishioner at Fulbourn, 4 marks. " Also, he procured from divers faithful in Christ, " towards the building of the new wall, sums in the " whole as set forth in the book of accounts of the same " building, begun in the second year of his administra- " tion." In p. 20, the College elections in the time of Wilflete are entered, beginning in 1448.

At p. 27 and in some following pages transcripts of several early deeds and conveyances are entered. From p. 32 we find that William Gull, who had resigned the Mastership 20 years before, was living in 1456. P. 32—"Be it remembered that in the year from our Lord's "Incarnation 1400, there was given to the College, to "the Master, that is, and the Fellows thereof, of the "goods of Henry Sombere, one set of hangings (aulura) "of tapestrewerk, in four pieces, for the hall of the same "College. In contemplation whereof, the Master and "Fellows ordained, with unanimous consent, solemnly to "celebrate his obsequies in their Chapel with song (cum "nota), and Mass on the morrow, that is, on the Eve of "the Annunciation of the Blessed Mary, as well as on "the Feast thereof, for the space of 10 years."

In p. 33 John Myllyngton is mentioned as succeeding Willsete (1455), when the College in every department is found to be almost hopelessly in debt; owing, among other sums, 50 marks to the late Master, which is afterwords named in p. 38, as being gradually paid off in sums of 40*s.* to 5*l.* Among other things, it would seem that the College had pledged one of its Missals:—"Also, "as to the chest in the vestry, in the same there is a "security of the College, that is to say, a Missal pledged "for 12 marks." Among other things (p. 39) the College owed "to Master John Hurt and to Master "Thomas Golselle, for commons at the time when the "office of Master was vacant, 22*s.* 10½*d.* The College "also owed to the solicitors (solicitatoribus) of W. "Bollers, for levying a fine with him, 10 marks. Also, "the College owed on the day above mentioned to "Reginald Redere [the reeder, or thatcher with reeds] "for reeds and bundles of twigs, and his labour upon "our tenement newly built in le Howe (the House), "17*s.* 7*d.* Also, the College owed to Robert Sklatier "[the Slater] for a thousand sklattes (slates) that were "stowed away in the College before the day aforesaid, "and afterwards used upon the granary, 12*s.* Also, the "College owed to John Disschere of Chestertone, for "carriage of clay, stone, reeds, straw, and thorn twigs, "for our tenement in le Howe, 33*s.* 4*d.* Also, the "College owed to Master Wynfflett, for his payment "for one quarter, 15*s.*" Especial attention deserves to be given to the above allusion to the employment of "solicitors" (solicitatores) in legal matters, nearly a century before the period at which the term has hitherto been generally understood to have been introduced.

In p. 35 the tenants of the hostel known as "Bourden-"hostelle" owe the College for rent in Easter Term 40*s.* Another tenant, "Master Makred, owes to the store-"chest, 6*s.* 8*d.* I have heard from my fellows that he "denies the debt, and is out of the kingdom." (P. 36.) "William Semere owes the College 40*s.* But he denies "the debt, and says that if due allowance is made to "him for the manure that he parted with, for ploughing, "and for wheat that he delivered to William Friday, he "owes nothing at all. He has paid 20*s.*, and by consent "of the Fellows has an acquittance." In p. 37 the Vicar of Heslyngfeld (Haslingfield), is named as owing 45*s.* for the rent of the Bourdenhostelle. Thomas Stoyll, Master of the College after Myllyngton (1466), gave many books to the College Library, and took precautions to have them chained there. After this, a portion of the volume is occupied with lists of the College property and rentals, and elections of Fellows and Scholars down to 1498, there being an inventory of the College Library at that period in pp. 46, 47. The volume ends with entries of about the 2nd year of Elizabeth, but the dates occur latterly with long intermissions between them. I would here add, that in my opinion this valuable and most interesting volume well deserves a new binding, and to be put in thorough repair.

"Register of Orders," or College Order-Book, a long paper folio in rough calf, the earliest entry being 21st of May 1713. This book has some curious entries, though comparatively modern. In p. 6 is the following entry:—"Feb. 14, 1714. Whereas on the 30th of January last "past a very great reproach was brought upon the "College by some persons meeting together in one of "the Scholars' Chamber to eat a calve's head, in con-"tempt of the solemnity of that day;—it is unanimously "resolv'd by us whose names are under-written, that "whoever shall be guilty of the like practice for the "future, of what rank or order soever he shall be, shall "be forthwith expell'd the College." Signed by seven of the then Fellows.

In p. 7.—"March 21, 1714. Whereas it has been a "laudable custom, pursuant and agreable to the "Statutes, to talk nothing but Latin within the hall "during the time of dinner and supper, except on "Sundays and holydays, and when any stranger is in "the hall, which custom has of late been neglected; it "is agreed upon by us that the said custom shall be "reviv'd and strictly observ'd for the future, under the "penalty of one shilling for every offence committed "against it at the Fellows' table, and that the Scholars "shall be punished as they formerly were. But if, not-"withstanding this penalty, any one shall persist in "offending against this order, they shall be further pro-"ceeded against as the Society shall appoint; and that "this punishment extend to those who rise before grace "at the several tables without the leave of the President "of the Fellows' table. It was also at the same time "resolv'd, that no person belonging to the College shall "be allow'd to keep any dog within the College; and "that the porter and other College servants shall be "commanded to shoot or destroy any that haunt the "College, or are brought into it contrary to this order. "And if any person shall oppose a servant in the execu-"tion of this order, or abuse him for it, they shall be "forthwith rusticated, or further punished as the crime "shall deserve."

P. 13.—"February 3, 1715, 6. Whereas Robert "Swynborne, Scholar of this College, did on the 30th "day of January last bring, unrequired, to the Dean a "copy of verses in which he dishonour'd and ridicul'd "the memory of King Charles the First; it is order'd "that the said Robert Swynborne shall make a publick "recantation of his fault before his whole College, and "subscribe the same; which recantation shall be look'd "upon as a public admonition for it." Signed by H. Vincent, Ed. Clarke, R. Laughton, C. Morgan, Robert Greene, F. Bernard, and A. Ellys, Fellows.

P. 35.—"June 6, 1718. Whereas it appears by good "and sufficient evidence, that John Adams, a Sizar of "this College, did on the 3rd day of this month, about "the hours of 1 or 2 in the morning, forcibly enter into "Dr. Laughton's chamber, by breaking open the door "thereof; and whereas since the commission of the "fact, he is fled from the College without making any "defence for himself;—it is agreed by us whose names "are under-written, Fellows of the said College, that "the said John Adams be for the aforesaid heinous "crime forthwith expelled for ever from the College." Dr. Laughton was the Tutor of the College, and a man of considerable note in the University.

P. 42.—"December 16, 1718. It was agreed by the "Master and Fellows that whereas it has been a practice "amongst several of the Scholars of the College to climb "over the gates of it, and to go round by the pillars of "the field gate, if any scholar shall presume to go out "of, or come into, the College that way, or over the "arches of the College, or any other way than through "the gates which are open, or, if shut, through them "when opened by the porter, he shall be immediately "expelled." At about this date, several orders were also promulgated against breaking the windows of the College.

P. 43.—"August 25, 1719. Whereas several of the "Scholars of the College have committed great dis-"orders of late, in affronting and insulting Dr. Vincent, "by giving him opprobrious language and knocking at "his door, and other instances of rudeness towards him, "to the great disturbance and scandal of the College; "it is agreed by us, that if any Scholar of the Col-"lege, of what rank or order soever he be, shall be "guilty of such rudeness towards Dr. Vincent, or any "other of the Fellows of the College for the future, he "shall for the first offence be banished from the College "for the space of a year, and for the second be for ever "expelled from it." Dr. Vincent, the Fellow so in-sulted, was probably at this date a man of very advanced years.

Page 22.—"December 6, 1716. Whereas John Bland, "William Fairclough, and Richard Greene, Scholars of "this College, have, by confessions taken from them, "acknowledged that some time ago, the precise time "not being well remembered, they were in a certain "company at a chamber in Christ's College, where the "devil's health was proposed by a Scholar of that "College, and was drank by a servant of it, being "thereto forced by the violence and menaces of the "said Scholar; and whereas the said John Bland, Wil-"liam Fairclough and Richard Greene, did continue in "the said company after such health proposed and "drank, the first not leaving it till about 4 o'clock in "the morning, and the two last lying in the said College. "And whereas the said John Bland, William Fair-"clough, Richard Greene, together with Edward Burch, "a Scholar likewise of this College, did after, on the "20th day of October, the day of his Majesty's Coro-"nation, about 11 at night, go out of the College by "going round the pillars of the field gate, the last "without his gown, and all of them contrary to the "strict rules and discipline of the College, and from " thence went to a tavern in the town, and there one " or two of them would have forced a servant, who " attended, to drink to the pious memory of Oliver " Cromwell; and were afterwards, one or more of them, " (they being then together), found behaving them- " selves in a riotous and tumultuous manner upon the " Market Hill, among a crowd of people, at least in " number twenty, and threatening the watch, upon " which a quarrel had like to have ensued.—Therefore, " for the entire suppression of such impious and dis- " orderly practices, and that the other scholars of the " said College may take warning from their example, " it was agreed by the Master and Fellows whose names " are under written, that the said John Bland, William " Fairclough, and Richard Greene, shall be banished or " removed from the College for the space of one whole " year; and that if in that time they are seen within " the gates or walls of it, or do not at the expiration " of the said term bring a testimonial of their good " behaviour from credible persons during their absence " from it, they shall be for ever expelled. And the said " John Bland, William Fairclough, and Richard Greene, " shall not, upon their return, be permitted to take " their degrees, till one year after those scholars who are " of the same standing with them . . . . . And further, " it was agreed that the said John Bland, William " Fairclough, Richard Greene, and Edward Burch, shall " be ordered, (and they are hereby ordered,) imme- " diately to leave the College, and that no scholar shall " speak to or take notice of them during the time of " their banishment, either in College or in town, or in " any other place, under the severest penalties; and " that they shall not be received again into this College " at the end of the said term of their banishment from " it, except upon their humble submission and recanta- " tion of their several offences. At the same time, it " was agreed, that if any scholar shall be guilty for the " future (notwithstanding the clemency of the Master " and Society to the said scholars, who desire their cor- " rection and amendment, and not their utter ruin) of " such or the like disorderly behaviour, it shall be " immediate expulsion to them." Signed by William Grigg, Master, and several Fellows. It is added below; —" Memorandum June 17, 1717. That Edward Burch " (who had been banished for half a year) was restored " to the College on his producing a certificate of his " good behaviour during his absence, and upon his " submission and recantation."

A thick folio paper volume, of about 700 pages, bound in limp parchment, with the following title:—" Clare " Hall. An old Register booke conteyning some Terrars " and other matters of concernment." a book containing a vast number of deeds in which the College has been more or less interested, the entries being in hands of the latter half of the 16th, and first half of the 17th, century.

A thin folio paper volume, which may be called a " Commons' Book," beginning about 1628. In the first page occurs the name of (Abraham) Wheelock, who afterwards distinguished himself as a Saxon Scholar. In the latter part of the volume are the Butler's accounts, and it closes in 1657. Some of the entries are curious, in reference to the habits and usages of the day. It may be here added, that this College possesses no early Bursars', or Treasurers', Computi whatever; it suffered from two great conflagrations some centuries ago, and then in all probability most of its earliest documents were destroyed.

A paper folio volume of about 300 pages, bound in old calf, one-third being left in blank; containing building accounts in reference to the "new buildings" at Clare Hall. The latest entry is s. a. 1716. In folio 96 mention is made, under date August 22, 1662, of the fact that this College paid 40*l.* to King's College for a piece of its ground; of which sum ten pounds were to be given to Francis Crosby and John Cowin, the two grooms of King's, by reason of their being prejudiced " by the fact of the College having taken part of the " Butt Close" of King's College. The entry is made by Barnabas Oley, Fellow and Tutor of the College, and afterwards Vicar of Gransden and Archdeacon of Huntingdon. These accounts are very minute, and contain many items of interest. The plot of ground, it may be added, which was formerly part of the Butt Close, or Archery ground, of King's College, is now the Fellows' Garden, on the east side of Clare bridge.

In the Library of this College is preserved a thick modern folio volume of blank leaves, upon which numerous letters are pasted, or else inserted between the leaves. Among those which deserve notice are the following:—

A Letter from Dr. Laud, Bishop of London to "Mr. " Doctor Paske, Archdeacon of London," and then Master of the College, January 5, 1629.

A Letter from Robert Saunderson (afterwards Bishop of Lincoln) (only signed R.S.) to "Mr. Th. Br. at Som.," dated 10th April 1646. It begins,—" Sir, I thanke you for " your loane of youre booke, which I now send you back " by the messenger that brought it. The author is not " the same man I thought of, but another of the same " name, and a strong Presbyterian, who, as he hath " sufficiently discovered the absurdity of some of the " Independents opinions, considered apart and by them- " selves, so I cannot but admire (but that I see by every " day's experience how greatly, out of affection to theyr " preconceyved fancies, men, otherwise understanding " enough, are blinded with prejudice,) how the author " could chuse but see that most of the assertions both of " Brownists and Independents," etc. It goes on to the extent of fully 2 pages of foolscap, closely written. It ends,—" In this religion I have lived hitherto (by the " grace of God) not without comfort; and in this " religion (the same grace assisting me) I hope to dye. " And so living and dying, if my walking swerve not " from my profession, I know that (by his mercy) I " shall not miscarry. Your neighbour and brother in " Christ, R.S."

Letter of Margaret, Duchess of Newcastle, to the Vice-Chancellor of the University, Cambridge, "from " Antwerpe," presenting—" my poems, my olia, and my " philosophicall and phisicall opinions . . . . if " there be any room for such rubbish as my works in " their Library . . . to the University." The letter is written in a neat and excellent hand, and is without date. She was second wife of William Cavendish, Duke of Newcastle. Her works were more voluminous than valuable.

A memorandum of the fact that Barnabas Oley, late Fellow of Clare Hall, gave 100*l.* to the Fellows of King's College, which he desires may be laid out,—" either for " re-edifying with good stone that west part of the said " College which is only yet built with timber, or for " increase of the public Library of the said College, or " for accommodation of the gardens of the senior and " junior Fellows of the said College, or for accommo- " dating and bettering that part of Butt Close yet " remaining to the junior Fellows and Scholars of " King's College, aforesaid, whose convenience for re- " creation was diminished to the letting of the part " which is leased to Clare Hall . . . The other 10*l.* " Barnabas Oley doth desire may be given to King's " College grooms, or the children of such grooms as " suffered most loss by the grant of Butt Close being " taken from them, and parted with to Clare Hall."

Letter from Charles Cæsar, of Great Gransden, dated February 27, 1685, 6, to Dr. Blythe, Master of Clare Hall, giving an account of the death of Barnabas Oley, before-mentioned, formerly a most active and beneficent member of the College, who died on the Saturday before at 4 in the afternoon, and was buried in the chancel of Gransden on the next Monday, at 10 at night:—" a " most charitable man, so he died, leaving his whole " estate, reall as well as personall, to charitable uses; " and the choicest of those good and laudable guifts is " to augment poor vicarages." The writer goes on to express a hope that Clare may provide—"a vicar that " will love a retired, studious, and melancholy life at " Gransden better than the vanity and pleasant company " of Cambridge." The Letter ends,—" We do all hope " that you will send us one [a clergyman] to-morrow, " and I desire the favour of him to dine at my house, " that we may be better acquainted. And I shall be " heartily glad that he may be truly called the worthy " successor of Barnabas Oley, who hath left his parish " in very good order; and but one will ever vouch that " forbeares coming to church, who follows Holcroft " Bonion, all the rest very conformable." The question suggests itself, whether Holcroft Bonion (or, probably, Bunyan), was not a kinsman of the author of the " Pilgrim's Progress."

A letter of very considerable length, from John Tillotson, Fellow of Clare Hall, to Dr. Theophilus Dillingham, Master of the College, giving an account of an interview with "his Highness," the Protector, Oliver Cromwell, on matters relative to the interests of the College, dated December 22, 1656. For some time he "could not " speake with his Highness, he being then in a course of " physick."

A letter written by Tillotson to Dr. Dillingham, giving a short account of Cromwell's death, on "the famous " 3rd of the 7th (September)," with notices of College affairs; dated 5th September 1658.

A letter from Tillotson to Dr. Dillingham, dated 24th June 1659, stating, among other things,—"The news "here is, that tithes are like to bee taken away; 'tis "certain that Sir H. Vane will use all his wittes to do "it. There is no good agreement in the house. There "is a great party against Sir H. Vane; my Lord Fleet-"wood begins to see that they intend to undermine "him, which breeds ill blood amongst them. There is "no Act at Oxford. Sir, I understand that my chamber "is dispos'd of to Sir Vincent; I know not how the case "stands as to my fellowship, otherwise I should think "the chamber were mine. If it be not too late, I should "desire that when the College think fitt I should quit "my fellowship or chamber, I may have notice of it, "so that I may fairly leave them on hand no tempta-"tion to draw me away from studying (according to my "meanes) the happiness of a place I love so well." The "Vincent" mentioned in this letter as being then a Sir" ("Dominus," the title of a Bachelor of Arts) was most probably the same person who has been previously named as being an aged Fellow of the College more than fifty years after this date.

A letter from Dr. Tillotson, then Dean of Canterbury, to Dr. "Blithe," Master of the College, asking his support of Sir William Temple, "not only a friend to learning, "but a learned man himself," as Burgess for the University.—"The King is concerned for him, and I "believe my Lord of Canterbury will heartily engage "in his behalf."

A letter from Dr. Tillotson, dated January 27, 1680, to Dr. Blythe, recommending Sir Robert Sawyer, formerly Fellow of Magdalen College, as Burgess for the University.

There are several other letters of recommendation from Dr. Tillotson, in the volume: one addressed to Dr. Blythe, from London, in behalf of—"a son of a friend of "mine, Mr. Kirshaw, in Yorkeshire, and a man of very "good estate. His father hath thought fit to remove "him from Brazennose College in Oxford, for no other "reason but because he is not there, by reason of the "Statutes, capable of preferment, there being, I think, "but one Yorkeshire Fellowship, which is full . . . . "If you take pupills yourselfe, I desire he may be "under your care; if not, that you would be pleased to "commend a tutour for him."

Copy of a letter from Dr. Tillotson, Dean of Canterbury, to Lady Rachel Russell, dated November 21, 1685, of very considerable length. It begins,—"Honoured "Madam. When I look upon the date of your Lady-"ship's letter, I blush to see it hath layen by me so long "unanswered. And yet I assure you no day passeth in "which your Ladyship and your deare children are not "in my mind." He congratulates her upon the preservation of her children from some great and recent danger. Dr. Tillotson, it will be remembered, attended her husband, the celebrated Lord William Russell, upon the scaffold.

A letter from Dr. Tillotson, when Archbishop of Canterbury, to Dr. Blythe, dated from Lambeth House, November 2, 1692, asking him to make interest that Dr. Grindon be not appointed Vice-Chancellor, seeing how "greatly inconvenient it must needs be to him in "regard of the relation he hath to me and my affaires." Signed "Jo. Cant."

A letter from Dr. Tillotson, Archbishop of Canterbury, dated May 15, 1694, recommending a son of Major Cason, a gentleman of Kent, as a pensioner, to be "under "my nephew's tutor."

A petition from the Fellows of the College to the Master (Dr. Theophilus Dillingham) date about 1657:—"Dignissime Praefecte, Sociisque observandi [sic, for "observande"]. Sæpe multumque ægre tulimus "panes (frumenti pretio jam extenuato et diminuto) "usque adeo parvos, cervisiam tenuem admodum, nec "satis coctam, carnem insipidam, subrancidam, a coque "male tractatam, et id genus alia quamplurima. Ex-"pectavimus indies mutationem in melius, frustra "vero; jam tandem, expectando defessi, humillime "oramus, faciatis ut pistor, cervisarius, lanio, et hujus-"modi homnnciones, non tantum in diem unum vel "alterum (ut nonnunquam fit) sed et in perpetuum "desinant nobis imponere; sic melius famæ vestræ, et "commodo etiam tam vestro (uti nos credimus, alii "aliud sentiunt,) quam nostro consuletis." Signed by fourteen Fellows, Ro. Place, Sa. Blyth, and S. Lowth, being the first three. Tr.—"Most worthy Master, and "by your Fellows to be respected. Full often and most "hardly have we borne that the loaves (now that the "price of wheat has so sunk and fallen) are so very "little, the beer is so extremely small, and not suffi-"ciently brewed, the flesh-meat tasteless, tainted, badly "treated by the cook, and very many other things of a "like nature. We have been expecting daily a change "for the better, but in vain; now at length, quite "wearied with expectation, we do most humbly pray, "that you will make the baker, the brewer, the butcher, "and such-like small people, cease to impose upon us, "not for a day or two only (as sometimes they do) but at "once and for ever; and so you will best consult your "own good report, and (as we believe, though others "think otherwise,) as well your own advantage as ours."

A letter from the Duke of Albemarle (Christopher Monk) Chancellor of the University of Cambridge, to Dr. Blythe, on the latter being chosen Vice-Chancellor, dated November 14, 1684.

A letter from John (Pearson), Bishop of Chester, to Peter (Gunning), Bishop of Ely, dated May 31st, 1680, begging him to make interest at Clare Hall for his nephew, John Boteler, standing candidate for a Fellowship there; and a letter from the Bishop of Ely to Dr. Blythe, the Master, thereon. Also, a letter from Seth Ward, Bishop of Salisbury, dated June 5, 1680, to Dr. Blythe, on the same matter. A copy of Blythe's answer to the Bishop of Salisbury is added, in which he says, that had he himself been a brother of this Boteler, such was his character, he would have been ashamed to appear for him.

A letter from Peter, Bishop of Ely, dated July 21, 1681, to Dr. Blythe, beginning,—"Good Master. I have "this day received a letter from a very good gentle-"woman, a friend and acquaintance of mine (of these "many years) in behalf of her son, a young gentleman, "one Mr. Atkinson, who stands a candidate of your "favour and of the Colleges for a fellowship."

A letter from Peter, Bishop of Ely, dated "Feb. Festo "S. Matthiæ, 1682," to Dr. Blythe, beginning,—"Master. I am told of a grandchild of Dr. Pask's [a "former Master], my old patron and friend, who chose "me Fellow of your College when I was very young, "and whereupon I abode many years with good con-"tent till the wars began," and asking the Master "to "assist such person in his competition," he being now a candidate for a Fellowship.

A letter from Humphrey (Henchman) Bishop of London, to Dr. Dillingham, Master of the College, dated March 18, 1674, beginning,—"Good Doctor. I "understand that my poor kinsman, John Henchman, "sonn of Dr. Henchman, late of Hadham, takes the "degree of Bachelor in Arts now at this time, and so is "capable of a Fellowship; and if one of the places of "Mr. Freeman become voyd, I doubt not of your and "the Fellows readiness to give him preference . . . . "for except the descendants of the body of the Lady "Gorges, grandchild and heir to the founder, there is "none nearer in blood then I and my brothers and "sister, and our issue: I assert this, because I am in-"formed that one of the Society takes upon him to be "so skilled in pedigree as to say that Freeman, now in "the Colledge, is nearer."

A letter from Dr. John Moore, afterwards Bishop of Norwich, to Dr. Blythe, dated April 18, 1679, in reference to the solemnization of his marriage.—"Sir. I have in-"tentions to be at Barnwell on Monday night, and next "day to consummate my love affair, which has bin so "long depending. I have a great desire to be married "by you; and shall (if you be under no obligations at "that time) own it as a singular favour if you will "please on Tuesday morning to walke over thither "privately, and performe that act of kindness. I am, "Sir, your very faithful servant, J. Moore." Dr. Moore had been a Fellow of this College.

A letter from John Moore, Bishop of Norwich, dated November 18, 1697, to Dr. Blythe, in favour of Mr. Laughton, candidate for a Fellowship. He afterwards became Tutor of this College, and a Dignitary of the Church.

A Letter, dated August 27, 1661, from Dr. Heaver to Dr. James Jackson, Fellow of the College, stating that he is "this day without any warning sent to Portugall "with Sir Richard Fanshaw," and asks for leave of absence from the Society. He has committed the case depending between the College and Mr. Wilson to Mr. Dolben, of the Temple,—"who will be very diligent in "it, and is a reall friend to the Universities."

A Letter, dated May Day 1679, from Edward Brown to Dr. Blythe, congratulating him on his election to the Mastership. It begins,—"From my Lord's house at "Pera of Constantinople. Reverend and Honoured "Sir. Whilst the gallants are frisquing and making "merry in Hyde Park, I make myself gravely merry, "and do most heartily rejoice in the news I hear of "your being settled in the government of our College."

A Letter from Robert Lover (apparently, but somewhat indistinct) to Mr. Samuel Blythe, Fellow of the College, descriptive of the ravages of the plague in Cambridge.—"Clare Hall, 19 October, 1665. . . . . " . . . I have enquired and understand that the number " of those that have dyed are not given in till Thursday " night, and the bills come forth on Friday in the " evening . . . . . Alderman Mynell, the brewer, and " one of his children dyed of the plague this last " Monday; he hath had four children in all dead of it. " Clayton, the barber in Petty Cury, and one of his " children, dyed last Saturday of the sickness. It is " newly broken out sadly by Christ's (though they are " all fled from the Colledge, upon Mr. Buuchly, their " manciple, dying of the plague), where Nicholson the " smith, his wife, and two children, are dead within " three dayes, his other children being deadly sick in " the house. But it most rageth in St. Clement's Parish, " where seldome a day passeth without one dead of the " sickness. . . . . Poor Mr. Brown, the old man that is " one of the University musitians, and Mr. Saunders, " that sings the deep base, are shut up in Mr. Saunders's " house in Green Street, whose child dyed last week " suspected. Two houses in Barton are infected by two " of Alderman Mynell's children, that are dead there. " Ditton is broke out just by the butcher, from whom " we had our meat, which made us hastily remove to " Grandchester. H. Glenton, the carryer, fled from " this town to Shelford, where he dyed within two or " three days suspected. Thus is this town unhappy, " not only in itself, but in its neighbours. Royston is " sadly infected in two or three places, the last of which " is just in the middle of the town. The infection, they " say, was brought thither by a Cambridge man, whom " they caught, and shut him up; but he hath since " made his escape. . . . . Sir, since the writing of " this, the Master sent for me to desire you to bring " not a schollar with you, for there is Colledge nor " town, he saith, will admit any, and he is very resolute " not to let one come into the College yet, and the keyes " are not trusted with the porter, now wee are all lockt " in the College. The Master desires me to tell you " that he hath great suit from divers to return; but he " would not suffer one to come in, and is resolved they " shall not have the place that any others are yet in. " Hee saith wee have more schollars already in the " College then all Trinity and St. John's, and that he " conld wish these out. For yourself, he bids me tell " you you shall be very welcome, but desires you not to " think of bringing any with you. . . . There hath been " a fire in Trinity College, near their Library, so that " they were forced to fling the books out at the windows; " the damage is valued at about 100*l.*"

There are several letters from William Whiston, who was a Fellow of this College, two or three of them of great length.

Two Letters from Thomas Tenison, (afterwards Archbishop of Canterbury) to Dr. Blythe, in reference to a legacy to the College of 333*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.*

A Letter from Samuel Herne, Fellow of the College, to Samuel Blythe, dated London July 18, 1665, descriptive of the plague there, and its breaking out at Hogsden, Tottenham High Cross, and Richmond.

A Letter from William Grigg, Master of the College, to Dr. Moore, Bishop of Ely. Being chosen Master of Clare Hall in 1713, while Fellow of Jesus College, he wishes to retain the emolnments of both offices, and writes, citing the case of—"Sir Nathaniel Lloyd, who still " keeps his Fellowship of All Souls' College, together " with the Mastership of Trinity Hall; Dr. Cowell was " Master of the same Hall and Fellow of King's Colle- " lege; one Legge, Fellow of Jesus and Master of " Caius [sc. in 1573] at the same time."

Injunction, signed by King James the First, and dated July 26th, 1623, to the effect that "certain persons of " factious disposition," shall not "goe about to impugne " and frustrate that your publike acte;" in allusion to the fact that the University had lately conferred a degree on "Doctor Lucie, a person of worth, and descended " from an ancient family of Barons in this kingdom." It has an endorsement,—"The King's Letter concerning " Dr. Lucie, who contended for the Mastership of Clare " Hall when Dr. Paske was chosen."

Letter of King Charles the Second, signed by Secretary William Morice, and dated July 25, 1664, ordering that William Hooke be admitted into the—"first pro- " bationer's place now void in that yonr Colledge; and " also, that he succeed into the first Fellowship of the " old foundation that shall be voyd, according to the " practice of your said College."

Letter of King Charles the Second to the University of Cambridge, dated Windsor, July 11, 1674.—"C. R. " Trusty and well-beloved, wee greet you well. Whereas " wee have thought fit to remove from our service and " personal attendance George, Duke of Buckingham, " whereof he is rendered uncapable of discharging any " longer the office hee had among you of Chancellor of " your University, either to our satisfaction or your " benefit. . . . Judging noe person better qualified for " the discharge of soe high a trust, and whose nomina- " tion thereto can be more agreable to us, wee further " hereby recommend to your choice that of our dearly " beloved son, James, Duke of Monmouth, as a mark " of our indulgent care of your prosperity and wellfare, " and soe wee bid you farewell." Signed "Arlington."

Another letter of the same King, signed at the head "Charles R." "Trusty and well-beloved, we greet you " well. Whereas our trusty and well-beloved servant " Henry Walthew, Clerk of our Livery, hath humbly " represented unto us that out of his paternal care for " the education of his son, Edmund Walthew, in a way " of scholarship, hee hath hitherto made hard shift, and " being by his great suffering in the late unhappy time " scarcely able to support him any longer in that way, " hath humbly besought us, in consideration of the long " and faithfull service performed by him to us and our " royall progenitors, to grant our royall letters unto you " for the election and admission of his said son into a " probation Fellowship in that your society, he being " now a Scholar of your house, and a Bacchelor of Arts." The letter then goes on to enjoin Walthew's election "without difficulty or delay." In the endorsement of its contents is added, probably by Dr. Dillingham,—"but it took not effect." Walthew, however, ultimately did become a Fellow of the College; as we find a letter in the volume, dated February 25, 1688, and signed "James R.," asking that Edmund Walthew, Fellow of Clare Hall, and Vicar of Ilsham, in the Diocese of Rochester, may "be allowed to hold on his Fellowship " four years longer than usual, because the houghams, " stables, and out-houses of his Vicaridge had been " lately burnt," and himself damnified to the extent of 250*l.*, a sum which he would otherwise be unable to defray. With it, is a letter written to the Master by Walthew;—"Honoured Sir. The lamentable occa- " sion of my procuring his Majesty's royall favour, I " hope, will beg my excuse of yourself and our worthy " society, upon whose kindness I do depend for my re- " construction, and for whose prosperity I shall ever " pray, as in reason and justice bound. I am, Sir, your " most humble Servant and Pupill, Edm. Walthew, " February 27, 1687, 8."

Order signed and issued by Robert, Earl of Essex.—"Theis are to will, require, and demand you and every " of you to forbeare (under any pretence or colour soever) " to prejudice or offer any damage to the University of " Cambridge, or to any the Schooles, Colledges, Halls, " Libraries, Chappels, or other places belonging to the " said University, by plnndering the same or any part " thereof in any kind whatsoever. Hereof faile not, as " you will answeare the contrarie at your perille. Given " under my hand and seall, this seaventh daie of March " 1642. Essex. To all Colonells, Leiyenant Colonells, " Captains, and all other officers and souldiers of the " armie under my command." It has been strongly asserted that the word "plnnder" was introduced into this country by Prince Rupert and his German retainers, but here we find the word in use somewhat before that date. This Order is beautifully written throughout.

A somewhat similar Order, signed and issued by Oliver Cromwell, at a later date.—"These are to charge and " require you, upon sight hereof, not to quarter any " officers or souldiers on any of the Colledges, Halls, or " other howses belonging to the Universitie of Cam- " bridge, nor to offer any injurie or violence to any of " the students or members of any of the Colledges or " howses of the said Universitie, as you shall answere " the contrary at your perill. Given under my hand " and seale the First of July 1652. O. Cromwell. To all " officers and souldiers under my command, and others " whom it may concerne."

A Letter from General Monk, with his signature, shortly before the Restoration, addressed.—"To his " honoured friende the Vice-Chancellor of the Univer- " sity of Cambridge; these." an office then held by Dr. Dillingham, Master of the College.—"I have re- " ceived your letter, and in it (that then which nothing " could bee more welcome to me) an ample testimony " of the good affections of your famous University. It " hath been alwaies a great part of my desire and " ambition to bee serviceable to those eminent founda- " tions which are the glory of our nation, and I can not

" but thinke it a happnes to have opportunity to doe it " in this way. And if my owne country should challenge " my service, in which case, by a double obligation both " of nature and promise I am engaged not to refuse " them, yet shall my acknowledgment of this favour " bee as great, and my zeale to serve them as strong, " and I hope any advantages and opportunities to " promote their concernement not the less; which I " begg the favour of you to acquaint them withall, and " remain your very humble servant, George Monk. " St. James's 10 April 1660."

Copy of an account of a riot at Oxford on the 11th of April 1683; where the townsmen in great multitudes shouted "A Monmouth, a Monmouth, no York," while the undergraduates of the University, at the Magpye alehouse (near Merton College, and where the riot began) drank the health of the Duke of York. Mr. Sparke, one of the Proctors, lodged one of the townsmen in gaol at the Castle, while a London gentleman, a stranger, kept the mob, who showered stones upon them, at a distance with his sword. This account has the signature of the other Proctor, Mr. Charlett (of Trinity College); and below is written, probably by Dr. Blythe, " The Proctor writes me, this is a copy of the account " of this riot which was presented to the King."

Several Letters of Christopher, Duke of Albemarle, to the University of Cambridge, in February and March 1685.

A Letter of Martin Folkes to the Master of Clare Hall, (Dr. Charles Morgan) dated January 6, 1727. Speaking of "Sir Isaac [Newton's] Book," he says,—" I " even hear your neighbour of the great Colledge, who " spoke very slightingly of the performance before it " appeared, begins not to talk so magisterially as he did " before; but W. W. [William Whiston] continues in " the same way, and declares he shall overturn it so " easily that he shall not be able to extend the whole " confutation to a sheet of paper, which is what he " always proposed, at the end of the Second Part of his " anthentick records, just ready to appear." Allusion is probably here made to Newton's "Chronology of " Ancient Kingdoms amended," an authorized edition of which did not appear till 1728, but it had been surreptitiously translated and published at Paris in 1725.

Copy of a Letter written originally in Arabic by the Ambassador from Morocco to Martin Folkes, of Hillington, Esquire, and sent with a translation, "by the " Interpreter to the Embassy."

A Letter, endorsed (probably by Dr. Morgan),—"Mr. " Folkes, December 3, 1728, concerning Mr. Bradly's " Discovery relating to Parallax of Fixt Stars. Mr. " Whiston still sure of the longitude. Some account " of the petrify'd City in Africa." This letter, written by Martin Folkes, is mostly devoted to an account given by the "Tripoly envoy," which Folkes characterizes as somewhat astonishing, the "old story" having been previously mentioned by Mr. Doyle, and in some other works. The same story is also named, he says, in "Baumgarten's Travels 220 years ago." Part of the paper originally sent by Folkes with his letter is copied, and from its marvellous details the following is an extract:—"One Nicholo, an Armenian Christian, told " SirClement (Cotterel) he had been three several " times upon the spot, that the town is two days' " journey south from Onguela, through the sandy de- " serts. That he saw there several streets, with houses " and shops. That he saw men, women, and children, " some in the streets, some in their shops and houses, " and in as great variety as alive, and following their " several occupations. They were, he said, all of a " hard stone, their habits also petrified, and those not " unlike what is worn by the Arabs at this day . . . . . " He said farther, that the last time he was there, he " took up the figure of a young child, which he bore " with him for several hours through the desart, when " some of his company, seeing or thinking he saw a " party of wild Arabs at a great distance, they were all " for making the best of their way, and he was forced " to fling down his luggage, to make the more diligence " after his master." Further on, it is added that Onguela is 17 days' march from Tripoli to the South East, the petrified town being two or three days' journey from Onguela. The account is given at great length, and is of considerable interest, however slight the foundation upon which so wonderful a story may have been built.

A Letter from Edward Montagu (no doubt the husband of Lady Mary Wortley Montagu) dated "1 May, 1733 " Dover Street," and probably addressed to Dr. Morgan, the Master of the College, sending him a paper by Sir Isaac Newton on Music, which he had received from M. De Moivre. He also writes in favour of a young Fellow-commoner of Clare, named "Ravaud."

A Letter, dated 16 July 1644, desiring the Master (Dr. Thomas Paske) and Fellows of the College—" to " give us information in writeinge of the names of all " such of your College as have practased bowinge " at the nameinge of the name 'Jesus,' adoration " towards the East, or any ceremony in divine service, " not warranted by lawe since they were forbidden by " both or eyther howses of Parliament. Gent. we are " your servantes, H. Mildmay, Nathaniell Bacon, Hum. " Wolcot, Edward Clenche, Robert Vinter."

Other notices also by the same Commissioners; one being—" By the Committee of the Association. To the " Master, Fellowes, and Manciple, of Clare Hall. You " are hereby ordered that, according to the order of " Parliament you celebrate Friday next in your society " as a day of thanksgiving, with exceedings at Dinner " and a Supper, provided that neyther consist of theire " ordinary fish commons in part; and to have a bonefire " in the evening. Nathaniell Bacon, Samuell Flumne, " Robert Vinter, Robert Clerke, June 26, 1645."

There are also numerous other documents, issued about the same period by the Committee for the Reformation of the University.

Also, documents bearing date July 1660, signed by Edward, Earl of Manchester, giving orders that Peter Gunning, Barnabas Oley, and Abraham Hewet, who had been ejected from their Fellowships in the time of the Commonwealth, shall now be restored thereto.

In concluding this Report, I beg to acknowledge, with thanks, my obligations to Dr. Atkinson, Master of the College and Vice-Chancellor of the University, for the readiness with which he granted me access to these documents. To the Reverend Arthur Holmes, Fellow and Lecturer of the College, my thanks are also due for his good offices in reference alike to the archives of this College and those of other Colleges in the University. To my friend Lucas Ewbank, Esquire, Senior Fellow and Deputy Bursar, I feel especially indebted for the abundant facilities which he so kindly afforded me for a comparatively prolonged examination of them.

HENRY THOMAS RILEY.

GONVILLE AND CAIUS COLLEGE, CAMBRIDGE.

The books and documents are described in the order in which they were shown to me, as taken from the College treasury, by Mr. Lamb, or found by me in their repository in Dr. Guest's study.—

History of the College of Gonville and Caius, written by Dr. Caius, the third Founder of the College; a small folio, with leaves of fine vellum, and in the old boards, with a loose leather cover. It contains 165 pages written upon, and about 60 left in blank, and is written in a neat and legible hand throughout. On p. 1 is the title, in the same small writing, as the rest of the work: —" Annalium Collegii de Goneville et Caius a Collegio " condito Libri duo, per Joannem Caium; unum funda- " torum, et Custodem ejusdem, anno Domini 1563." It commences with the Letter granted by Edward the Third, under the great seal, to Edmund de Goneville, Rector of Tyrington (now Terrington), in Norfolk, in the 22nd year of his reign, empowering him to take three messuages, situate in Lurghburulane Strete (probably the present Freeschool Laue) in Cambridge, and bounded by the Cemetery of St. Botolph's Church on the west; and to change the same into a College for twenty scholars: upon which foundation was established by him Goneville Hall, the name of which was afterwards altered by William Bateman, Bishop of Norwich, Gonville's executor, to "The College of the Annnciation of " the Blessed Virgin Mary:" who also removed the College from its original site (the locality probably now occupied by the Master's garden of Corpus Christi College), to its present locality, then known as "Henney;" it being the Bishop's wish to have it in the close neighbourhood of his own recent foundation of Trinity Hall. Edmund Goneville died in 1350, it is supposed. This History, by Dr. Caius, is continued down to 1586, he himself having died in 1573.

A vellum scroll, probably 30 feet or more in length, finely written, in modern Gothic, in rubric and black ink, and brilliantly illuminated throughout. It was written in 1447, but only comes down to 1429, and it is called "Rotula Wintoniensis,"—the "Winchester Roll," in Adamson's volume, hereafter described. The last two membranes forming the roll contain lists of the English Kings and their burial-places, so far as ascertained, beginning with Kynglius (Cynegils) and Kynwald, Kings of the West Saxons, coming down to the death of Henry the Fifth: followed by a list of "Gratiæ "expediendæ in Curia Romana;" the writing on the reverse being almost wholly in rubric. At the beginning is written,—"Collegio de Gonnevile et Caius dono dedit "Robertus Armiger, anno Domini 1568;" and then below, in Dr. Caius's handwriting,—"Hocce vere in "Epitome Chronicorum transtulisse videtur hoc scrip- "turn ad verbum, nisi quod contigit melius exemplar, "et ad suam ætatem accommodavit; qui floruit anno "Domini 1454, septem annis postquam scriptum hoc "est." The commencement in rubric is—"Anno "Domini millesimo ccce° quadragesimo septimo."—The text begins,—"Ab origine mundi concurrunt anni "secundum Hebræos potest citri ex dictis Rabi "Ysaac in numero quinquennali sex milleni sexcenti "quadraginta sex. Ab origine mundi iiccccl.xxx. annis "Brutus venit in hanc terram, quæ modo 'Anglia' "dicitur."

A folio volume, of nearly 900 pages, carefully written, and containing abstracts of all the deeds and evidences then belonging to the College, compiled by William Adamson, Fellow of the College, in the middle of the 17th century. It has the following title:—"Registrum "Magnum, seu Catalogus Evidentiarum Collegii de "Gonvil et Caius, exhibens Chartas et Indenturas "Benefactorum, cum eorum conditionibus, etc., ex Evi- "dentiis ipsis, Annalibus Collegii, Rentalibus antiquis, "Supervisionibus Collegii, superioribus ac præsentibus, "aliisque omnibus venustioribus Collegii libris collectum "jussu ac cura Gulielmi Baggee, M.D., Præsidentis, ac "Sociorum Collegii, opera autem ac industria Gulielmi "Adamson, tunc temporis quoque Socii, anno Domini "1651."

In Adamson's volume mention is made of an "Old "Leiger Book of St. Alban's;" it seems doubtful whether it is now in existence.

The "Gesta Collegii," or "Transactions of the "College," have been kept, mostly in small quarto paper volumes, since January 1, 1659; the contents of which have been copied into six handsome folio volumes, the transcripts from the originals ending in 1834; the entries since which time are continued in the sixth volume. As their contents are in general minutes of meetings of the Master and Senior Fellows, upon official business, they do not seem to be of any public interest.

Survey and Terrar Book, of the middle of the 16th century; a folio, containing long descriptions of the estates then belonging to the College.

A Computus Book, containing accounts at the end of each year from 1584 to 1665, small folio, paper, half bound.

A volume, small folio, labelled—"Pandecta annii 1559 "ad annum 1658." It appears to contain the "Gesta "Collegii," or College Transactions, between the above dates; but its contents have not been included among the modern transcripts above mentioned.

Bursars' Book, 1609–34; a large folio, paper, bound in rough calf; it contains the accounts of the College at great length: this and the following volume present many curious details of the social life of those days.

Bursars' Book, 1634–61; a large thick folio volume, paper.

Bursars' Book, 1687–1712; a large folio volume.

Liber Rationalis, ("Ratiou Book,") 1581–1593; a thin folio volume, half bound: it consists of extracts from the larger Bursars' Computi, or Accounts, in reference to payments made to the Master, Fellows, and Scholars, and the sums due from them, and from tenants of the College property.

Liber Rationalis, 1594–1608; a thin folio volume, half bound.

Liber Rationalis, 1609–28; a paper folio volume, in modern half binding. Like the preceding volumes, it contains extracts from the larger accounts of the two College Bursars, with the payments made, and the sums due, to the College. At the end of the first year's account in this volume, is a list of, first (apparently) bad debts then due to the College, under the head of "Antiqui debitores, nuper socii, scholares, et firmarii," some of these debts having been owing for many years, indeed, as far back as 1572. This list is referred to at the end of each year's account for several years, as "Antiqui Debitores," after which, no further allusion is made to it, the debts being probably deemed hopeless. A list of debts to the College then follows, evidently considered as good,—"Hæc subscripta debentur Collegio "in computo annuario 1609." Among them occurs,—"Dominus Rex Jacobus pro medietate hac, 30*li*."—"King James owes for this half year, 30*li*.;" in allusion to the yearly rent of 3 pounds due from the Crown for Physick's (or Fishwick's) Hostel, which had been taken from the College by Henry the Eighth, for the purposes of the foundation of his College of Trinity; a yearly rent of 3*l*. (which is still paid) being granted to Caius College in lieu of it. It is perhaps worthy of notice, as a coincidence, that a Robinson occurs in 1612 as a Scholar on the foundation of Robert and Joanna Trappes, and a Cruso, as a Caius' Scholar in that year; Robinson ceased to be a Scholar in 1613. This subject will be again adverted to under the head of "Matricula- "tion Books of the College.

Liber Rationalis, 1629–61; a thick folio volume, paper, half bound; a continuation of the preceding volumes.

Liber Rationalis, 1661–92; a similar volume.

Liber Rationalis, 1693–1721; a similar volume.

Exit Books; Registers of Leaves of Absence granted to members of the College, three in number, embracing the years 1619–77, 1678–1747, and 1748–93.

Books of Acquittances of College Officers, 1620–67, and 1672–1713; two long folio volumes, the latter only partly filled.

Liber Matriculationis Collegii; a thick folio volume, bound in calf, and containing about 380 leaves of paper. It begins with the year 1560, the first name entered being that of Clement Paman, and ends in 1679. On some fly-leaves is entered a Catalogue of Books in the College Library, date October 29, 1569. Reverting to the coincidence already noticed, as to the names "Robinson" and "Cruso" occurring at the same date among the Scholars of the College, we find that John Robinson, of Elsing in Norfolk, educated under Mr. William Smith, of Monk Soham, aged 15, was admitted a poor scholar and sizar in 1609; and that Rookwood Robinson, son of Hugh Robinson, Clerk, Rector of Bramerton in Norfolk, aged 17 years, was admitted a poor scholar in 1611. In folio 150b of the same volume, the admission of their contemporary, Aquila Cruso, is entered. He is mentioned as the son of John Cruso, of Norwich, a Belgian by birth, and of middle rank, being admitted a Pensioner in his 15th year. There are three other entries of the name of "Cruso" in the same book:—John Cruso, of Norwich, admitted a poor scholar in 1631; probably the same John Cruso, who, according to Antony Wood, was incorporated in the University of Oxford in 1643; Francis Cruso, of Aquila, aged 15 years, a poor scholar in 1669; and John Cruso, son of John, late a Fellow of the College and a Doctor in Civil Law, born at Bristol, and admitted a Pensioner in 1661. This Doctor Cruso, not improbably, is the same person whom we meet with as hopelessly in debt to Trinity Hall, in 1675. Under the year 1605 in this volume we meet with the admission of Francis Cruso, aged 15 years, son of Edmund, citizen of Norwich. In 1613 he is admitted a "major pensionarius," after being a Scholar on Dr. Caius's Foundation. He is still remembered as the author of the "Emblems" (mainly borrowed however from the "Pia Desideria" of Herman Hugo, the Jesuit), his numerous other works being forgotten. In the same book, fol. 331b, under Michaelmas 1667, is entered the admission of the notorious Titus Oates, who afterwards removed to St. John's College, on being dismissed from Caius, it has been said; the following is a translation of the entry:—"Titus Oates, son of Samuel, "Clerk and Rector of Hastings, in the County of "Sussex, born at Okeham, in the County of Rutland, "instructed in literature by Master Mackmillian, in "London, for one year, and under other preceptors for "two years, more or less, was admitted a poor scholar "on the 29th day of June, aged 18 years, under the "tutorship of Master Ellys."

Liber Matriculationis Collegii; a Continuation of the preceding volume, coming down to 1833, a thick large folio volume, in rough calf, containing 605 pages filled.

An ancient Computus, or Bursars' Account-book, a small folio paper volume of 192 pages. No early Computi, on parchment rolls, are now known to exist, if indeed this College ever had such. This volume, the most ancient that the house possesses, contains the College accounts from 1423 to 1456, 1488 to 1493, and 1508 to 1524. In p. 5 is a note, written in a later hand than the rest of the context:—"In yeare of our "Lord God 1534, on Cockerman, fermour of our mylle "at Newnham, made a new mylle of his own proper "costis and chargis withowt owre consent, not havyng "thereof eny knowlege." The mill at Newnham, in the vicinity of Cambridge, still belonging to Caius College, is here alluded to. In p. 3, under the year 1423, we find (translated):—"Expenses for celebrating the ob- "sequies of the Founder, from A.D. 1422. First, for ale,

In p. 13, under the head of "Expenditure," for a succeeding year:—"In the "first place, paid at the obsequies of the Founder; for "sweet wine, 3 gallons, 4*s*. 4*d*. For 2½ pounds of con- "fectures, 2*s*. 11*d*. For dragis [called anneys dragyz, "'aniseed comfits,' elsewhere], 1½ pounds, 12*d*. For "14 gallons of ale, 21*d*. For rushes, 3*d*. "P. 16:—Paid "for the wall near the board [the name given very "generally in Cambridge to the latrine, in the 14th and "15th centuries], 4*s*. 4*d*." The accounts set forth in the latter part of this volume, in form resemble those given in the "Libri Rationales," previously mentioned. In a list given of the Masters of the College in p. 192, the following curious passage occurs (tr.): —"Be it remembered, that A.D. 1475 died Edmund "Shyreff, after the Feast of St. Michael; against whom "at the time of his election as Warden, no slight opposi- "tion was formerly made by N. Bothe, afterwards "Bishop of Exeter, who factiously attempted to usurp "to himself the office of Warden. But the ambition of "this man was far from prevailing; although in the "meantime he most disgracefully made away with "(pessime dilapidavit) the best cup and the best piece of "silver plate, together with as much money as he could "scrape together. As to what was afterwards restored, "when he had reached a fatter preferment, we are in "ignorance." In this passage, to all appearance, there are two errors; the Christian name of Booth, Bishop of Exeter, was "John," and he had attained to that dignity in 1465, seven years before Shyreff's election to the Wardenship.

The following, among the many deeds and other documents, in the possession of the College, throw more or less light probably upon the early history and topography of the University and Town of Cambridge.—

A deed executed to Edmund Gonvile by Daniel Felstead and his wife, as to two tenements in Lurtburgh Lane.

A deed executed to the same by John de Brunne and William de Hichen, as to a tenement in Lurtburgh Lane.

License granted by Thomas Morice, chief lord in fee, to Edmund Gonvile, to found his Hall in those three tenements, a rent being reserved of 6*d*. yearly.

License granted by John, Prior of Bernewelle, to Edmund Gonvile, to found his Hall, a yearly rent being reserved to him of 5*s*. 6*d*., and four capons yearly.

A Charter granted by Edward the Third to Edmund Gonvile, by writ of Privy Seal, enabling him to put in mortmain the tenements in Lurtburgh Lane.

A deed of Grant by Edmund Gonvile to John Colton, first Warden of his Hall, and his scholars.—Four scholars only are named, though the Royal license extends to twenty;—William Rougham, John de Tyrryngton, William de Lee, and Richard de Pallham.

Letter of William Bateman, Bishop of Norwich, creating the new foundation, by the name of "the "College of the Annunciation of the Blessed Virgin "Mary."

License granted by Edward the Third for the purchase of two tenements, one from the University of Cambridge, the other from the Hospital of St. John at Cambridge, date 1352. These two tenements were in Lurtburgh Lane, and were obtained for the enlargement of the original site of Gonvile Hall: the tenement purchased from the University was called "Longe "Entre."

License granted by Edward the Third, in the 27th year of his reign, for an exchange between the College of St. Benedict (or Corpus Christi College) and the Hall of the Annunciation of the Blessed Virgin Mary.

Covenant between Henry, Duke of Lancaster, Alderman, or Governor, of the Guild of the Fraternity of Corpus Christi, and the College of the Annunciation of the Blessed Virgin Mary, for an exchange of hostels belonging to them, together with the conditions; in French and Latin.

Release, 28th Edward III., by the Master and Scholars of the House of Corpus Christi, of a messuage that formerly belonged to John de Cambridge.

Letters of License of Thomas, Bishop of Ely, and the Chapter, for founding a Chapel, and celebrating divine service therein, A.D. 1353.

Composition made by William Bateman, Bishop of Norwich, between the Hall of the Holy Trinity of Norwich (Trinity Hall) and the College of the Annunciation of the Blessed Virgin Mary, for establishing friendship between them, A.D. 1353.

Grant by King Edward the Sixth of an annual pension of 3*l*. to Gonvile Hall, in lieu of Physwicke Hostel, which had been left to Gonvile Hall by William Fishwicke, Bedel of the University, in 1393, but had been lately transferred to Trinity College.

Copy of a Petition of Thomas Bacon, Master, and the Fellows, of Gonvile Hall, that Dr. Caius may be a Cofounder, and may make Statutes for the College.

Three Letters Testimonial, in behalf of Dr. Caius, for his Degrees at Cambridge and at Padua.

Patent for Dr. Caius's coat of Arms.

Inventory of Dr. Caius's effects.

A grant from Queen Elizabeth to the College of two bodies, for the study of anatomy.

License granted to Dr. Caius, A.D. 1557, by the Bishop of London, and the Dean and Chapter of St. Paul's, for the removal of Linacre's tomb in St. Paul's Cathedral.

Gift to the College, by John L'Estrange, of 1,000 sheep, A.D. 1516. Dr. Caius, in his Annals, or History, of the College, p. 8, says as to this gift, (tr. from the Latin):—"For the sale of which sheep there is still a "great sum of money due, as may be ascertained from "the Ration Books of our College, and of regaining "which there is no hope. Such in times of late has "been the negligence of our Wardens, etc."

The College Statutes of Edmund Gonvile, and of Bishop Bateman, A.D. 1353.

It is with much pleasure that I acknowledge my obligations to Dr. Guest, Master of Caius College, for the readiness with which he gave me permission to examine the muniments of his College, and the interest which he manifested in my enquiries relative to them. I have also to thank the Reverend John Lamb, Fellow and Bursar of the College, for the great pains which he took in collecting the various documents, and his kindness in providing me with every facility for their inspection.

HENRY THOMAS RILEY.

JESUS COLLEGE, CAMBRIDGE.

The books and various other documents are described in the order in which they were shown to me by Dr. Corrie, Master of the College.—

A small quarto paper volume, in modern binding, and neatly written throughout, composed, in Latin, by John Siberman, a Fellow and former President of the College, and dedicated to Dr. Edmund Boldero, appointed Master in 1663. It contains an account, carefully gathered from the College muniments, of the early foundation of the College, and of its predecessor (in site, and partly in endowments,) the Monastery of St. Radegund, the members of which consisted of a Prioress, sometimes styled "Abbess," and eleven Nuns; a foundation which was dissolved in the 11th year of King Henry VII., its buildings being transferred, through the agency of Alcock, Bishop of Ely, the Founder, to his new College. The latter part contains, in addition to the history of the College, an account of its early Masters and Fellows, and of its Benefactors, with some former Statutes of the University. Its title is, — "Historia Collegii Jesu Cantabrigiæ, adornata studio "Joannis Sherman, Collegii Præsidentis, etc." The earlier part of it was published by Mr. J. O. Halliwell in 1840, forming a thin 8vo volume of 44 pages; the latter half, treating of the former Fellows and the University Statutes, being omitted. There are some written notes in the manuscript volume, added by Dr. Caryl, Master of the College, at a comparatively recent date (A.D. 1758–80). In this volume, many of the early deeds, and grants made thereby, to the Convent of St. Radegund, are mentioned or described.

There is also in the possession of the College a paper book, small folio size, bound in rough leather, containing abstracts of all the early muniments of the College, and the Nunnery, its predecessor. It was written by Dr. Caryl, above-named in his usual excellent hand, and with great care throughout. At the other end of the volume is transcribed the Foundation-deed of the College, dated 12th June 1496.

Among the early deeds still in the possession of the College, almost the earliest are two from Malcolm IV., King of Scotland, between 1153 and 1164, Hubert, Bishop of Glasgow, one of the witnesses, having died in the latter year. As Earl of Huntingdon, he thereby grants to the Nuns of Grandebrigge ten acres of land, "near Grenecroft," in almoign; (Grenecroft being the spot afterwards known as "Jesus Green," or "Common," and now as "Midsummer Common"). In the same drawer with these deeds and charters is Malcolm's Pedigree, drawn up in 1658 by Richard Gascoigne. A previous grant had been made to the Nuns "of the little Cell without the vill of Cantebrugg," by Nigel, Bishop of Ely from 1133 to 1169; and also by Constance, Countess of Huntingdon. In a deed of probably the latter half of the 12th century, but without a date, Reginald son of Hugh of Clenewareton (Clenchwarton, in Norfolk) gives to the Nuns 3 coombs of salt yearly out of his saltworks at Lynn, called "Hawekes-"cote." By a somewhat later deed, without date, the Nuns grant to Bartholomew Fitz-Ralph their portion of the said saltworks, he paying them yearly "tres octo-"dalos salis," "three eight-deals of salt:" the capacity of the "deal" is probably now unknown.

A.D. 1277, Roger, Bishop of Norwich, grants to the Nuns a collection throughout his Diocese for repair of their church, which had been damaged by the fall of a campanile, clochier, or bell-tower.

A.D. 1213, an instrument was issued by the Official of the Archdeacon of Ely, recommending the Nuns to the clergy of the diocese for their charity, as they had lost their house and all their substance by fire.

A.D. 1376, Thomas, Bishop of Ely, grants a relaxation from penance of 40 days to such as shall contribute towards repairing the loss of the Nuns by a recent fire.

A.D. 1390, William, Archbishop of Canterbury, grants a relaxation of 40 days' penance to such as shall contribute to the repair of the Nunnery, much damaged of late by high winds.

24th Edward I., A.D. 1196. Quitclaim by Roysia, widow of Giles de Cambridge, as to her claim of dower in certain lands lying in a croft called "Stockwell," in Cambridge.

By a deed without date, but probably of the time of Henry III., Avicia Bacun, of Stantun, gives her bondman, William Champneys, "with all his following" (cum tota sequela sua); and by the same deed the Nuns grant to the same William Champneys 10 acres given to them by Avicia Bacun, he paying yearly 6*s.* 9*d.* to their Infirmary.

From my cursory examination of the abstracts of the early deeds of this College, I am induced to think that, if thoroughly perused, they would be found to contain a rich mine of information as to the former localities of Cambridge, many of them now totally forgotten.

The heads under which the property of this Nunnery, in its more opulent times, was divided, are as follow:— John de Trippelowe's gift in Cambridge and Bernwell, the Parish of St. Radegund, All Saints in the Jewry, Trinity Parish, St. Andrew's, St. Botolph's, St. Peter's without Trumpington Gate, St. Benedict's, St. John the Baptist's Milnestrete, St. Edward's, Great St. Mary's, St. Clement's and Bridge Street, St. Peter's, St. Giles's, All Saints' near the Castle, Cambridge and Bernwelle Fields, Grantchester, Shelford, Abington, West Wratting, Stevinton, Whaddon, Ashdon, Barthow, Litlington, Trumpington, Bassingburn, Maddingley, Ely, Little Walden, and Crawden. Of all this, however, but little had survived to the Nunnery at the time of its dissolution; and of that little a small portion only came into the possession of the College.

The earliest Register of the College is a large and thick folio volume, beginning in the early part of the reign of Queen Elizabeth, and containing the College accounts, and admissions of students from that date.

The second Register, a folio volume, contains admissions of students and entries of College business, and orders made, from about 1618 to 1689; it contains however, no College accounts.

The third Register is a thin folio volume, bound in parchment, beginning in 1689 and ending in 1783.

The fourth Register is a similar thin folio volume, beginning in 1783, and coming down to the present day.

There are also some old Field Books, containing accounts of the various metes and boundaries of the College property.

Many loose papers, connected with the College buildings and its general affairs, have been collected by Dr. Cerrie from various quarters at different times during his Mastership, and inserted in a large blank paper folio, which he has had made for the purpose.

Beyond the instances of Sherman and Dr. Caryl, already named, little interest seems to have been taken in the records of this College, and their due preservation, in former times. There are twelve early Computi of College accounts still existing, of the time of Henry VIII., and one of the time of Edward VI.; all the others, probably, have perished.

Of the Nunnery of St. Radegund, only three ancient Rolls seem to have survived to these times; at least, there are only three now in the possession of the College. These Rolls are of considerable interest in shewing some features of the usages, requirements, and general economy, of an English Nunnery in the 15th century; and as their contents seem to be hardly of a nature adapted to the Calendars to which these Reports are in general but preliminary, some extracts from the two earliest of them are here given.—

The first Roll is of parchment, in fair condition, and is headed (as translated from the Latin of the original): "Cambridge. The Account of Dame [Domina] Agnes "Banaster, Treasurer and Receiver of the Houses "of the Blessed Mary and St. Radegunda, from the Eve "of St. Michael the Archangel, in the 28th year of the "reign of King Henry the Sixth [A.D. 1449] to the Eve "of St. Michael the Archangel thence next ensuing, "in the 29th year of the same king, being for one year." The earlier portion contains the Receipts of the house, amounting in all to 80*l.* 22*d.* Under this head are Receipts for the letting of houses in Cambridge, and farms in the country; Receipts in the Market (foro), and profits (proventus) from the Fair which had been granted to the House, on the Assumption of the Blessed Virgin; and Repasts (repaste) which had been given by divers gentlewomen (personæ generosæ) who had been staying there; receipts also on sale of corn and straw; fishes; and payments from the Vicar of St. Clement's in Cambridge, for the clothing of the Nuns.

Under the head of Payments, a tenement in Cambridge, called "Mortymer's" is mentioned: "paid to "the Rector of the Church of St. Benedict for the "hostel called 'the Bull' (hospitio vocato le Boolle) "4*d.*," on the site probably of the inn still so called. "Arecherche Street," in Cambridge, is named more than once; and "Nunneslane," the present "Jesus Lane," is repeatedly mentioned. "For a tenement in Walles-"lane," an allowance is claimed to be made, because John Walsheman had run away without paying his rent.

From the items under the head of "Necessary ex-"penses," the following are extracted: "For 3 pounds "of candles bought for the house, 3*s.* 5*d.* For 3 pounds "of cotton (le cotone) bought for the candles at various "times, 2*s.* For soap (? spumate) for the whole year, "22*d.*; and for one barrel of oil bought for the Church "of St. Radegund, 14*s.* For candles bought against "the Feast of the Nativity of St. John the Baptist, 2*d.* "For 5 ladles (ladele) bought for the kitchen, 2½*d.* "Also, for slates (slattes) bought from Alexander "Tebbe, of Westone, for the house where the malt is "dried, 8*s.* 4*d.* For parchment and paper, with ink "(encausto), bought as well for writing the parts of "this account from day to day, as for the account of "last year, 10*d.* Paid to John Cokke for carrying

" as they were wanted, 12*s.* Paid to Thomas Atkyn, " hired to trim the trees (les trees) in the close called " 'Gartonescrofte,' for two days, 8*d.* Also, to John " Knyght, who assisted the labourers on one occasion, " as being the price of a pair of shoes, 7*d.*"

Under another head, the title at the margin being cut away :—" Also, paid to Geoffrey Fyesher, for the carriage by water of salt fish from Ely, together with " the carriage of half a barrel of oil, called 'lampe " 'oyle,' from Lynn, and of a letter sent to our lady " [the Prioress] from Lynn ; as also, for the carriage " of herrings from Lynn to the Great Bridge at Cambridge, 2*s.* 2*d.* Also, for the expenses of our lady " the Prioress in inspecting her tenants at Cambridge " at different times, together with an interview which " she had with John Austy, Esquire, for the benefit of " the house, 17½*d.*"

The fuel mentioned consists of turfs, faggots, and sedge.

Under the head of "Miscellaneous Payments," the following appear, among others :—" Also, for the salary " of Robert Palmere, Confessor of the ladies this year, " as in divers preceding years, 6*s.* 8*d.* For the salary " of Master John Horrysone, Chaplain, celebrating " Mass for the ladies the whole time of this account, " 100*s.* Also, paid to John Peressone, celebrating in " the Church of St. Andrew the Apostle at various " times, 2*s.* 4*d.* For the payment of the clerk of that " church, for one year, 13*s.* 4*d.* For the pay of Richard Vest, the baker and brewer, this year, 26*s.* 8*d.* " Also, for the pay of John Enersdone, hired to plough, " the whole time of the account, 26*s.* 6*d.* Also, for the " pay of John Wyllyamessone, shepherd, with 8*d.*, the " price of one pair of boots, this year, 20*s.* 8*d.* For the " pay of Joanna Gramgyer, one of the handmaids of " our lady [the Prioress], including 3*s.* 4*d.* given to her " as a reward for provisional duties (officio provisorio) " this year, 13*s.* 4*d.* Also, for the pay of Elinor " Richemounde, another handmaid of our lady, with " 20*d.* given to her as a reward, 8*s.* 4*d.* Also, for the " pay of Elizabeth Chaterys, another handmaid, given " to her in her clothing during the time of this account, " 3*s.* 1*d.* Also, for the pay of Dionysia the yardwoman " (yerdewoman) this year, 9*s.*"

On the obverse of this manuscript are written a number of prayers, in a large and distinct hand, and in Latin, addressed to St. Etheldreda of Ely.

The second Roll of the Nunnery of St. Radegund is also of parchment, in a very mutilated condition at the beginning, and extends (probably) from Michaelmas in the 29th year of King Henry the Sixth (A.D. 1450) to Michaelmas in the following year ; Dame Agnes Bamastre being again the Treasurer and Receiver.

The following are extracts from the "Necessary Expenses."—" Paid for mending a vessel called 'a boket,' " bought of Thomas Botesham, with the binding of the " same with an iron hoop belonging to our lady, 13*d.* " To William Broun and his fellow, hired for two days " to prune the vines, and to raise them up, 12*d.* For " nails, called 'wyrgyngys,' bought for that use, 2*d.* " Also, for two skeppes (baskets) called 'skotelles,' 3*d.* " To Richard Gardynere, for beating stockfish (fung') " for one day, 3*d.* For a certain piece of timber, called " 'a mast,' bought at Lynne for making a ladder thereof, " 4*s.* Also, for a certain earthen pot, called 'a spesse " 'potte,' for the refectory-house, 1½*d.* To John Delahay, " hired to empty and cleanse the latrine for the whole " term, 2*s.* Also, for four implements, called 'wood- " 'hakys,' 4*d.* Also, for the binding of a great bowl " (ciphi), or dish, called 'a wasshyng bolle,' 2*d.* Also, " for a certain vessel called 'a cheerne (churn),' bought " at the Fair of Stereshrigge, for making butter there- " with, 10*d.* Also, for sour apples, called 'crabbes,' " bought for making a juice (salsagine) therefrom, " called ' vergeoice ' (verjuice), for mixed ink, for our " lady's wine, 8*d.* Paid to William Judde of St. Ives, " for dyeing the woollen cloth in green and blue " colours, that was intended for the livery of our lady's " servants, 9*s.* 9*d.* Also, for two stones, called 'salt- " 'stonez,' bought for the pigeon-house, 6¾*d.* Paid " to William Hornoby, for the carriage of 5 hundred " and sixty of sedge (les seghes) from the Grenecroft to " the brewery, 16*d.*"

Under the head of expenditure for the Guests' Hall :—" For two barrels of ale, called 'penyale,' bought for " the Guests' Hall at one time, 18*d.*"

Among the "Gifts" is enumerated a sum of "10 " pence doled to certain poor persons who lately " suffered in the war of our Lord the King."

Among the "Out-door Expenses" occurs,—"The " ferryage of Dame Joanna Lancastre, Dame Margaret " Metham, Thomas Key, and Elena Herward, from " Lynn aforesaid to Cambridge, together with their " attendants, 2*s.* 8*d.*"

The third of these Rolls is of paper, and purports to be the account of Dame Johanna Kay, for the 21st year of Edward the Fourth (A.D. 1481, 2), about fourteen years before the dissolution of the Convent. The Roll is perfect, but very brief. The total receipts of the Nunnery, which had been as much as 80*l.* thirty years before, had now fallen to 31*l.* 15*s.* 8½*d.*

The above Rolls (together with one of the 39th year of King Henry the Sixth, which appears to be no longer in existence), seem to be the only ones alluded to in Sherman's volume, compiled in the 17th century, before mentioned, as then surviving : he does not however speak of that of the 21st year of Edward the Fourth. The following is his description (translated from the Latin) of the state of the College muniments in his day, (p. 14 of the printed edition) :—" I cannot " go through the whole of them, because, as to the " deeds kept in the College archives, from which the " rest would have to be drawn, the carelessness of " certain persons has disfigured some with stains, " others a sacrilegious hand has carried off, and others, " again, time, the devourer of things, has consumed."

It is with much pleasure that I acknowledge that my thanks are greatly due to the Reverend Dr. Corrie, the Master of Jesus College, for the kindness with which he gave me access to the documents above described, and the care he took that I should enjoy every possible facility for the examination of them.

HENRY THOMAS RILEY.

TRINITY HALL, CAMBRIDGE.

The various documents are described in the order in which they were shown to me by Dr. Goddart, the Master, and Mr. Latham, Tutor of the College.—

A folio volume, in modern calf binding, consisting of 508 pages, written by W. Warren, LL.D., formerly Fellow of the College, and brought to completion apparently on 27th April 1730. Its title is—" Collectanea ad Collegium " sive Aulam Sanctæ Trinitatis in Universitate Canta- " brigiensi præcipue spectantia," it being, in fact, a History of the College from its then existing records and other sources, and combining therewith a description of the College buildings, lists of its Benefactors, Masters, and Fellows, copies of the College Statutes, and lists of the College plate ; which latter, contrary to the case of most of the Colleges in both Universities, was preserved during the commotions in the reign of Charles the First. The volume is clearly written throughout : it has never been published.

Volumes of "Miscellanea," folios, in some instances more covers loosely enclosing papers, and of varying sizes. The First Volume contains many old papers, all relating more or less to the property or affairs of the College. No. 4 is a small bill for repairs done to the Chapel, and, apparently, consecrating the same on reconsecration ; of especial interest, as being the only ancient document in the possession of the College bearing reference to the Chapel. The writing is very indistinct : it is to the following effect, so far as it can be deciphered :—" Anno Domini 1513.—Expense circa re- " parationem Capellæ.—Inprimis, pro faciendo le " crest, xiiis. viiid. obol. Item, pro fundere muri pro " le crest, xxvid. viiid. Item, pro lynyng le crest. " iis. iiiid. Item, pro cirpis, vd. Item, pro aliis " necessariis, iid. obol. Item, pro dedicatione Capellæ, " xxs. Item, in remuneratione servientium, iis. Item, " pro veste linea pro Episcopo, xiiiid. Item, pro " vemo, iis. viid. Item, pro le heyer for the hey alter, " xiiiid." (?) " Expenses about the repair of the " Chapel. First, for making the crest, 13*s.* 8½*d.* Also, for " one staining the wall for the crest, 26*s.* 8*d.* Also, for " lining the crest, 2*s.* 4*d.* Also, for rushes, 5*d.* Also, " for other necessaries, 2½*d.* Also, for the dedication " of the Chapel, 20*s.* Also, for remuneration of the ser- " vants, 2*s.* Also, for a linen vestment for the Bishop, " 14*d.* Also, for the vane (?), 2*s.* 7*d.* Also, for the " heyer (?) for the high altar, 14*d.*" (The "crest" here is the ornamental finishing of a wall). No. 11 is a copy of a Letter from Thomas Beech to Robert, Earl of Salisbury, Lord High Treasurer (temp. James I.) complaining of "a double imputation which hath for many yeares " been laied upon that house (T.H.), the one concerninge " backwardnes in religion, the other weake proceedinge " in learninge." A bill occurs for muskets and rests supplied to the College, with other items, dated 28 July 1642, and signed, "Robert Wyaman" ; the amount being 10*l.* 4*s.* 1*d.* (There is, I believe, a document in existence in the College, which I did not see, showing that these muskets were afterwards seized by order of Oliver Cromwell). A receipt also for 10 shillings for carriage of the said arms from London, and of 1*s.* 8*d.* "for carriage of them to the Bull." No. 18, a Letter, (or a copy of one, it is not clear which,) on parchment, from the Fellows of this College to Henry, Earl of Holland, Chancellor of the University, dated August 19, 1645, requesting him to appoint John Selden to the Mastership, on the resignation of Dr. King; John Bond, Fellow of Catherine Hall, was, however, finally appointed. No. 19, an Order from Parliament to remove the restriction imposed upon the Fellows, as to the election of a Master, unless John Selden, recently chosen by them, shall consent to accept the Mastership. Nos. 20 and 21, other documents thereon. No. 22, Order of the Lords of Parliament, stating that their Order of the 4th of December 1647, discharging Zachery Cawdrey from being Proctor, shall not prejudice the right of the University, or of any College, in choosing another Proctor. Among the documents mentioned in the latter part of this volume, as being in the possession of the College, is a Composition between Trinity Hall and Annunciation Hall (now Caius College) in the year 1353, in which Trinity Hall is allowed the seniority.

Miscellanea, Vol. 2. No. 4 is an Inventory on parchment, in the form of an Indenture, dated January 22, 1556, "conteynyng all bokes, plates, dettes, and leases "&c., belonging to Trinity Hall." No. 12, a letter, signed by Queen Elizabeth, requiring Trinity Hall to grant a lease of Mutford, in Herts, to her servant, Porphyry Bower, Esquire. No. 21, a Letter of Francis Verulam (Lord Bacon), Chancellor, to Dr. Corbet, Master of the College, dated 12 July 1620, as to a lease of lands in Monkton. No. 91, Proposals (a leaf in print), for building a "Bagnio" in Cambridge "for hot and cold bathing, by subscription. A few extracts are here given from this curious paper, as a sample.—(I.) "That in gratitude to the Gentlemen who subscribe, "they shall have the liberty of making use of the "Bagnio gratis, for their lives, only giving the servant "his usual fees. (II.) That there shall be two rooms for "sweating, after the most elegant Italian Bagnio "in London. (IV.) That there shall be cooling-rooms "in which shall be proper matrasses, or pallates, with "the usual accommodations. (V.) That the servants "who attend shall do the small offices usual in bagnios, "and cup when desired. (VI.) That the price to those "who do not subscribe be 4*s.* for bathing, and 5*s.* if "they sweat, or are cupp'd; but no more for all." The date of these "Proposals" is about the end of the reign of George the First.

Miscellanea, Vol. 3. This volume contains a large number of papers connected with the College property and business. Among them are many papers relating to the expulsion of Dr. Nicholls, a Fellow, from the College in 1731, for stealing books from St. John's College Library. In a letter, dated August 3, 1731, to Nathaniel Lloyd, the Master, writes:—"Mr. President, "and Gentlemen. The ill-luck I have had in putting "in the late expell'd Fellow, Dr. Nicholls, has determined me to waive the Master's right to devolutions "for the future." Dr. Nicholls's confession, dated "From Mr. Taylor's, against the Monument, London," and his letters to the Chebsey Fellow of the College, dated from Calais, whither he had fled for safety, are affecting pictures of self-abasement and remorse; the latter entering into details how the thefts were effected. The University Library also suffered from his depredations.

Miscellanea, Vol. 4. This volume contains a number of documents bearing reference to the College, of earlier date than the preceding ones. Among them are Bursers' accounts in 1598, 99, 1600, 6, 7, 8, 1626, 1630, 1. A Letter from Richard (Bancroft), Archbishop of Canterbury, dated March 17, 1607, to Dr. Cowell, Master of the College, asking his favour for Mr. Newman as successor in the Chambers, in Doctors' Commons, London, held by Sir Edward Stanhope, jun. deceased. To it is added a Postscript, longer than the letter itself, signed R.C.:—"You have a book which Mr. Hare bestowed upon "you that did appertaine to the Abbey at Canterburie. "It conteynyng in it many ancient recordes, as I am "informed, I pray you send it up unto me, and it shalbe "safe, for I know your charge; howbeit I hold it had "bene fitter to have bene given to the Archbishoprike "of Canterbury, which is more likely to stand then that "Abbey to be rebuilt." This last remark has reference to the terms on which the book, which had once belonged to the Abbey of St. Augustine at Canterbury, was given to the College by Robert Hare, the antiquarian, a contemporary of Camden; namely, that in case the house to which it had belonged, should ever be restored, the book should be given back to it again. (The book itself is a magnificent manuscript Chartulary, or History, of the Monastery of St. Augustine at Canterbury, still in the possession of the College: it has recently been printed, as edited by the late Archdeacon Hardwick, in 1858.) Whether or not it was lent to the Archbishop, does not appear. In this volume there is also a Letter signed by Oliver Cromwell, date December 18, 1648, desiring that Dr. Dorislaus may become tenant of the Chamber in Doctors' Commons, belonging to the College, recently occupied by Dr. Duck, now deceased;—"If you please to prefer him before any other, paying "rent and fine to your Colledge, I shall take it as a "curtesie att your hands, whereby you will oblige your "assured friends and servants, O. Cromwell." Dr. Bond, we may remark, the then Master of the College, was an ardent supporter of the Puritan cause. A Letter from Sir Julius Cæsar to Dr. Corbet, Master, date July 31, 1612, about a Chamber in Doctors' Commons. A Letter from "G. Cant." (Archbishop Abbot), date July 7, 1614, to Dr. Corbet, on a like subject. An account of plate bought by the College, partly in exchange for old, with the receipt of Sir Thomas Vyner, the goldsmith: there are also many other inventories and memoranda in this volume about the College plate. A small memorandum, without any date, but belonging, no doubt, to the year 1630, bearing reference to Robert Herrick, who had been a member of the College, (the well-known author of the "Hesperides.")—"The names of those that are to be "sued. Will. Wake, 5*l.* 18*s.* 6*d.* obol. Tho. Creake, "besides 'præ manibus' [a name apparently given to "caution money] deducted, 4*l.* 2*s.* 7*d.* Herricke, 3*l.* "'præ manibus' being deducted, 7*l.* 16*s.* 9*d.*" The Steward's accounts of 1629 and 30 (the year shortly after, in both of which Herrick's name appears, as debited with 10*l.* 16*s.* 9*d.* against it, the largest sum debited against any one in the list: reference will again be found made to Herrick's name in the sequel. A receipt, dated 19th January 1632,—"Received the day "and yere above written of the right worshipfull Mr. Doctor Eden, Master of Trinity Hall, the sum of "nyntene pounds seventeene shillings and six pence, "which was the full proportion that Trinity Hall was "rated towards the defraying of the chardges for the "Commodies when their Majesties were here in Cam-"bridge. I say, received by me, Fraucis Hughes." Bursars' Accounts, 1632–40, 1677. Award of Sir Matthew Carew and W. Lambarde, in the 41st of Elizabeth, in a suit between Dr. Byng and Trinity Hall. A Letter signed by Lord Clarendon in 1662, in a cause of Dr. Mason against the Fellows and Scholars of Trinity Hall. A very long and curious Letter from Henry Pelsant, Vicar of Weatherfield, and formerly a Fellow of the College, date September 11, 1682, sent, with his last will and testament, to be placed in the Treasury of the College, addressed,—"with y^e pacquett, to y^e Right Worshipfull "his honored friend, Sir Thomas Eden, Master of "Trinity Hall in Cambridge, at his lodgings there."

Miscellanea, Vol. 5. The contents of this volume mostly belong to the last century; among them is a Letter, dated January 5, 1738, containing his resignation of the College Bursarship by W. Knatchbull. A Letter in French, of about the same date, addressed by M. Roque, an antiquary of Avignon, to a friend of Mr. Knatchbull, stating that he has not, after going over the lists of Bishops, Archbishops, Cardinals, and Popes, buried in the Church at Avignon, been able to find the name of Bishop Bateman, founder of Trinity Hall, who died there in 1354 (by poison, it is said). His name, M. Roque thinks, was never inserted in the Roll. A copy of Sir Nathaniel Lloyd's will, (Master of the College, and Fellow of All Souls, Oxford), with curious directions at the end, as to his funeral,—"No escutheons "(sic) or other fooleries on the hearse and horses." A Letter written by Susanna Foe, date March 30, 1739, to Dr. Warren, thanking him for 5 guineas paid for her use by him to her "kind friend, good Dr. Grey;" and stating her sad circumstances, as a "poor unfortunate "widdow," with not above seven pounds a year to maintain herself and her child. The query suggests itself whether her husband may not have been connected with Daniel de Foe, whose surname was properly "Foe."

Register of Admission of the Masters, Fellows, and Scholars of the College, from May 21, 1581. Down to 1726, the leaves have formed part probably of an older volume. Being then bound up with larger paper leaves, in folio size, and in rough calf with clasps, it now forms a fair volume, and is continued down to the present time.

Book of Chamber Incomes: a small folio volume, beginning at 1711 and coming down to the latter part of last century.

In page 310 of Dr. Warren's book, already named, mention is made of the "Old College Register," in parchment; on the outside of which were written the words,—"Liber Actorum et rerum memorabilium Aulæ "Trinitatis, inceptus anno Domini 1557, Cantabr." Nothing seems now to be known of it, and it probably no longer exists.

A large number of old papers, which had formerly been lying loose, have at a comparatively recent period been bound up in stiff boards of large folio size. Among them, in the form of Indentures, on paper, are a series of Bursars' accounts, beginning at 1582, and coming down, with some interruptions, to 1651; after which, some follow of a later date. Also, a paper book, pamphlet form, entitled—"The Steward his accompt of the "whole Commons Booke, the 3rd of October 1623." In this book, col. 2 of page 3, under (tr.),—"Names of those "who were in College on the 3rd day of Octber 1623," "and their debts," Herrick is named, as then owing the steward 57s. 7d. At the foot of the Bursar's Account for January 1632 is entered, in another hand,—"19° "Januarii 1632, taken out of the ingresse money "nineteene pounds seventeene shillings and six pence, "which was paid to Mr. Hughes, the Bedell, to paye for "our Colledge share in the charges for the Comedies "for the King and Queene the yere before." In that for January 1634, there is a somewhat similar note, written probably by Dr. Thomas Eden, the then Master.—"7° Aprilis 1634. I gave order to Mr. Pelsant, chest "keeper, to send to John Brotherton out of the In"gresse money 12s. 2d., which summe he had laid out "for Powles, more than he had received. Alsoe, 40s. "to give to Mr. Edward Perce, he having given a silver "bowle to the Colledge, and therefore to have out his "40s. again [ingress, or caution, money, probably]." At the end of the account for January 1647 is added,—"Item, that Mr. Twells is to give an accompt of the "broken money which was a part of the 500l. that "Alderman Bunce payed us as Dr. Eden's legacy. "There is of it in the Bursar's hands 3l. 10s." In 1675 the name of "Dr. Crusoe" occurs, as a debtor to the society for the rent of two tenements, the arrears for the one being 39l., rent for 13 years, and for the other 36l. 5s., rent for 12½ years. This debt is entered yearly from 1684, but after 1675, the form of the account changes, and this item, probably being considered a bad debt, no longer appears. A Dr. Chasse, of about this period, will also be found mentioned under Cains College. The latest of these Bursars' Account, which appears in the form of an indenture, is for the year 1695.

I have much pleasure in expressing my obligations to Dr. Geldart, the Master of the College, for the readiness with which he gave me access to these documents, and for the pains which he took in giving me information relative to them. My thanks are also due to the Reverend Henry Latham, Fellow and Tutor of the College, for the courteous manner in which he provided me with every facility for the examination of them.

THE CARLISLE CATHEDRAL MSS.

By the courtesy of the Rev. R. W. Dixon there have been sent to London, and submitted to the Commissioners, 14 volumes belonging to the Cathedral Library of Carlisle.

LIST OF MSS. belonging to the Cathedral Library of Carlisle.

I.—Three "Ecclesiastical Valors" of the Diocese of Carlisle, arranged in three columns.

The 1st, marked N.P., was made by order of Pope Nicholas, A.D. 1291–1292. The 2nd, marked Edw. II., was a re-taxation under a new valuation, the former being so enormously high that the clergy were unable to pay it. It was made A.D. 1318 [11 Edw. II.]. The 3rd, marked Hen. VIII., was made in 1536 [27 Hen. VIII.], by which the clergy pay their first fruits and tenths. These valuations are preceded by some prefatory remarks by Charles, Bishop of Carlisle, dated 1st October 1767.

III.—Six volumes entitled "T. Machel's MSS."

The 1st volume contains prefatory remarks by W., Bishop of Carlisle, dated 10 August 1711, viz.,—

"This and the five following volumes (marked on the back T.M., vol. I., T.M., vol. II., &c.) are made up of loose papers left to me by their author, Mr. Thomas Machell, late Rector of Kirkbythore; with his request that (if it might be readily done) they should be put into form, and offer'd to some bookseller for y^r^ benefit of his widow and children. Upon perusal of 'em I found the Collection so imperfect, raw, and indigested that 'twas impossible to bring them (of 'emselves) to any such account as the good man hoped for. Since, it appear'd that he had bestow'd more pains on ye Family of Machel than on the Pedigrees of all the rest of the Gentry in the two Counties, and that the single parish of Kirkbythore was more labour'd than all besides in the bottome of Westmerland. In the transcripts of Records, &c. he has made use of other men's hands. As (particularly) in those out of the Tower, in the 4th volume, I find a good many of my own writing. This drudgery (I remember) I was unwillingly put upon in 1678, when Mr. M. was fellow, and I Taberdar of Qu. Coll., and (being then in attendance on Mr. Secretary Williamson) in dayly expectance of being sent beyond sea. Others are copy'd by W. Atkinson (afterwards Fellow of the same College), who was not well acquainted with old Records.

"Mr. Machel's own chief excellency was in drawing Coats of Arms, Prospects of Churches and Houses, &c. And whoever shall hereafter perfect his Design, in furnishing the Curious with such an History of Cumberland and Westmerland as Sr. W. Dugdale has given us of Warwickshire, may hence have a good share of the Ornamental part of his Work. For example—

1. Coats of Arms, of the Families of Note in both Counties, are fairly drawn.
2. Roman Monuments are well drawn.
3. Prospects of Churches, Chappels, and the Seats of Nobility and Gentry.
4. Monuments in Churches, Seals, &c., Modern.

"For the Reader's farther assistance I have drawn up a short Abstract of the Contents of every Volume, which is prefix'd to each respectively, and added an Alphabetical Index in the end of all of them severally. In the vacant leaves of the parishes I have here and there added (as I may probably continue to do) some occasional notes, as they fell in my way, omitted by the Author."

In the First Volume are—

1. Collections about the anticnt Brittains and Romans who inhabited these parts.
2. An Attempt towards a General Description of Westmerland.
3. Catalogue of the Rivers in Westmerland; w^th^ the Mills, Bridges, &c. thereon.
4. Highwayes in the said County, amongst which that of the old Romans.
5. Some few Parishes, in the Bottome of Westmerland and Diocese of Carlisle, described in scraps and fragments.

Volume II. contains—

1. Villare Alphabeticum for the Barony of Kendale.
2. Description of the Parishes in the said Barony, wherein the Coats of Arms of y^e^ Gentlemen at their severall Seats and on Mouuments in the Churches, &c. are noted in their order, so that (the Parishes being known wherein such Gentlemen reside) an intelligent Reader will find these and the smaller Villages so readily that few of them are put into y^e^ Alphabetical Index in the end of the Volume.
3. A Journal of the Author's Travels thro' the said Barony. N.B.—In this there are some Coats of Arms at several Seats of y^e^ Gentry omitted in the parochial Accounts.

2. Collections out of Three Books of Pedigrees, Charters, &c. belonging to the Families of Viponts and Cliffords; compiled by order of the Countess of Pembroke, and now in the possession of y^e^ Rt. Honble. the Earl of Thanet.

3. Abbreviations of Words, Law Terms, &c. in old Records explain'd by Sr. W. Dugdale and Mr. Petyt.

4. Extracts from the Charter-Rolls and Escheats in the Tower relating to Lands in Westmerland.

5. The like relating to Cumberland.

6. Collections out of the Register Book of Wederhal Abbey, in y^e^ Custody of y^e^ Dean and Chapter at Carlisle.

7. The like, out of that of Holm Cultram.

Volume V. contains—

1. Several Records belonging to the Family of Machel, sans date.

2. Confirmation of a former Grant by Inspeximus, from a private Lord of a Manor.

3. A Proxy, in matters of Law.

4. Bishop Vipont's Licence for a private Chapel at Berwis, near Appleby.

5. Appropriation of the Churches of Shap and Bampton granted by the Bishop, and confirm'd by the Prior and Chapter of St. Mary's, Carlisle.

6. Sale of a Ward, by Indenture.

7. The King's pardon, particular.

8. The last Will of Guy Machel (anno 1536), and of Anthony Machel (anno 1549).

9. Old Conveyance of the Advowson of Kirkbythore.

10. King John's Erection-charter, granted to Borough of Appleby.

11. The like of Queen Elizabeth to the Free School there.

Volume VI. contains,—

1. Mr. John Denton's Description of Cumberland, in two parts.

2. A Collection of Roman Inscriptions (with a Discourse on them) sent to Dr. Mill in 1692. [Some Draughts referr'd to are wanting here; but are in a fairer Transcript in 4to., which was the book sent by the Author to Oxford].

3. Excerpta ont of Dugdale's Monasticon Angl.

4. Arms of the Chief Families of the two Counties of Cumberland and Westmerland.

5. A Catalogue of the Books and Collections made thereof by Mr. Machel.

6. A Discourse on Titles of Honour in General, and other hasty scraps on y^e^ same subject.

7. Anonymous Description of Cumberland, later than Denton's, written since y^e^ Restoration of King Charles y^e^ Second. The Author's name Sandford.

8. Exemplification of an Inquisition concerning lands at Penrith, Scarby, &c., taken upon the death of Alexander III., King of Scotland.

9. A Book of the Sheriffs of both Counties from y^r^ reign of King Henry the Second.

10. Mr. R. Singleton's full account of his parish of Melmerby.

IV.—A Rental of Holme Cultram Abbey, anno 29 Hen. VIII. In this Book there are also several Indentures from 1708 to 1771; also the custom and manner of succeeding to personal Estates in the Province of York.

V.—A Transcript of the Chartulary or Register Book of Lanercost Priory in the county of Cumberland. The original Chartulary is in the possession of the Earl of Carlisle at Naworth Castle.

ST. MARY'S COLLEGE, OSCOTT, BIRMINGHAM.—Additional Report.

In addition to the manuscripts already described, this library possesses a volume, in folio, upon paper, consisting of 96 folios, (the greater number of which are blank,) in the original binding of white vellum. The title, which is written on the back, is as follows:—

"Compotus spectabilis domini Nicolai de Piccolom, "olim domini Pii Papæ ij. cubicularii secreti, de "introitu et exitu fabricæ Sancti Petri, præsentatus in "Camera per eum cum solito juramento die Lunæ, "XV. mensis Octobris, MCCCCLXIIII.

"Commissarii,

"Dominus Sulimannus de Sulimannis, et

"Dominus Antonius de Forlivio.

"Gaspar Blondus."

The same title, in a somewhat contracted form, is prefixed on the outer cover.

various sums arising from matrimonial causes, by him transferred to the fund for the fabric of St. Peter's Church at Rome, from 1st June 1464 to the last of May 1465.

At the end is a statement to the effect that these accounts had been examined and found accurate by the clerks of the Apostolic Chamber.

JOSEPH STEVENSON.

CORPUS CHRISTI COLLEGE, OXFORD.

Among the muniments of this College (founded in 1516), there are several deeds of conveyance, by the Prior of St. Frideswyde's and the Abbess of Godestowe, of Halls and gardens, Boke's Inn, Urbin Hall and gardeus, and Nun Hall, upon the site of which the College was built.

Liber Admissionum, 1517–1660; a fine folio volume, in rough calf, containing about 150 leaves of vellum. It commences with the first admissions to the College, as newly founded by Bishop Fox: 4th July 1517, John Nordale admitted (probably as Scholar) for two years, by John Clamond, Master, who came from Magdalen College to take office in this.

A paper octavo volume, with parchment cover, being the Inventory-Book of the College for the years 1610, 13, 14. The Fellows it would seem, entered their rooms already partly furnished by the College. One of the earliest items is,—"In three Cloister Chamber, " now Mr. Gorsleton's. Inprimis, a fayr standing " bedsted, with carved vallance, and a testerne waynscotted, and a truckle-bed under it, with mats and " cords to both." The mention of the "truckle-bed" takes us back to the time when it was the usage for each Fellow of the College to have a Scholar living in the same room with him. According to the original Statutes, the Fellow slept in a higher bed, placed above the Scholar's. There are a number of curious entries in this little book.

Memoranda in a long paper scroll, entitled,—"Mr. " Doctor Taylor and Robert Kuyleford, their expenses " in riding to London, in Hillarie Terme, about divers " suites of the Colledgies and Robert Englefeild, riding " thence, who went about the sale of certeine under" wode, going forth the xxth of January 1597."

An "Inventorie of College Articles" in the possession of the President, consisting of plate and other things; of the middle of the 17th century.

A paper Inventory, date 1623, entitled,—"An Inventorie of all such goods and implements as belong " to C. C. in Oxon., which are in every severall " chamber, beginning at the porter's lodge." In p. 10 there is this note added to the context, in a somewhat later hand,—" I found also in the inner chamber one " hulbert. I found also a large mapp of y^e^ Land of " Canaan. Item, a crucifixe in frame and coloured. " Item, a great chaire of wood. Item, an old leatheir " chaire. Item, a little table, with a frame. A hulbert " in the study, and a curteine for the window. Ita " testor, Thomas Greaves." In p. 19, "The chamber " late Mr. Holliday's," is named; qy. if Barton Holliday, the poet. If so, the fact of his having belonged to this College was unknown to Antony Wood. In p. 33, under "The rooms late Mr. Twyne's," (the studious Bryan Twyne), the appliances for books are far more numerous than in any other chamber, as—"At the east end a rowe " of shelves for bookes in folio, conteyning 6 shelves. " A rowe for bookes in 4to behind the dore, conteyning " 6 shelves. A rowe for 8° bookes on the north side, " conteyning 7 shelves. A rowe of shelves for books " in folio under the east end windows, conteyning 3 " shelves. Two rowes of shelves for books in 16^mo^ in " the westerne windowe, one rowe conteyning 5 shelves, " the other three. A rowe of shelves for bookes in 8vo " behind the dore, on the right hand coming in, con" teyning 7 shelves. A deske over the chimney. A " standing cupborde with locke and key." In p. 49 is named,—"The next higher chamber, late Mr. Hooker's." The remembrance of Richard Hooker was probably especially cultivated here, as many years must have elapsed since he held the room. He was elected Scholar in 1573 edat. 19, Fellow in 1577, and left the College about 1584. Several books are enumerated as forming part of the stock of his former chamber, not improbably left by him there, as a kind of heirloom. P. 55, "In the "second cloyster, lately Mr. Beelye's, now in—Pocock," meaning Edward Pocock, afterwards the celebrated divine and orientalist. In p. 59, "Mr. Newlin's Cham" ber" is named. He was afterwards ejected as President, then restored. In p. 31 there are two signatures, under 1622 and 23, by Edmund Stanton, afterwards the President intruded by Parliament in place of Dr. Newlin. This interesting volume is in small quarto form, and contains 61 pages filled; it does not seem to have ever had a cover. There are also some loose leaves of a similar nature, date 1631–41. In most instances, as in the preceding Inventory, the list of articles is signed by the in-coming Fellow.

A quarto paper volume, in a vellum cover, such cover being a fragment apparently of a work on Canon Law; containing charges for building the College, in the 8th year of Henry VIII. (1517). Its contents are of considerable interest, and seem to merit a close examination. It begins,—"This boke, made the viii day " off the reigne of Kyng Herry the Eygth, ffrom the " second day off March unto the xvi day off the same " moneth." The first item is,—"In primis, paid to " Master Wottone for v hunderd off drye planche bord " after iii s. the hunderd, xv s." In the middle of the same page,—" Memorandum, to the said Johan for " pavyng off the wood-yard to the kechyn, to fynd hym " stone and sond, and he to have ffor his labours vi d. " for every tease [toise], the summe off the teasys iiii " teasys . . . Memorandum, to the said Johan for " pavyng off halff the strette ffrom the wood-yard gate " by the wall off Merton College to the corner off the wall " next unto Canterbury College iii score and ix teasys; " and ffrom the said corner to the garden gate by Seynt " Ffrideswyde is wall, which conteyneth xlvii teasys, " to have found hym stonne and sand, taking for every " tease vi d. . . . Item, paid to John Greeson " for xii plankes off asche off xvi foote off lengyth and " xxi yuchis in breddyth, ffor a knedyng trooffe, pastery " bord, and table for chambers, at xviii d. the pese— " xviii s."

In p. 5,—" Item borowyd att Magdalene College one " C off v d. nayle, a C off vi d. nayle, dimid C x d. " nayle." Magdalen College not only found the rising houses a Master, but was its model in other respects also. In the same page,—" Covenanted and agreed wyth " Cornell Clerke ffor the makyng off the dextis [desks] " in the Liberary to the summe of xvi, after the maner " and ffiorme as they be in Magdaleyne College, except " the popie [poppy] heades off the seite. Thes to be " workmanly wrowght and cleuly, and he to have alle " maner off stooff ffoond hym, and to have ffor the " makyng off one dexte (x s.), the summe off the hole " viii l."

In p. 7,—" Memorandum, paid to Johan Townsend " for the pavyng of the quadrant (part of the quad" rangle) takyn by the teese." In p. 45 there is an account for digging the foundation of the cloisters.

The book ends with the account for work done between the 10th and 24th of October in the same year, and contains 60 pages in all.

A Letter or Declaration, apparently the original, on foolscap paper, written by Dr. Delaune, President of St. John's College,—who was afterwards so remorselessly persecuted for his alleged Jacobite tendencies, by the unscrupulous Nicholas Amherst.—The Letter is as follows, but the occasion on which it was written does not appear:—" Know all men by these presents, that I, " William Delaune, President of St. John's College, " am desirous to consent to the sequestration of my " headship of St. John's, my parsonage of Hanborough, " and Prebend of Winchester, for the better securing " a debt due from me to the Chancellour, Masters, and " Scholars, of the University of Oxford; and, in order " to it, will be ready at any time to sign and seal " writings as Council learned in the law shall direct. " And do hereby, as farr as in me lyes, transferr all my " right and title to the profits of the places aforesaid, " untill such debt be discharg'd, into the hands of the " Chancellour, Masters, and Scholars, of the said Uni" versity. Sign'd this 15th July 1709 by me

" W. Delaune."

" Signed in the presence of Geo. Cooper."

The College also possesses folio Lease-books in great numbers, and in good preservation.

My best thanks are due to the Reverend Dr. Norris, the President, for the courtesy with which he gave me access to the Muniment-room of the College, and the pains he took in calling my attention to such items among its archives as were most likely to merit notice in this Report. Nor must the good offices so readily rendered me by E. L. Hicks, Esq., Fellow and Tutor of the College, and R. Laing, Esq., Fellow and Lecturer, be allowed by me to pass without acknowledgment.

Exeter College, Oxford.

These books and documents are described in the order in which they were shown to me by Mr. Boase, Tutor of the College, and Librarian.—

A Register; a small folio paper volume, bound in old rough calf, and containing about 300 pages, beginning in A.D. 1541, and ending in 1619. At the commencement are inserted, on five written leaves of that date, but of smaller size than the rest of the volume,—"Injunctions "delivered to Exeter College, by the Commissaries "for visiting the University in the reign of King "Edward VI., A.D. 1548." At the end of the "Injunc- "tions" is a note, in a modern hand.—"These injunc- "tions were circular, being given to all the Colleges in "Oxford, excepting some variations in a clause or two "immediately before the conclusion. In the injunc- "tions here given to Exeter Coll. the peculiarities are "the four last Articles.—1. Making the Rectorship "perpetual. 2. The order relating to stipends. 3. For "the Chaplain to read Morning Prayers, and to admi- "nister the Sacrament. 4. That controversies shall be "referred to the Chancellor of the University. The "like injunctions, given to Oriel College, are printed "by Hearne at the end of his edition of Trokelowe "Annales Edw. II., Oxon., 1729." The whole of this book is occupied with entries relative to the elections and admissions of Fellows and Scholars, resignations, and leaves of absence. There are many entries pasted in this volume with the signature of John Petre, probably the representative of Sir William Petre, in Elizabeth's time, the Second Founder of the College. The book contains a large amount of matter that is purely Collegiate; but some of these entries would probably be found to be of considerable interest.

A Second Register, small folio, containing about 200 leaves of paper, in modern binding; it begins A.D. 1619, and ends in 1737. In this volume, which is of a similar nature to the preceding one, a great number of letters and documents, relative to College business, are inserted.

A large paper volume of Excerpts from the Registers, 1539–1786; a collection made by Dr. Stinton, Rector of the College, in the last century.

Liber Bursarii, the Bursar's Book, a paper small folio, bound in parchment, containing 52 pages, composed by Henry Tozer, Fellow and Bursar in 1636, one of the Royalist Fellows of the College who were ultimately ejected. Its title is,—"Directions for the Bursar and "Butler—script. anno 1636." There are two copies, similar in every way, one probably intended for the Bursar's use, the other for the Butler. The contents of this work seem to be curious.

A small quarto volume, its contents being—"Copies of "all the several Letters and Papers relating to the "dispute between Dr. Hole, Rector of Exeter Coll., "and some of the Fellows of the said Coll., in the year "1720." In the handwriting of Bishop Conybeare, who was a Fellow of the College, and afterwards Rector. There are also some other letters in the volume.

Bursars' Books, from about the year 1700, in great numbers.

A large folio volume of about 400 leaves, in old calf binding. Its written title is,—"A bo wherein is regis- "trei and transcribed Evidences and records belonging "to Exeter College in Oxon., anno Domini 1631." On the margin, and below the title, is written in a modern hand,—"This book was purchased A.D. 1614, cost 15/8. "See Solnt. Comp. Rect. hoc anno." The contents are, (the first five items being entered in a hand of the 17th century):—"1. Charter of Incorporation by Queen "Elizabeth, a folio prime et 5 inclusive, anno regni "octavo. 2. Articles of agreement indented between "Sir William Petre and the College, anno Elizabethæ "octavo. 3. Sir William Petre's general Deed of Gift, "conveying the endowments for his Fellows. 4. Queen "Elizabeth's gift of Kidlington mills. 5. Queen Eliza- "beth's Grant of Kidlington Rectory." The following items are in various hands of the 18th century:—"6. The "title of Exeter College new Hall. 7. Transcripts "of early Charters belonging to the College, chiefly "conveyances of Halls, forming the site of the existing "College. 8. Instruments relating to the building and "consecration of the original Chapel of the Founder."—It may be here remarked that the site of Exeter College absorbs entirely the ancient Parish of St. Mildred's.

Liber Cautionum, or Caution Book; a paper folio volume, bound in parchment, beginning 30th of May 1629, and ending 17th of July 1686. From the nature of its preliminary matter it is evident that this book was commenced by Henry Tozer, already named.

Liber Cautionum, the second volume; beginning 17th of July 1686, and ending 18th of January 1743.

Liber Cautionum, the third volume; only partly filled.

An Index to the three Libri Cautionum, from May 1629 to February 1776.

A Copy of a List of Rectors and Fellows of the College; the original, now lost, having been made by Robert Newton, Rector, and W. Wyatte, Sub-Rector, in 1574. Of this copy again there is a revised copy, by Th. C. Leach, a Cornish Fellow of the College, in 1780, a small quarto volume. This last has been continued to the present day: against many of the names particulars of their subsequent fortunes and writings are entered, containing matter, in many instances, of considerable interest.

Mr. Boase called my attention to a printed black-letter Psalter, of 58 pages, in the College Library, with this title on the colophon:—"Psalterium, cum Hymnis, "secundum morem et consuetudinem Nigrorum Mona- "chorum Abendonensis Monasterii, explicit anno Salu- "tifere Nativitatis Domini M.D. vicesimo octavo, pridie "Idus Septembris." From the entries in writing inserted at the beginning of the Kalendar to this Psalter, it is evident that it formerly belonged to a Roman Catholic family of the name of "Cooke." It has the obit of Richard Pates, Bishop of Worcester (deprived probably in 1559), making the day on which he died to have been the 9th of the Kalends of December (23rd of November) 1565, a fact which does not appear in Le Neve or any similar work: also, the obit of Nicholas Harpsfeld (Sacerdotis) in 1575, eight years before the date hitherto usually assigned to that event.

Among the documents in the College Muniment-room, or Treasury, there are several letters and papers relative to the demand made, in 1642, of the College plate, in support of the cause of Charles the First. On the demand being made, the Rector and Fellows sent a Petition to his Majesty, representing that they considered themselves strictly bound to preserve their plate. To this an answer was given, signed "Tho. Aylesbury," and bearing date the 28th of January 1642, endorsed—"On the Petition of the Coll.," stating that "His Majesty did not expect, in a time when the Com- "monwealth of learning is in such danger, and the "Colleges themselves not like to outlive his Majesty, "he shall be destroyed in this rebellion, &c." On their immediate submission, another letter was written, dated the 30th of January, and signed by Aylesbury, beginning—"His Majesty graciously accepts the submis- "sion of the Rector and Fellows of Exeter Colledge to "the desires of his letter of the 6th of Jannary, and is "very well contented that a reservation be made of "their Communion plate, which his Majesty never "expected upon his former letter." A receipt follows, bearing date the 2nd of February, to the following effect:—"Received of the Rector and Fellowes of y^e "Colledge of Exeter in Oxford, in plate for his Ma- "jesty's service, by them presented as followeth: in "white, 206 lb. 4 oz. 18 dwt.; for guilt plate, 38 lb. "0 oz. 3 dwt.: total, 246 lb. 5 oz. 1 dwt. (Signed) "Wm. Parkhurst, Thos. Bushell." On the 12th of June in the previous year a present of 300*l.* had already been given by the College to the King, for which there is a receipt among these papers. On the 21st of June 1643 a fresh requisition was made for pay for his Majesty's foot-soldiers,—"at 4*s.* the weeke (for one "month) as they think fit." These letters and papers are nine in number. In consequence of the stringency of the above requisitions no portion of the ancient College plate has survived, with the exception, as the Rector informed me, of a silver saltcellar and an ostrich egg set in silver gilt. The latter is very similar in general appearance to the so-called grippyhey (or vulture's egg) still preserved at Corpus Christi College, Cambridge (see the preceding Report of this Commission, p. 66), with the exception that in the Exeter College relic the setting is more massive, and of a somewhat more recent date. The covercle is evidently of a later date than the rest of the work.

The following particulars as to the Charters and early deeds of this College are extracted from a valuable and very lucid Report on the subject, made, by direction of the Rector and Fellows, by Mr. William Henry Black, and dated 26th of June 1835.—

6. Godstowe's tenement; granted to the College at a yearly rental of 12 shillings, by the Abbess of Godstowe, 1318.
7. Hambury Hall; 9 Charters, from about 1270 or 1280 to 35 Edward III.
8. Peter Hall; one deed of Oseney Abbey, 10 Edward IV.
9. Scheld Hall; 14 Charters or deeds, between about 1285 and 1344.
10. Scot Hall; 8 Charters, 18 Edward II. to 1 Edward III.
11. St. Stephen's Hall; 19 Charters, from 1284, or earlier (3 being without date), to 11 Edward III., including some in reference to the Lavendrie, granted, with St. Stephen's Hall, by Master Peter Skelton.

Tenements situate in other Parishes in Oxford:—

Magdalen Parish; Bataille Hall, 4 deeds, 14 Edward II.

St. Michael's Parish; Ledyn Porche (afterwards known as "Ledyn Hall"), 7 Charters, 27 Edward I. to — Edward III. This tenement was given by the Founder (Walter de Stapledon, Bishop of Exeter) in the 16th of Edward II.

St. Peter's in the Bailey; Carole Hall and another tenement; the two acquired by the College in 1388 and 1458; 45 Charters, from 1234, 5, to 15 Edward IV.

St. Martin's Parish; Gyngyvere's Place, two deeds, 7 Henry IV. and 14 Edward IV.

Either the Parish of St. Mary Magdalen, or of St. Giles; Robyns' tenement in St. Giles's Street without the North Gate, acquired in the 18th of Edward IV.; 14 deeds, 8 Henry IV. to 3 Henry VII.

Two deeds, relating to a tenement, or school, apparently in Cat Street; one of the 7th of Edward III., the other only a fragment without date.

Twenty-three documents containing Statutes and ancient deeds, relating to the privileges and proceedings of the College from the time of its foundation.

Royal Charters or Patents, and other Letters under the Royal Seal, 21 documents, 3 comparatively modern.

Ancient Charters and Instruments, relating to Benefices impropriated unto the College, 65 in number.

Numerous other ancient Charters and deeds, relating to other estates of the College. The total number of charters and deeds is 462.

The Computi of this College, still in existence, begin at a very remote date, though unfortunately the earliest among them have suffered greatly from the effects of damp and former neglect. They commence, each of them, with the name of the then Rector, or Master, of the College, who, in the early times of the house, held office for only two years; at the end of that period another being appointed, or the former Rector re-elected. As already noticed, it was only in the year 1548 that the Rector was first appointed to hold the office for life. The Computi, when examined by me, were mingled indiscriminately in the College chest, but in giving the following list of those belonging to the 14th century, with some occasional extracts, I have endeavoured to bring them into chronological sequence. In some instances there are two Computi for a single year, and in many cases as many as four: a great proportion of them, especially for the first half of the 14th century, have probably perished. Of those belonging to the 15th century, many in number, my limited time would not allow me to take any details:—

The earliest of these Computi that I was able to meet with, is that of Stephen de Pippecote, Rector, 1324; the next, of John de Sevenevasshe, Rector, 1325, 26 (2); John de Kelly, 1326; Richard de Pyn, 1329 (2); "Computus Magistri Henrici de Tuuertone, Rectoris Scholarum de la Stapeldone Hall, 1333, 4;" William de Polnorva, 1337 (afterwards of Queen's College; in 1350 he was Chancellor of the University; he also held the offices of Archdeacon of Middlesex and Prebendary of Windsor, and died in 1362); Robert Trethewy, 1354, 5 (2); Robert Trethewy, 1355; Robert Trethewy, 1356 (3); John Halle, 1357 (3); John Halle, 1358 (3); John Halle, 1359; John Wyscburgh, 1359; a fragment of a roll, belonging to 1359 or 60; Robert de Clist, 1359; Robert de Clist, 1360 (2); Robert de Clist, 1361 (2); Robert de Clist, 1362 (2); Robert de Clist, 1363 (4); Robert de Clist, 1364 (2); Robert de Clist, 1365 (3); Robert Blakedone, 1366 (3); John Otery, 1367 (3); John Otery, 1368 (4); Thomas Kelly, 1368; Thomas Kelly, 1369 (2); John Dagenet, 1372 (2); Robert de Lideforde, 1374 (2); John More, 1374 (2); John More, 1375 (2); Thomas Worthe, 1375; Thomas Worthe, 1376; Thomas Worthe, 1377; John Hemeri, Sub-rector, for Thomas Wit, or Wyt, 1378; Richard Broun, Sub-rector, 1378; Richard Brom, Rector, 1378, 9 (3); Lawrence Steyyne, 1379; William Talkarne, about 1380; William Slade, 1380 (2); William Slade, 1381; William Slade, 1382; William Slade, 1383 (2); Thomas Dyer, 1385; Thomas Dyer, 1386; Thomas Dyer 1388; Thomas Hendyman, 1389 (Chancellor of the University, 1395–7); Richard Marke, 1390 (2); Richard Marke, 1391; Elias Stoke, 1391; Elias Stoke, 1392 (2); Elias Stoke, 1393; Robert Marshal, 1394; John Gynne, 1396 (2); John Gynne, 1397; John Gynne, 1399.

The following are a few (translated) extracts from the surviving Computi of the 14th century, as above enumerated. Taken as a whole, they are full of interesting matter, and, if thoroughly examined, much of the early history of the College might be recovered from them.

The Computus of John de Kelly, 1326, gives an account of the resources of the College within a few years of its foundation (A.D. 1314):—"First, he renders "account of 25*l.* 19*s.* 11½*d.*, his arrears in the preceding "term. He also renders account of 13 marks received "by the hands of the bailiff of Bampton, in full pay"ment of 20*l.*, of which the Dean and Chapter of Exeter "have acquittance. He also renders account of 10 "marks received of the goods of the house by the hands "of Sir Gilbert de Colshull. He renders account of "12*s.*, payment made from the Batayl Hall (le pensione "la Hert Halle); of 7*s.*, payment from the Ledene"porche; of 6*s.*, payment from the Scoch Hall; of 6*s.*, "payment from the Batayl Hall; of 5*s.* 4*d.*, payment "from the Schild Hall; of 3*s.*, payment from the Arthur "Hall." In the same account there is an expenditure of 4*l.* 6*s.* 11*d.* upon new buildings, and 21*s.* 2*d.* upon books. These "pensiones," it may be added, were payments for the occupation of rooms in the respective halls.

In one of the Computi of Robert Trethewy, 1354, 5, mention is made of the redemption of a Bible, which had lain as security for repayment of 60*s.* in Langgeton's chest (a loan-fund which had been given some years before to the University by John Langton, Bishop of Chichester, and Lord Chancellor; see Anstey's Munimenta Acad., p. 133); and in the same roll, as in many others of about this date, the "nunsyns," or noon drinks, given to workmen, are frequently mentioned; one of the early forms, no doubt, of the words "nun"cheon" and "luncheon" (see the First Report of this Commission, p. 84, col. 2).

In one of the Computi of Robert de Clist, or Clyst, 1360, there is an item,—"Paid 8*d.* for the expenses of "our parishioners of West Wyttenham, on the day of "the Decollation of St. John the Baptist, when there "was a play:"—in allusion probably to a Mystery performed in Oxford on that day. The living of West Wyttenham, now known as Long, or Earl's, Wittenham, is still in the possession of this College.

In one of the Computi of the same Robert de Clist, for 1362, mention is made of John Trevysa, afterwards a Fellow of Queen's College, in this University, whose name is still remembered as one of the early translators of Ralph Higden's Polychronicon. Allusion is also made to the disastrous results of the great storm of wind on the 8th of January in this year, (see the Memorials of London, p. 398).—The Rector, among other things, renders account for "the allowances (dietis) of John Trevyse, who came into commons on Sunday in the same "week. . . . He also renders account of 46*s.* 8*d.* paid "to the stone-masons who erected the wall on the side "of the pleasure-garden (disportum), where formerly "was situate Castel Halle . . . . . of 18*s.* paid to a "tiler who repaired all our houses after the great "[wind], ... He also renders account of 3*d.* paid "for cords, nails, and thread, and for repairing the "Sepulchre [in the College Chapel] against the Feast "of Easter. . . . He also renders account of 6*s.* 8*d.* "paid to a plumber for his services, when he repaired "our chancel at West Wyttenham, after the great "wind."

The following, with some few omissions, is a translation of one of the Computi of the same Rector for the year 1364.—"First, he renders account of 1*d.* paid for

" wine for the Chapel. Also, he renders account of 2*d*. " paid for the mending of one mazer cup for the use of " the house. . . . Also, of 6*d*. paid for the expenses of " two parishioners of West Wyttenham, when they " came to give notice of the Visitation of the Arch- " deacon. Also, of 12*d*. paid for the hire of two horses, " when the Rector and another Fellow went to West " Wyttenham, upon the Archdeacon's Visitation. Also, " of 2*s*. 1*d*. for the expenses of the persons aforesaid " upon such business. . . . Also, of 1*d*. paid for wine " for the Chapel. Also, of 12*d*. paid for hire of two " horses when the Rector and John Treyvan were at West " Wyttenham, to make composition with the farmers " there for building a barn. Also, for 8*d*. paid to a " rattoner, who destroyed the rattons (rattones, rats) in " the chambers of the Fellows. . . . . Also, of 3*s*. 4*d*. " paid for red earth (rubea terrula) to make the wall of " the pleasure-garden. Also, of 3*s*. 4*d*. paid to Dan " for "Sir"—Domino—the title of a Bachelor of Arts] " Robert Bossoyn, on his visiting his friends. Also, " of 3*s*. 4*d*. paid to William Middelworthy for the same. " Also, of 3*s*. 4*d*. paid to Robert Rygge for the same. " Also, of 3*s*. 4*d*. paid to Robert Smithdone for the same. " Also, of 3*s*. 4*d*. to John Otery for the same. Also, of " the expenses of Eustace (Eustachii) and other pa- " rishioners on the Sunday after the Feast of St. Giles. " . . . Also, of 11*d*. paid for a door of the school " (scolæ). . . . . Also, of 11*d*. paid for the expenses of " the Rector and one servant, when they were at the " Archdeacon's of Barkshire, to obtain a release of the " sequestration of the fruits of West Wyttenham. Also, " of 5*d*. for the hire of one horse on that business. " Also, of 10*d*. paid for wax candles for the Chapel. " Also, of 4*d*. paid for tallow candles, at various times, " for the Chapel. Also, of 9*s*. 4*d*. paid to our farmers " for mending our barn at West Wyttenham. Also, of " 8*d*. paid for mending the walls thereof. Also, of " 7*s*. 2*d*. paid for straw for covering the stable. Also, of " 8*d*. paid for the carriage thereof. Also, of 8*s*. 1*d*. paid " for planks (asseribus) to make the doors of the cham- " bers beneath the Chapel. Also, of 8*d*. paid for the " carriage thereof, for the expenses of a certain man " who went on that business 2*d*. Also, of 10*s*. 5*d*. paid " to the workmen who made the wall of the pleasure- " garden. Also of 11*d*. paid for bread and drink given " to them at the hour of none ['hora nona,' the ninth " hour, or 3 in the afternoon, the 'nuncheon,' 'none- " 'chenche,' or 'nuusyn' mentioned above]. Also, of " 8*d*. paid to Nicholas, for Maunple, for straw for the " use of the house. Also, of 6*d*. paid for expenses when " he was at West Wyttenham, to see how the barn had " been prepared. Also, of 5*d*. paid for hire of a horse " on that business. Also, of 2*s*. 11*d*. paid for nails and " pitch for the use of the house. . . . Also, of 3*s*. paid " to a carpenter for his pay for one week, and 3*d*. for " his bread and drink at the hour of none. Also, of " 2*s*. 3*d*. to the same carpenter for his pay another " week, and 1*d*. for his bread and drink at the hour of " none. . . . . Also, of 10*d*. paid for parchment, paper, " and wax, for the business of the house throughout the " whole year. Also, of 20*d*. paid on the exchange of " gold for the use of the house throughout the whole " year. Also, of 3*s*. 4*d*. paid for the expenses of Robert " Blakedone and Middelworthi, when they were " attended at Easter upon the business of the house."

It deserves notice that from an item in the above Computus, it appears that the first Chapel of the College was built with chambers underneath. This was replaced by the Chapel, which was begun A.D. 1622, and finished in the time of Dr. Hakewill, Rector; and which, in its turn, has been replaced by the present Chapel, built on its site.—It also deserves remark that the Eustace, mentioned above, along with the "other parishioners" (of West Wittenham), appears in the succeeding Computi for many years, in general under the name of "Staci" or "Stace." He appears to have been an agent of the College, and evidently a very useful and active one, in the management of its property and general business in connexion with Abingdon and West Wittenham.

In another of the Computi of the same Robert de Clist occur the following items.—"He also renders account " of 12*d*. paid for a small bell for the Chapel. Also, " of 9*d*. paid to a woman who prepared the straw for " covering the wall of the pleasure-garden. Also, of 5*s*. " paid for a cross erected above the Chapel, and for iron " for the same. . . . . for a plank (assere) upon " which to fasten our Legend in the Chapel."

In one of the Computi of Robert Blakedone for 1366, are the following items, bearing reference to the production of books at that date.—"He also renders " account of 8*s*. 9*d*. paid to William Hillary for the " writing of a certain book called "Domyltone." Also, " of 14½*d*. paid for parchment for the same book. Also, " of 3*s*. 4*d*. paid for the illumination of the same, " and of the Sophismata of Heytesbiry. Also, of 2*s*. 1*d*. " paid for the binding of the same." By "Domyl- " tone" no doubt is meant John de Dumbleton, who wrote a treatise "De Insolubilibus," and a "Summa " Logicæ et Philosophiæ." Manuscripts of these works are still preserved in the Libraries of Merton College and Magdalen College, Oxford. A manuscript copy also of the "Sophismata" of William Heytesbury is in the Library of St. John's College.

In the Computus of John Ottery for Lent Term 1368, occur, among others, the following items.—"First, he " renders account of 45*s*. paid for drink and fire, and a " feast on the eve of St. Thomas and the day of . . . . " Also of 4*s*. 9*d*. paid to the carpenters who made the " palace [? store-room] here at the door of the hall. " Also, of 10*d*. paid for planks for the palace. Also, of " 3½*d*. paid for bread and drink given to poor persons " who helped the cook in the pleasure-garden. . . . . " Also, of 2*s*. 6*d*. paid to a messenger, for the carriage " of books from Exeter. Also of 12*d*. paid for seeds " for the pleasure-garden."

"Expenses upon outdoor matters.—First he renders " account of 7*s*. paid to the maneiple and cook for his " services in the preceding term; to the laundress 5*s*. " for two preceding terms; to the barber 2*s*. for the " two preceding terms. To John Lokiere [the Lock- " smith] 21*d*. for 12 clickets (elicoriis, latchkeys) to the " garden gate. Also, to the same, for mending the lock " and key of the common chest, and the lock to the " Chapel, and for putting small iron hooks where the " Fellows are wont to sit in Chapel, near the door, and " for drink for the same, 6*d*. Also, to the same for " an iron chain for a book which is called 'Rabanus " 'de Naturis Rerum,' 10*d*. . . . . Also, for a lock " for the Chapel at the Feast of Easter, 2*s*. Also, for " making an iron rake, a bucket (ciclus), a rivet, and " a pair, 7*d*. Also, for nails for the Chapel Sepulchre, " 1*d*.; for thread for the Sepulchre, ½*d*. For seeds for " the garden, 14½*d*. For a servant, working in the " garden, six days, 5*d*. For making a wall near the " well, 3*d*. Also, for wood for the same wall, 2½*d*. For " bricks, 3*d*. For cement, 4*d*. For nails, 1*d*. For making " a bucket, 1*d*. For iron for the same, 1*d*. Also, for " iron, and making a cord for the door, 2½*d*. " Also, for the exchange of broken gold, 8*d*. Also, " paid to the Abbess of Godestowe, 6*s*. Also, for a " dinner for Staci, and wine, 17*d*. For breakfast for " Staci, on another occasion, 3*d*. Also, to John Heneri " 3*s*., for a visit to his friends. . . . Also, for wax " for the University seal, 1*d*. Also, for the determi- " nants, 13*s*. 4*d*., with the consent of all and singular. " Also, for the expenses of two Fellows and one servant " with three horses, sent on two occasions from Oxford " into Devonshire, about the business of the house " aforesaid, a fortnight on each occasion, 8 marks. " Also, for the expenses of two Fellows going to London " to seek . . . . of the house aforesaid, 13*s*. 4*d*. " Also, for boots for them, 6*s*. 2*d*. Also, for spurs for " them, 22*d*. . . . . Also, for wax for the Chapel, " at the Feast of Pentecost, 2*s*. 7½*d*. For a dinner to " Staci and his servant, once, in hall, 2*d*. For rooters- " up (eradiatoribus) in the garden, 2*s*. 7*d*. Also, for " dinner and wine for Staci, 2*s*. 2*d*. Also, for gawdy " (gaudiis) upon the Translation of St. Thomas [3rd " July] . . . . . He also renders " account of 13*s*. 4*d*. paid to Thomas Filly—— with " consent of all and singular."

In one of the Computi of John More, for "Summer " Term" (Terminus Æstivalis) 1375, occurs this curious item:—"Also, he renders account of 11½*d*. paid for " wine for Thomas Westone, who was judge (judice) " between our house and Thomas Kelly, as to a certain " book belonging to our house which had been pledged " in the name of Kelly." Kelly was probably the former Rector of the College in 1368, 9.

In one of the Computi of William Slade, for the year 1383, there is an account for building the College Library, the principal contributors to it being Thomas Bryntyngham, Bishop of Exeter, who gave ten pounds, and John More (probably a former Rector of the College in 1374, 5), Rector of St. Peter's, Exeter, who gave twenty pounds. An early item in it is,—"Gloves for the " carpenters, 6*d*." The stone was bought at Teyntone and at Watlo (Taynton, near Witney, and Whatley, near Frome, in Somerset, still known for their freestone). Another item is,—"He also renders account of 8½*d*. paid " to the stone-masons for their dinner on the last day " (of the building)." " Morende," or breakfasts, for the masons are mentioned in the account, and dinners and drink for the carriers of the stone and other materials. When finished, the Library was roofed with lead, and then " dawbed," probably with a thick solution of red earth (terra rubea), there being an item of 2s. 6d. for that material used in the building.

It is with much pleasure that I acknowledge my obligations to Dr. Lightfoot, Rector of Exeter College, for the kind and courteous manner in which he received me, on my first making application to him, in response to his Letter to the Commissioners, for permission to inspect the College archives; and in no less a degree, for the interest he took in providing me with every possible facility for prosecuting my researches. My best thanks are also greatly due to the Reverend Charles William Boase, Fellow and Tutor of the College, and Librarian, for the valuable assistance which he so unsparingly afforded me, in giving me the benefit of his intimate acquaintance with the archives and former history of his college.

HENRY THOMAS RILEY.

JESUS COLLEGE, OXFORD.

Though the records and archives of this College, other than purely muniments of title, are comparatively few in number, my thanks are none the less due to the Reverend the Principal, Dr. Williams, for the courteous manner in which he gave me access to them, and personally called my attention to several manuscripts in the Library; all of which latter, however, upon examination, we found already described in Mr. Coxe's Catalogue.—

A Register-Book, containing 79 leaves of paper, of foolscap shape and size, bound in parchment; the entries commencing in 1602. The hands in which this little book is written are very varied, and some of them so crabbed and difficult to decipher, that in the latter part of last century the College came to an agreement to have its contents transcribed into a large paper folio volume, in rough calf, some fifty of whose leaves are occupied with its contents. The title of the older book is " Liber Collegii Jesu in Universitate Oxon., ex dono " Johannis Williams, in Sacra Theologia Doctoris et " Professoris, et Principalis ejusdem Collegii, July 12, " 1602." Generally speaking, the " Acta," or " Gesta," of the house are set forth in this volume; with several lists of plate that had been presented to the College,—indeed, in very considerable quantities. One is an inventory of " Plate bestowed since Sir Eubule Thel- " wall came to be Principall," with the addition,—" All " layd up in a chest that is in the study over the gate, " except those pieces delivered to Edward Gorgate, " butler of Jesus College." It would appear that this portion of the College plate must have been melted down for the use of King Charles I., with little exception, if any. Letters of attorney and copies of conveyances also occupy a part of the volume, with elections of Principals, Fellows, and Scholars.

In fol. 55a, is the following entry:—" Wee the Prin- " cipal and Fellowes of Jesu Colledge doe decree that " whereas heretofore such as were adorn'd with any " degree out of the said College were charged with a " necessary burthen of entertaynment in the hall, (we) " should now divert the same moneyes towards the fur- " nishing of our Libraryе, or any other ornament which " the Principall and major part of Fellowes shall judge " fit, and to bee rated (? assessed) according to the " degrees in their severall faculties, as followeth:—A " Doctor in any faculty three pounds, a Bachelor in " any of the supreme faculties fortye shillings, a Master " of Arts 20 shillings, a Bachelor of Arts, being com- ' moner 20 shillings, if batteller teune shillings." Signed by Sir Eubule Thelwall, the Principal, and eight Fellows.

Bursars' Account-Book, 1st volume, a paper folio volume, in rough calf. It begins in 1631—" The ac- " conut of Michael Roberts, Bursar," and ends in 1650.

Bursars' Account-Book, vol. 2, a paper folio volume. It begins in 1651—" The accounts of James Vaughan, " Bursar," and ends apparently in 1660. It contains Manciples' accounts also for a later date.

Bursars' Account-Book, vol. 3, a paper folio volume, bound in rough calf. It begins with the accounts of Edward Jeffreys, Bursar, in 1661, and ends in 1686.

A folio volume, written on vellum throughout, in a most exquisite hand. On its title-page is written,— " Hæc KEIMHAIA excellentissimi Domini, Domini " Leolini Jenkins, in honoris et delectæ observantiæ " testimonium, dono dedit Willielmus Wynne, hujus " collegii quondam Commensalis, et Artium Bacca- " laureus, modo Medii Templi Barristerius, MDCCXXIV. " Quibus apposuit suam Reverendissimi Prasulis, " Francisci Roffensis, Defensionem in Primo Procerum, " Mali ix° et xi°, A.D. MDCCXXII." After this come, entered in various ornate hands,—" The names of such " worthy Benefactors as have contributed toward the " finishing the building in the second quadrangle, " together with the respective sums given by them to " the purpose." Then,—" A Catalogue of the severall " pieces of plate belonging to Jesus Colledge, with the " names of the respective gentlemen who bestowed " them, with their severall weights." This latter list of names is singularly numerous. The names, in a handwriting in imitation of print, begin at folio 10, and, down to folio 14, are so exquisitely done that they might readily be mistaken for print; after which, there are some entries in a handwriting of inferior merit. These gifts were all subsequent to the Restoration of King Charles II.

The other end of the volume begins with another list, in fine handwriting in the flourishing style,—" Nomina " et cognomina eorum, cujuscunque gradus, digni- " tatis, aut sexus, fuerint, qui bibliothecam libris, " Collegium vasis argenteis aut aureis, pecuniis nume- " ratis, aliove quovis genere, dotarunt et ampliarunt." The name of the industrious and skilful writer of the volume occurs on folio 19 at this end,—" Willielmus " Parry, S.T.B., hujus Collegii nuper Socius, Rector " Ecclesiæ de Shipston supra Stower, et Capellæ de " Tidmington in agro Vigorniensi, scripsit hæc MSS. " hoc Registro addere solicitatus est, in usum Collegii, " a se Typo-mimice descripta, et dono data, A.D. 1732. " —1. The Life of the Rev. Dr. Mansel, in 12mo. 2. " Collegii Jesu Oxon., ex fundatione Reginæ Eliza- " bethæ, Statuta, folio." Mr. Parry's imitations in this volume of the usual typography of his time, both Roman and italic, are of singular merit; and the same may be said of the execution of a Life of Dr. Mansel, supposed to have been written by Sir Leoline Jenkins, and his copy of the College Statutes, above mentioned, both of which are carefully preserved in the College Library. The volume just described is only about half filled.

HENRY THOMAS RILEY.

LINCOLN COLLEGE, OXFORD.

The following books, constituting the archives of the College, were placed before me by the Reverend Mark Pattison, the Rector; to whom I take this opportunity of expressing my obligations for the courtesy and kind attention I received at his hands.—

A small folio paper book, the cover consisting of several leaves of parchment pasted together. Though the contents begin in the 15th, the pagination probably belongs to the 17th, century. The first entry is in small faint characters, partly obliterated.—" Memorandum, " quod 10° die Martii, anno Domini [illegible] Magister " Tristhorp, Rector hujus Collegii, presentibus Ma- " gistro Johanne Veysy et Thoma Pytte, extraxit a " communi cista Collegii, pro ædificatione Cancelli " Ecclesiæ Omnium Sanctorum, xiid. xiiis. iiiid." (Tr.) " Be it remembered, that on the 10th day of March, " A.D. 1472, Master Tristhorp, Rector of this College, " in presence of Master John Veysy and Thomas Pytte, " withdrew from the common chest of the College, for " building the Chancel of the Church of All Saints, " 12l. 13s. 4d." It is followed by an entry of probably about the same date; (tr.)—" Rents pertaining to Lin- " coln College, Oxford," the first five of which are,— " First, from the Church of All Saints and Michael, 22l. " Also, from the Chantry of St. Anne, in the Church of " All Saints, 10l. 14s. 4d. yearly per annum. Also, from " the tenement of Carre', the Bedel, in Oxford, 5l. 6s. 8d. " Also, from Lawrence Hall, with Plumberhalle, 40s. " Also, from Staple Hall (Aula Stapulina), 26s. 8d." There are numerous other entries in this page, some mere scribblings, without meaning.

In p. 3 there is a curious list, in Latin, of Chapel vestments, (tr.)—" A.D. 1480, on the Eve of the Con- " version of St. Paul, the following are kept in the " Chapel.—First, as to vestments, five sets of green " vestments. Also, one new set of black silk of leyantian " (? broad sattin), the gift of William Hastebruge, " citizen of London, for the soul of Sir John Crosby. " Also, one of red silk, with arms on the back, and " eagles, the gift of Master Walter Bate. Also, one of " green and red silk, mixed colours, with lions on the " back, upon a blue and red cross. Also, one of nearly " like colour and of silk, with unicorns, and lions " on the back, upon a green cross. Also, one of sea- " green (glaucum), with a red cross of silk, and peacocks " and griffins. Also, one of sea-green and of silk, with a " white cross. Also, one of silk of bawdkyn, and with " a red cross with flowers and doves. Also, an old one in " black, with tunics for the deacon and sub-deacon. Also " a red one, with tunics for the deacon and sub-deacon, " and with three copes pertaining to the same, and of " the same silk.—These are in the Church [probably " of All Saints]. Also, a vessel for holy water. Also, " candlesticks. Also, small bells. Also, three chalices, " one of which—."

In folio 26 and succeeding leaves are entered various Compositions; among them, a Composition dated the 2nd of February 1432 between the Executors of Master John Thorp, priest, and John, Rector of the House or College of Asshrugge (now Ashridge, in Bucks) as to an annual obit. A Composition between Master William Chamberlayne, Rector of the College of St. Mary and All Saints of Lincoln, and Master William Gascoigne, date 1432, engaging that certain Anthems shall be sung in honour of St. Anne in All Saints' Church on certain days, in return for certain books given by him to the College, but then left in his custody. William Brendon, one of the University Proctors, is a witness. A Composition made between Master Thomas Barker and the College, date 1488, the College binding them 4 volumes of the books of the "Doctor Subtilis" [Duns Scotus] which he had already given to the College, and the books to be chained in the library, for the use of the students, after his death. A Composition, dated 6th June 1437, stating that John Forest, Dean of Wells and Canon of Lincoln, in the Canonry of the Prebendal Church of Banbury, had built the Chapel and library, hall and kitchen, and chambers, "high and low," of noble work; John Beke, the Rector, and the Fellows, binding themselves by oath to celebrate his Anniversary. Other Compositions are, as to John Southam, Archdeacon of Oxford, 1436, to celebrate his anniversary, as being a benefactor. As to William Finderne, and Agnes his wife, 1444; Henry (Beaufort) Cardinal Priest of St. Eusebius, called the "English Cardinal," 1447; John Crosby, Treasurer of the Cathedral Church of Lincoln, 1476; Thomas Bekyngton, Bishop of Bath and Wells, 1469; his Executors, Master Hugh Sugar, John Pope, and Richard Swan, having paid 200*l.*, part of his moneys, towards the building of the College. Composition as to Walter Bate 1479; Edmund Audley, Bishop of Salisbury, about 1518, he having given 400*l.* to the College, to lay out in land; and Master John Denham, Rector of Barnake in Northamptonshire, a benefactor and late a Fellow of the College, 19 Henry VIII.

In folio 15*a* is entered, in a beautiful but minute hand, a memorandum of all the goods of the College, 21st December 1474. John Trystrope being Rector, John Vevsy, Thomas Pawntone, and Master William Bethnm, Fellows, and Master William Batte, Commoner. This list is of singular interest; among the articles of plate are mentioned, (tr.):—"Also, a great standing bowl, all " of silver gilt, the gift of Master Thomas Oldebury, " formerly Guardian (? Treasurer) of our College, with " a cover. . . Also, two great vessels, the common " name of which is 'boltye' (bowls), with a cover. . . " Also, Moses' rod. . . . The above are contained " in a chest with three keys, in the tower of the College. " Also, in the tower aforesaid there is a certain " chest belonging to the house, closed with a fastening " of iron, with the goods therein of Master John Tris- " trope, Rector of the house. Also, in the same tower " there is another chest, with evidences of the house. " Also, two other small chests, in like manner containing " evidences." Among articles belonging to the house, in the Rector's chamber,—"Item, unum senex federbede," "Also, one old feather-bed."

In fol. 15*b* an Inventory begins of all the books in the Library of the College, date probably about 1500. The names also of those who gave the volumes are in many instances added, and the books are enumerated desk by desk. Among them is this item, (tr.):—"Also, on the " second side of the same desk, Waldene against Wiclyf, " the gift of the Founder (Richard Flemyng, Bishop of " Lincoln), the second leaf commencing with 'Pro- " logus.'" As to Chronicles, the following are mentioned,—"Also, the Chronicles of Ivo of Chartres, the " gift of Master Thomas Gascoigne, the second leaf " beginning 'Verborum interpretibus.' Also, the " Chronicle which begins with 'Cornelius,' given by " the same. Also, the Policronicon, with a table (tabula), " the gift of William Lasse, the second leaf 'Beginnin: " ' De bello Piratarum.' Also, Boccace (Boccanus) on " Illustrious Men and Eminent Women, the gift of " Master Robert Flemying. In the second part of the " same (the fourth desk) a little book of the Chronicles " of Mariacus (an error for Mariannus) Scotus." The works of the Doctor Subtilis (Duns Scotus) are very numerous in this list.

In fol. 18 is a list of Legacies delivered to the Rector and Fellows 7th March 1487, as left to the College by Master Richard Swanne, late Provost of the Cathedral of Wells.

In fol. 21*a* there is a list of Books in the possession of the College in the year 1476; and in fol. 22*a* a list of Books in 1543.

At fol. 25 a list begins of Contents of the volume, written in a hand of the 16th century; but it does not correspond with the volume in its present state. Several leaves have evidently been removed, and several matters referred to in the list of Contents do not appear.

Pinned to folio 82*b* is a paper (date 1634) signed by George Staesmoore, stating that he has—"by rash and " unseemly words, and unworthy behaviour, given just " occasion of offence unto Mr. Cross and Mr. Chalfont, for " which they might justly have accepted against me, to " my discredite and prejudice:" he also acknowledges himself to be unworthy of any further favour or residence in the College. From fol. 120 it appears that he called Mr. Cross, a Senior Fellow, "ass," and that he "put a " nickname on Mr. Chalfont, Master of Arts and Chap- " lain, calling him 'Nicholas Casanus.'"

In fol. 85*a* is a "Coppie of the Suspension which was " read in St. Michael's against Mr. Nathanic! Wight, " Chaplayne theyr, for his delaye in readinge His " Majesties Declaration for recreation on the Lord's " Daye, 23 December 1633." In a later page follows, "The humble submission of Thomas Smyth, Master of " Arts, made in the Colledge Chappell, December 20, " 1634." He acknowledges that he has cruelly beaten Nicholas North, Master of Arts of the same College, after breaking into his ohamber, with a great cudgel, "until after three blowes it broke upon his head." He also acknowledges himself to have been lately admonished by Mr. Rector, and "justly injoyned this publike and " open submission." He then owns himself "unfeignedly " sorry for this my soe fowle and hainouse a fact, which " might rather have become the black tents of Kedar, " then the schooles of the Prophets, or the Sanctuaries " of the Muses." This affair excited great commotion in the College, and the Rector was opposed by the four Senior Fellows in his determination to punish Smyth.

In fol. 197, under date 8th August 1625, Matthias Watson, a Fellow, is "expelled the Society for his " notorious lewd and deboshi life;" yet "the Rector " and Fellows agreed to buy him a new suite of apparel, " and to have a messenger and horse to carrie him to " his freinds, and to supply him with sufficient money " for his expenses by the waye."

In fol. 201 is a list of "stuf remayning in Laurence " Hall, at such tyme as Mr. James entred."

Fols. 210–15 contain many items about the College plate. In fol. 213*a* Ferdinando Sacheverell's plate is mentioned, as weighing 171 ounces: in 214*a* "Sache- " verel his eare-piece" is named, many other "eare- " pieces" being also mentioned.

This volume is full of curious memoranda bearing reference to College affairs and University life.

Register of Admissions and of College Acts, a folio paper volume, in old rough calf. It begins with the following description, in fol. 1*a*:—"Anno Domini 1577 Jani " primo, Registrum Collegii Lincolne, in qua contineri " debent exemplaria et copiæ omnium Compositionum " inter Collegium prædictum et alios quocunque. Item, " electiones et admissiones Rectorum, Socionum, et " Scholarium, cause absentiæ, Inventoria bonorum " Collegii, et cætera minuta quæcunque, ab anno præ- " dicto in futurum." Though the leaves at the beginning are tattered at the edges, the volume is in general in fair condition, and perfect: the entries come down to 1739.

The first entry records the election of Master John Underhill as Rector, 2nd June 1577.

In fol. 20b there is this curious entry:—"Whereas Sir " Baber [John Baber, elsewhere named as a Fellow,] was " found corrigible by the Rector and judgment of all the " Fellowes for his disobedience and misdemenor, to the " greate scandall of the Colledge, and ill example of " others, the Rector did injoyne him the punishment in " forme following, viz., to studie in the Libraire every " day in the week, except Saterday or holy daye, or his " answering daye, for the space of two howers in the " day, viz., from 8 till 9 in the forenoone, and from 1 till " 2 in the afternoone, and this for the space of a moneth, " and to beginne the 11 of March, being the next Wens- " day. Secondly, on Saterday the 14 of this moneth, " presently after Prayers, to goe to the Chappel deske, " and there to make an humble acknowledgment of his " disobedience and misdemeanour in such wordes and " forme as shalbe delivered in writing unto him, before " prayers, by the Sub-Rector; and the Sub-Rector to " have a coppie thereof, to see whether he does it " verbatim, as he should. Lastly, on the 22 of March, " presently after Prayers, at the deske in the Chappell, " to make an oration in the prayse of obedience and " studious life, to move other thereunto; that so by " this exemplary punishment of his, others may learne " not to offend hereafter in the like. Ita est, Daniel " Hough, Sub-Rector." The submission and acknow- ledgment then follow, date 14th March 1611. This leaf, it may be remarked, has been apparently bound up in the volume out of its place.

In fol. 29a, date 19th March 1597, the name of Tobias Heyrick appears, as a member of the College. Qy. if he was a kinsman of Herrick, the author of the "Hes- " perides," mentioned in this Report under Trinity Hall, Cambridge.

In fol. 40a, date 12th June 1600, the punishment of " Sir Loddington" (Marmaduke Loddington, a Bachelor of Arts) is entered.—"Imprimis, he shall make an " oration in the Chappell, presently after prayers in the " morning, on the Fryday next before the Act. His " theame shalbe 'Vituperium ebrietatis et vitæ disso- " lute' (A censure of drunkenness and a dissolute life)," with much more in the way of task, in the 3rd Book of Aristotle "De Anima." Loddington was a Fellow, and his resignation appears on the 24th of October following.

In fol. 50 the signature of Robert Saunderson (after- wards Bishop of Lincoln, and the eminent Divine), occurs for the first time, as a Fellow, under date 6th May 1606; and in fol. 59 b. the resignation of his Fellowship, 6th May 1619.

In fol. 61b, under date 6th May 1624, it is proposed that "Master Math. Watson," a Fellow, be suspended from his fellowship, (i.—"for his notorious inebriety, " which brings a scandal upon the College;" he also being a person—"of a virulent and petulant tongue, and " of manners so satyrical that one can hardly be prevailed " upon to be in his company, with a due regard to " modesty." Watson's answer to these charges is sub- joined. In it he contends,—" Quod humanum sit errare, " quod quotidianoaquæ usu vires corporis minuerentur," "That to err is human, that if he daily took water, the " strength of his body would be diminished." Upon this occasion, he escaped with a reprimand only: but in the next page is an entry,—"This yeare Mr. Watson " for diverse misdemeanours was censured either to " bring a certificate of his good behaviour from the " place where hee then abode, or else presently to " returne to the College, and to bee confined to the " libraria." As to his ultimate expulsion, see the extracts from the preceding volume.

Fol. 73a, date 10th April 1625, Mr. George Ashton, Master of Arts of the College, is accused by the Rector of "having sleighted and pisht at him;" upon which the Rector told him, "he had pisht twice at him, for " which he would pish him out of the College;" upon which, Ashton "in derision woopt at him, so lowd " that all the hall runge of him." With full consent of the Fellows, he was warned to leave the College in three days, and order was "given unto the butler to leave his " name out of the booke."

A correspondence follows, between the College and the Parliamentary Committee for regulating the Uni- versities.

Under October 14, 1654, occurs the following entry: —"Mr. Rector and Fellows, upon certeine proofe made " by severall instances to them that Mr. Rotheram was " married and had a child by his wife, did agree with " one joynt consent that his Fellowship should be pro- " nounced voyd; whereupon Mr. Rector pronounced him " 'non socius.'"

In p. 105, under date 7th November 1659, the signa- tures commence of Nathaniel Crewe, as Sub-Rector, afterwards Nathaniel, Lord Crewe, Bishop of Durham.

Fol. 114a, date 14th January 1660.—"Whereas Rose, " a Scholler of this Colledge, did formerly officiate as " Porter, and had noe allowance for his paines, the " Rector and Fellows therefore now did thinke fitt to " forgive him that money, which usually is demanded " of all such who take degrees; and that his degree of " Bachelour of Arts shall cost him nothing as to the " College, in that particular. — Testor, Nath: Crewe, " Sub-Rector."

Fol. 155a, 12th August 1669, is entered the election of Dr. Crewe as Rector.

This volume, like the one previously described, is singularly full of curious details as to College life and discipline in the 17th century; very few Colleges, pro- bably, in either University, have preserved records of similar transactions.

A small folio paper volume, bound in parchment, written probably between 1720 and 1730, and containing copies of deeds relating to the College, and various genealogical extracts. In p. 111 the following passage incidentally met my eye.—"One Alderman Frere was a " noted chirurgeon; and being employ'd by King Henry " 8, about the year 1537, to rip up his Queen Jane " [Seymour] in order to save the life of his son, after- wards King Edward 6, had the manors of Wolvercote, " Yarnton, and Walter Eaton, given him by the King " for that service. His house in Oxon stood in the site " of the King's Head Tavern. His son was knighted. " and sold Wolvercote and Yarnton to Judge Walter, " Yarnton to Mr. Spencer, and Walter Eaton, which was " his summer seat, to ———." The story about the death of Queen Jane is untrue. There are apparently a great number of interesting entries in this volume.

A small paper quarto volume, in a parchment cover; being a Register of, and Index to, Deeds in the Col- lege Treasury. By one, dated 4th November 1447, the Rector and Fellows of the College, in consideration of 100 marks given to them by Cardinal Beaufort, promise to observe yearly the 11th of April, the day of his obit; and on that day to allow to the Rector, if present, 16d.; to every Fellow present, 8d.; to the two Chaplains, 12d.; to the Bible Clerk, 4d.; and for tapers, etc. 16d.; also, for a pittance in common to the Rector, Fellows, and Choristers, 3s. 4d. For the performance whereof, they bind themselves to the Bishop of Winchester in a penalty of 20 shillings, half to his own use, half to go to the informer, on breach of the covenant.

Under date 12th September 1513, Margaret Parker, widow, gives to Lincoln College 13li. 6s. 8d.; in con- sideration whereof, the Rector and Fellows bind them- selves in a bond of 200l., to provide two priests, with a salary of 6l. 13s. 4d. yearly to each, to pray for her soul for 10 years after her decease, in the Chapel of Our Lady in the Church of All Saints at Chipping Faringdon, Berks.

HENRY THOMAS RILEY.

NEW COLLEGE, OXFORD.

The following interesting document was shown to me by Dr. Sewell, the Warden of the College, it being kept in the Warden's Lodge.—

A Letter, written by William de Wykeham, Founder of New College, bought some years since, by auction, for 29l. It is supposed to bear reference to the ransom of the Duke of Bourbon, who had been taken prisoner at the Battle of Poitiers, A.D. 1356. As it is comparatively brief, and of additional interest, as being the only speci- men of Wykeham's handwriting (apart from his signa- ture) now known to exist, it is here inserted at length.— " Treschier Sirc. Veuilliez savoir que yce Dymenge " je envoiay par Canal, le vallet Symond Bachel, qui " vynt a moi a Shene, on je lui parlay de leschange " dont vous savez; et yce Lundy il envoit un vallet " devers Parys, et lui ad charge qil y soit ove toute la " haste qil purra par la dite esaue. Et le dit Symond, " ou Barthelmeu Spifanie, son piere, envoieront devers " leur compaignons, queu part que le Pape serra, de " vous faire prestement paier la somme dont estoit parle " entre nous; issint qil nen busoigne mie que vous " aillez ne envoiez devers Parys par celle cause. Car " seurement vous troverez le dit paiement devant vous " en les mains de ditz compaignons, quel lieu que le " Pape serra trove. Treschier Sire, lui Seint Esprit " vous veuille garder en saintee. Escrite a Shene, en " grande haste, yce Lundy, sur mon departir. William " de Wikehame."

(Tr.) "Very dear Sir. Be pleased to know that this "Sunday I sent for Canal, the vadlet of Symon Bachel, "who came to me at Shene, where I spoke to him of the "exchange of which you know; and this Monday he sent "a vadlet to Paris, and charged him to be there with all "the haste he may for the same reason. And the said Symon, or Bartholomew Spifanic, his father, will send "to their companions, at whatever place the Pope shall "be, to have you speedily paid the sum of which it was "spoken between us; so that there may be no need for "you to go or send to Paris for this reason. For "assuredly you will find the said payment before you "in the hands of the said companions, at whatever place "the Pope shall be found. Very dear Sir, may the "Holy Spirit keep you in health. Written at Shene, "in great haste, this Monday, upon my setting out. "William de Wikehame."

The Letter is written upon a piece of parchment, and formerly there was a small slip of parchment attached to it, now lost, with the following address:—"A mon "treschier, John, Seignur de Cobehamme." "To my "very dear, John, Lord of Cobehamme."

The following books and documents were shown to me, in the Bursary, by Mr. Lee.—

A parchment Indenture, bearing date 20th March, 19 Richard II. (A.D. 1396), endorsed in a hand of the 17th century.—"Indentura eorum quæ Thomas Cranlegh "liberavit Bursariis, quo tempore resignavit officium "Custodiæ."—"Indenture of the things which Thomas "Cranlegh delivered to the Bursars, at the time when "he resigned the office of Warden." Cranlegh was the first Warden of the House after the building of the present College. Among the miscellaneous articles in this interesting document, some of which are of the humblest nature, and of singularly trivial value, the Chapel ornaments deserve remark, and the following items:—"Tria mensalia nova panni de Garnesey, quorum "unum continet vi. ulnas, et duo alia x. ulnas. Unum "mensale novum pro mensa famulorum, continens vi. "ulnas. Manutergia de panno de Wiltone." "Three "new board-cloths of cloth of Garnesey [Guernsey], one "of which contains 6 ells, and the two others 10 ells. "One new table-cloth for the servants' table, containing "6 ells. Finger-napkins of cloth of Wiltone." Five horses are mentioned as being in the College stables, two of them "for the saddle of the Warden." The oath of the College Statutes, still preserved in the Warden's Lodge, in a modern binding, is here described, in its original form:—"Item, Statuta Domini de novo refor- "mata, et ligata cum corio rubro, in una capcella ligneа." "Also, the Statutes of the Lord (Bishop) newly re-formed, and bound with red leather, in a wooden "box."

An ancient volume, small folio, containing about 60 leaves of vellum, bound in limp parchment. On the original fly leaf is entered the following memorandum, in a hand of the 17th century:—"In hoc volumine con- "tinentur.—1. Controversiæ inter Dominum Willelmum "de Wickham, Episcopum Wintoniæ, et Magistros, seu "Custodes, Hospitalis Sancte Crucis, prope Wintoniam. "2. Injunctiones Domini Willelmi de Wichhamn, Epis- "copi Wintoniæ, factæ Priori et Conventui Ecclesiæ "Cathedralis Wintoniæ. 3. Injunctiones factæ a Do- "mino Willelmo de Wickham Abbati Conventus de "Hyda prope Wintoniam. 4. Injunctiones ejusdem "Domini, Willelmi de Wickham, factæ Abbatissæ et "Monasterio de Romesey et Wherwell. 5. Injunctiones ". . . Priori et Conventui de Mortuomari, Winton- "Diœcesis. 6. Item, Magistro et Confratribus Sancti "Thomæ Martyris de Suthwarke." The regulations and injunctions given on the occasion of these Visitations of William Wykeham are of considerable interest, those to the Nuns of Romsey more especially. Among other things, they are strictly charged not to be pre-vailed upon to take upon themselves the office of god-mother, it entailing various inconvenient results.

The First "Liber Senescalli Coquinæ," or "Book of the "Steward of the Kitchen," beginning at Michaelmas in 1386, the generally alleged year of the building of the College; an oblong book, with leaves of paper, in a com-paratively recent stiff parchment binding. It contains the names of all the members of the College who dined in hall each day, of those who were absent, when they left, and when, and often at what period of the day, they returned; what other persons, and of what condition, dined in hall each day with the Fellows and Scholars, or at the servants' table (mensa famulorum). In the mar-gins of this volume there are a vast number of notes, many very indistinct, and others, though distinct, very minutely written; all which, no doubt, would well repay a thorough examination, as throwing light not only on the earliest history of the College, but, at least to some extent, upon the manners and usages of the day. The first name given in the list of those dining in hall the first week in this book, is that of "Cranley," the Warden, the second, (John) "Wykham" (several persons of which surname appear in the volume), and "Walter" the third. The entries and notes are in Latin throughout. Under the 20th week is entered:—"Also, his Lordship the Warden "ate in hall on Saturday the Feast of the Purification "with two strangers, who sat with him at the high "table, and with three others, who sat at the other "tables, with the Fellows." In the first week of Lent:—"The reeder (tector) of the house and his wife came "on Monday to dinner with the servants, and to supper "on the same day." In the 37th week (from Michaelmas 1386) the name of "Chicchely" occurs for the first time, as a Scholar of the College; Henry Chicheley, afterwards Bishop of St. David's, and Archbishop of Canterbury. In the 53rd week of the first year (beginning probably with the 365th day), is this entry:—"A soapmaker "(separius) was here, in commons, for two days." In the third week of the next year:—"Also, five men-"servants of his Lordship (the Founder, no doubt) "came here on Wednesday to supper, bringing book." The first of this series of books, as already stated, is called "Liber Senescalli Coquinæ;" the remaining four, to be described, are styled respectively "Liber "Senescalli Aulæ," "Book of the Hall Steward," an office which was taken by the Fellows in turns. The second of these volumes is of paper, and similar in appearance, in every way, to the one already described. It commences in 1397, the year in which the preceding volume ends. The notes are by no means so numerous as in the preceding volume: the entries are of a similar nature, and, as they throw a considerable light upon the acknowledged status of Fellows and Scholars of Colle-giate institutions in those days, a number of extracts from its contents are here inserted. It is probably imperfect at the beginning, as it commences with the Fifth Week, the "Senescallus" for the week being Bowke, one of the Fellows, who afterwards became Warden. In the first page, after the list of names of persons in residence, is added in Latin (tr.):—"On "Saturday there came three Bedels to dine with the "Fellows. On the same day three carters (bigarii) "came to dine with the servants. On Sunday two "tenants came from Drayton to dine with the Fellows. "On Tuesday two Bedels came to dine with the Fellows. "On Thursday two stonemasons (lathami) came to "dine with the Fellows. On the same day one plumber "came to dine with the Fellows. On the same day "came the son of Overtone and the son of Archys to "dine with the Fellows." It may be here remarked that the Bedels of the University seem for years to have been on terms of the strictest intimacy with the Fellows; while on the other hand we rarely, if ever, find a member of another College named as dining at their table.

In p. 2,—"On Saturday a Bedel came to dine with the "Fellows. On the same day came the farmer of Rad-"clyve [Radcliffe in Bucks], the land miller of "Twychewyke [Tingewick in Bucks], the rector of "Awltone [now Alton Barnes, in Wilts], and Sterte "[Wilts], to dine with the Fellows." P. 3.—"On Sun-"day came one paviour (pavitor) to dine with the "Fellows ('fa.' the 'servants,' is put before 'so.' the "Fellows,' but the pen has been run through it). On "the same day there came two plumbers to dine and "with the servants, for repairing the gutters of "the cloister." P. 6.—"On Thursday came three "carpenters, to dine with the Fellows. On Friday came "the farmer of Hekfeld to dine with the Fellows, his "servant dining with the servants." P. 9.—"On Sun-"day came Penyfader to dine with the Fellows, and "his servant to dine with the servants. On the same "day came Thomas Smyth, chaunter (cantor) in Eline "with the Fellows." P. 11.—"On Sunday, Elastone, "the notary, and two carpenters, came to dine with the "Fellows." P. 25.—"On Sunday, W. Broun, the stone-"mason, came to dine with the Fellows, and another "labourer to dine with the servants. On the same day "came to dine with the Fellows a certain vadlet of "Master Nicholas Wykham; and Thomas Glasier 'the "glasier' came to supper with the Fellows." P. 33.—"On Thursday came Daubernyve to supper with the "Fellows. On the same day came a poor priest of "Essex (Yssexia) to supper with the Fellows. On the "same day came a charcoal-burner (carbonarius) to "dinner." P. 34.—"On Monday Richard Huwet came "from Bokyngham, bringing money, to dine with the "Fellows." P. 37.—"A priest, Rector of Eyrchangre, "came to sup with the Fellows." P. 38.—"On Mon-

" day four chaunters, a Bedel, the farmer of Keyng-
" ham, and Thomas Carrour, came to dine with the " Fellows." P. 42.—" On Thursday came four stone-
" masons, one brickmaker, Thomas Selby, and the son
" of Prewes, to dine with the Fellows."

After p. 44 the second year of the volume begins, A.D. 1398. In the second week, p. 45,—" On Mon" day, a carter who came with salt, dined with the " Fellows." P. 46,—" On Sunday came two Friars
" Minors to dine with the Fellows; also the farmer
" of Hayforde came to dine with the Fellows. On " Thursday, two tilers came to dine with the Fel" lows." P. 56,—" Two tilers came to supper; and " two paviours of Nettylbed came to supper with the " Fellows." P. 58,—" On Thursday came Master John
" Wykham, John Lodelow, Michael Salesbury, Wil" liam Somertone, Nicholas Kent, Thomas Glasier [the " glazier], Wadyn the Smith (Faber), Walter Boke-
" bynidere [the Bookbinder], Peter the farmer of Hayf-

" Bedels, two carpenters, and Sir Thomas Carlyl, to " dine with the Fellows. On the same day came two " chaunters, to sup with the Fellows. On Tuesday came
" a paviour and one bellbanger to dine with the Fel-

" occupied with Frye upon the business of the College
" in London and at Woderstoke to dine with the ser" vants." P. 64,—" On the same day came a cooper,
" and another who made a cupboard in the larder, to

" came the Falconer of the Bishop of Dublin to dine
" with the Fellows, and his servant with the servants."

The third year in this book is in a mutilated state, beginning at the 13th week only. In the 31st week apparently of this year, there being no pagination given,
" On Wednesday came Sir Thomas Canynges to dinner
" with the Fellows." P. 96,—" On Wednesday came " two clerks of the Chapel of our Lord the Founder to " supper." P. 102,—" On Monday came a candlemaker
" (candelarius) and two Bedels, to dine with the " Fellows." P. 147,—" On Sunday came Frenssche, a " Fellow of the College at Winchester, to dine with the " Fellows, his servant dining with the servants. On " the same day came a Scholar of Winchester College
" to dine with the Fellows. On the same day a car" penter, hired to repair the houses in this town, came " to dine with the Fellows." P. 127 (A.D. 1402),—" On " Sunday a tailor came to dine with the Fellows."
P. 128,—" In this day a skinner (pellipara), a tenant
" of the College in Oxford, came to supper with the " Fellows." P. 134,—" On Saturday came a Bedel, the " son of the farmer of Abberbury, and a Hermit, to dine
" with the Fellows." P. 135,—" On Sunday came a " priest, invited by the Warden, to dine with the Fel" lows." P. 150,—" On Monday father Quarley and " the Warden's cook came to dine with the Fellows.
" On Thursday the Warden's under-cook (vicekocus)
" came to supper with the servants." P. 164,—" On " Tuesday a Scholar, newly admitted, came to dine with
" the Fellows, and after dinner he departed."

In 1405, 6, a Wellesley (the name so spelt) is named several times (pp. 177, 179, and elsewhere) as a Fellow. The earliest mention of Thomas Bekyntone, afterwards Official of the Court of Canterbury, Keeper of the Privy Seal, and Bishop of Bath and Wells, is in p. 178, the 41st week of this year (1405, 6),—" Bekyntone came to " dinner with the Fellows, and waited (et expectavit);"
the meaning of which is, probably, that he stayed there, awaiting his election, as in p. 179 he appears, at the end of the list of the Fellows and Scholars, as a Scholar for the first time. In p. 180 " Somersete " is named as being admitted a scholar; probably John Somerset, afterwards Physician to King Henry the Sixth.

P. 185.—" On Wednesday came Fethere, a Notary,
" and a certain Chaplain, bringing the Statutes of the " College, to dine with the Fellows." P. 194.—" On " Saturday came a servant of Sir John Chyllowe (?) to
" dine with the Fellows, being invited by the Warden."
In p. 210 (probably the year 1407, 8) Bekyntone is last but ten on the list. In the same page,—" On Friday
" came two women of Hornechirche to dine with the " Fellows." P. 211,—" On Monday a woman came to " dine with the Fellows, who fitted the albs and the " boardcloths." P. 212.—" On Thursday a carpenter
" came to dine with the Fellows, who repaired the " third bell in the bell-tower." P. 220,—" On Monday
" Farsyngdone departed this life, before the hour of " Prime,"—perhaps the earliest notice of the death of a Fellow to be found in these volumes. P. 229,—" On " Sunday, John Busch, carpenter, came to dine with
" the Fellows, and his brother to dine with them. On " the same day, two clerks who sang in the Chapel on " the Feast of the Annunciation of the Blessed Virgin,
" came to dine with the Fellows. Also, the binder of " books, Walter, came to dine with the Fellows; and
" the servant of Katerykes to dine with the Fellows. A
" Bedel on the same day, and a servant of Warram,
" came to dine with the Fellows." In p. 255 (the close probably of 1415), Bekyntone, whose name is here given as " Bekamptone," is noticed, apparently for the first time, as going out of College: in p. 257 he is again in residence. P. 300,—" On Saturday the barber came to " dine with the servants." P. 307,—" On Sunday two
" clothiers of Sarum came to dine with the Fellows."
P. 322,—" On Friday came a marbler (marmorarius), to " dine with the Fellows." P. 336,—" On Thursday
" came Nicholas Hale, and another with him, here for " the purpose of selling fuel, to dine with the Fellows."
In this page Bekyntou's name appears for the last time in the 12th or 13th place; in the next it is at the head of the page, and second, or next to the Sub-Warden (Vice-Custos) in the next page to that.

The Third of these "Libri Senescalli Aulæ," in every way similar in form to the others, begins at 1420, and goes on to 1448. Bekynton's name appears next to that of the Sub-Warden in p. 2, after which it disappears.—(In the White Book, fol. 21a, col. 2, mentioned in the sequel, is this entry, tr.—" Thomas Bekynton-
" tone departed from the College, because he betook
" himself to service—transtulit se ad obsequium—in " the month of November 1420. Into whose place was " admitted, as a Scholar, William Dansey, of the County
" of Hamptone," (Hants.)—In this volume the entries of invitations to dinner are far less numerous, and some classes which had formerly dined with the Fellows are now relegated to the servants' table. We find however the entry, "Thomas the Glazier, invited by the Warden
" to dine with him." It seems not improbable that he may have provided stained glass for the College Chapel.

The Fourth of the "Libri Senescalli Aulæ" extends from 1478 to 1499, the registers of attendance in hall, or residence, between 1448 and 1478 being probably lost.

The Fifth volume begins at 1501, and comes down to about 1514. In the middle of the volume it assumes the form of a book of commons, closing with a buttery account.

Registrum Primum, otherwise known as "the White " Book;" a large folio volume, bound in modern vellum, and containing 267 numbered leaves of parchment, with a few leaves at the beginning without numeration, and covered with memoranda of an early date. The dates of the contents are A.D. 1400–1480, but the volume has no doubt been made up of leaves of several books, bound together, as their contents do not at all run in chronological sequence. In fol. 3a. of the fly-leaves at the beginning, the following list is entered, probably coeval with the election of Richard de Malford as Warden, in the year 1400; who is here made to the 29th Fourth Warden: the following being named before him;—Richard de Tonworthe, A.D. 1377, Nicholas de Wykehain, 1379, and Thomas de Cranleigh, 1389. The latter, as already noticed, is usually named as the First Warden, and was such in the sense of being the First Warden elected after the College was built and opened. Prior to this, as the present Warden kindly informs me, the Society were lodged elsewhere in Oxford, while the present College was building; it taking possession of the new College in 1386, N. de Wykeham then being Warden. The list above referred to is one of (trans). from the Latin)—" Jewels, ornaments, and " vestments of the College Chapel. First, three crosses,
" one of which is of silver gilt, and stands on a foot:
" the other two of copper, one of them gilt, with a " painted staff, and the other plated with silver, with a
" staff of copper, plated with silver. Six thuribles, one
" of silver gilt, three of copper gilt, and two others of " latten (auricalco). One silver boat, with a silver

" spoon, for incense. Nine chalices, eight of which are " gilt. One silver gilt pyx, for placing the body of " Christ therein, upon the high altar. One pyx of " beryl (berello), adorned with silver gilt. One round " jewel, like a ball, of silver gilt, with the arms of our " lord the Founder inscribed thereon. Thirty cruets " (orfioli), two of which are of silver gilt. Two basins " of silver, with the arms of our lord the Founder en- " graved on the inside thereof. Seven paxbreads, one " of which is of silver gilt, and the others of copper " gilt. Four processional candlesticks, two of which " are of silver, the others latteu (auricalco). Two coat " candlesticks of latteu, standing before the high altar. " Six candlesticks of latten, for the lower altars. One " mitre of baudekyn, with a pastoral staff of copper gilt, " for Innocents' Day [28 December]. A silver pail for " holy water, with an asperge of silver. Two other " pails of latten, with two asperges of the same mate- " rial, for holy water." At the end of this list a memorandum in Latin, of somewhat more recent date (tr.):—" Be it remembered that A.D. 1456, on the day of " St. Cecilia the Virgin and Martyr (22 November), the " venerable Father, Master Thomas Gascoigne of the " Diocese of York, Professor of Holy Theology, gave " to this College of the Blessed Mary of Winton, in " Oxford, to the honour of God and of his glorious " Mother, Mary, and of all Saints, the relics under- " written.—A portion of the Sepulchre of God. Of the " place where Christ sweat blood. Of the place where " the Blessed Mary breathed forth her spirit (emisit " spiritum). Of the flesh of St. Paul. A bone of the " Blessed Mary Magdalene. A bone of St. Vincent the " Martyr. A bone of St. Ambrose the Doctor. Two " small bones of St. Brigit (Birgitte) the Widow. A " portion of the Tomb of St. Gregory the Pope." This is followed by a list, on the fly-leaves, of " Vestments of " the Chapel," of the same date probably; after which is entered a list of presentations to the several College livings, down to about the year 1491.

The first numbered leaf of the volume is occupied with a list of (tr.)—" Books of the Chapel, the gift of the " venerable Father and Lord, Sir William of Wykeham, " Bishop of Winchester, Founder of the College of St. " Mary of Winton, in Oxford." Fol. 3 b. begins with,— " Books of the faculty of Theology, the gift of the " venerable Father Master William [? Robert] Reed, " Bishop of Chichester." Fol. 4 a., " Books of the " faculty of Theology, the gift of Sir William de Wyke- " ham, Bishop of Winton." On fol. 6 a an entry of much later date,—" Books given by W. Warham, " Archbishop of Canterbury (A.D. 1504–32)." Fol. 7 a., " Books of the faculty of Philosophy, the gift of our " Lord the Founder aforesaid:" on the reverse of which leaf are comparatively recent entries of rentals. On fol. 8 a. are some curious entries, in a hand of about A.D. 1450, a mixture of Latin and English, the latter being to the following effect:—" Item, a ryche cope, " imbrowd' of the Passioun of Seint Katerine. Item, " i. ryche cope, imbrowd' with the Apostoles, Martirs, " and Virgins, stondyng in tabernacles. Item, i. ryche " cope imbrowd' off the Passion. Item, i. blewe cope " with imagery off loyed (? alloyed) gold. Item, i. sute " off whyte bawdekyn for preste, decar, and sub- " decan. Item, ii. autyr-clothys off blew bawdekyn, " powdryd with lyons off gold bar the hy autyr. (tr.) " Also, great organs (organa) for the choir." A list of books on Divinity then follows, after which the list is continued:—" Item, ii. ryche autyr clothys, the nethere of " cremesyn velvet, inbrowdered with Apostles and other " images, with a crucifix in the myddel; the ouer (over, " or upper) off reed velveto of the Passioun, powdryd " with angelis comyng owte of clowdys, and with smal " sterres of vi. leggys, and with rollys." The list is then continued, in a somewhat different hand.—" Item " xix. copis of crymessyn damaske ryche cloth of " golde, with orfrays of grene damaske ryche cloth of " golde, with a dove in a garter, all of gold, in the " mose (? morse). Item, vi. copys of whyte damaske " ryche clothe of gold, full of diverse braunchys and " flowrys of diverse colurys, and with orfrays of rede " damaske, imbrowdyd with gartrys and dovys of golde. " Item, iiii. copes of whyte satyn imbrowdyd with gar- " trys and dovys of golde. Item, ii. copys of whyte " dobull boksasyn, imbrowdyd with dovys of golde, with " grene branchys powdryd with gold, and orfrayd " with redde damask imbrowdyd with garters and " with dovys of golde. Item, one over-tabuill for the " hye awter, of ryche clothe of gold, full of ymagery, " and the Trynyte crownyng owr Lady, for owr " Lady day, etc. Item, a nother tabull for the same " awter, of rede velluet, imbrowdyd with the Pas- " sion of Cryst, with the border of rede damaske clothe " of gold. Item, iii. lynyn towellys of Turkey for the " dekyn and subdekyn, and the crosse berer. Item, a " ryche corporas of gold, with the armys of Portugale " and Arundel togeder. Item, a staf for the crosse for " the processyon, of a unycornys horne, conteynyng " yn lengyth ii. yerdys an a quarter" [this so-called 'unicorn's horn' is probably the tusk of a narwhal, still remaining in the possession of the College]. " Item, iiii. copys of sanguen clothe of sylke. Item, v. " copys of rede bawdkyn, powdered with yelow byrdys. " Item, ii. cloths for the hye awter of sanguen clothe of " sylke, the one clothe y powdered with iii. grete m. " (? mullets) of gold, with a schochy (scutcheon) of yis " armys under the myddyl m., the nether awter clothe " powdred with i., m. of gold. Item, ii. dexte (desk) " cloths of sanguen. Item, a sute of vestymentes for " prest, decon, subdecon, and . . . . . of whyte dobull " boksasyn, imbrowdyd with dovys of gold and with " grene branchys, and middylpanyd with rede damask, " imbrowdyd with gartyrs and with dovys of golde. " Item, v. copys fyne blew bawdekyn, mengelyd with " whythe. Item, iii. copys of fyne rede bawdekyn, with " branchys of grene and yewlow byrdyd full. Item, a " paxe of sylver and over gilt, with an ymage ygilt, set " round abowte with grete perles, saphirus, rubeus, and " dyamound, with a cheyne of sylver and gilt hangeyng " by an hoke. Item, i. corporous of riche clothe of " tyssewe, goolde and blewe. Item, i. large carpet and " a long, for the hie auter, bordred with depe grene " braunches with levys."

In fol. 9 is a list of " Jocalia," or Jewels, in the custody of the College Bursars, A.D. 1508. The pieces of plate here named are very numerous; at the conclusion of the list (fol. 10 a) under the head of " Nottys," eight cocoa-nut cups are described, some of which are still in existence as articles among the College plate. In fol. 11 a is a list of " Books of the faculty of " Medicine;" in fol. 11 b " Books of Medicine chained " in the Library." In fol. 13 a, the oldest style of writing in the volume is resumed,—" Books of the " faculty of Canon Law, the gift of our lord the " Founder aforesaid." Fol. 13 b,—" Books, the gift of " Master John Wykham, formerly Rector of Crundale." In fol. 17 a, in the earliest hand, are entered,—" Books " of the faculty of Civil Law, the gift of our Lord the " Founder." In fol. 17 b is a later entry, of the later part of the 15th century,—" Jewels given by Master " Hugh Sugar" (who was one of Bishop Rekyaton's executors, mentioned also in the Report on Lincoln College).

In fol. 20 a, date 1411, begins a list of deaths of Fellows, or their final departures from College, many of the entries being in this form,—" Recessit a Collegio, " quia transtulit se ad obsequium." " He departed " from College, because he betook himself to service." It appears, from fol. 20 b, that attention is called to it in a marginal note of the 17th century, that between September 1414 and the 1st of May 1415, four Fellows of the College, five Scholars, and one " Benet, of the " County of Suthhamptone," whose status is not named, died, falling victims probably to the plague. These entries as to deaths and resignations, with the elections in place of those departing, go on to fol. 24 b, ending there in 1449. Miscellaneous indentures then follow, to fol. 34 b. At fol. 35 a, there is a " Letter " Supplicatory and Commission of the College, for " dedicating its Burial-ground and Cloister," addressed to Nicholas, Bishop of Dunkeld, and dated 18th of October 1400. It recites a Bull of Pope Boniface IX., granting leave of Consecration of the Chapel and its burial-ground, and of " Reconciliation," where they had been violated by bloodshed, and acts of a nature now indescribable. In obedience to the Bull, the Bishop, it is stated, proceeded to consecration; and on the 19th of October (tr. from the Latin),—" The three greater " bells, in the great tower, or belfrey, of the College, " near the said cloister, or burial-ground, were anointed, " consecrated, and made holy, by the said lord Bishop " of Dunkeld; of which bells the largest is dedicated " in honour of the Holy Trinity, the second in honour " of the Blessed Mary, the Mother of God, and the " third in honour of St. John the Baptist and Saint " Frideswide the Virgin." Opposition was made to this consecration by the Vicar of St. Peter's-in-the-East, and the documents follow in this volume in reference thereto. In fol. 38 mention is made " De Gardinis in " horto interiori,"—" Of the pleasure-grounds in the " inner garden." The rest of the volume is devoted to deeds and indentures of various descriptions, the rebus or cognizance of the attesting Notary Public being in every instance carefully traced. With these deeds admissions to Scholarships are sometimes, though but sparsely, intermixed.

Registrum Secundum, the Second Register: a folio volume of 330 leaves of vellum, with an Index added; there being three fly-leaves, not numerated, at the beginning, with miscellaneous entries upon them. Down to about the 40th folio, the text consists of the deeds and rentals of the alien Abbey of St. Valery. The whole of the rest of the volume is occupied with deeds and indentures as to matters in which the College has been interested. It follows the preceding Register in date, but is not, like that, a number of miscellaneous sheets bound together at a comparatively recent date.

Liber Niger, the Black Book; a very large folio volume, bound in black, and containing 216 leaves of fine vellum, part of which are left blank. On the fly-leaf is an Index, or rather, Calendar, in a hand of the 17th century. The volume is wholly occupied with deeds and documents relating to the manors and other property of the College; which seem in general to have been transcribed about the reign of Henry the Seventh. Room has been left for adding the initial letters in illumination, but after folio 66 these initials have not been added.

Registrum Protocollorum, 1453-95; a parchment folio volume, of about 500 pages, bound in rough calf. It contains the admissions of Fellows from 1453 to 1495, and of Scholars from 1450 to 1506. All these admissions, like those at King's College, Cambridge, are duly attested by a Notary Public, the usage still prevailing at this College at the present day.

Registrum Protocollorum, 1496-1522, a smaller volume, of 380 pages.

Registrum Protocollorum, 1523-46; a folio volume of 284 leaves of parchment, in fine old oak binding.

Registrum Protocollorum, 1547-78, a very large folio volume, of about 73 leaves of parchment; in the original oak boards, not covered.

Registrum Protocollorum, 1577-1610; a folio volume, of 239 leaves of parchment, bound in rough calf. These are followed by volumes of more recent date.

As to early Computi of the College,—some few of the Bursars' Rolls of the 14th century still exist; and the same may be said of the Bailiffs' Rolls, which are kept distinct from the Bursars' Computi. I had not, however, had an opportunity of examining any rolls of either class, at the time of writing this Report.

I have here to express my thanks to Dr. Sewell, the Warden of New College, for the interest he took in my inquiries, and the courtesy with which he gave me much desirable information relative to the foundation and former history of the College. I have also to acknowledge my great obligations to the Reverend Lancelot John Lee, Sub-Warden, Precentor, and Bursar of the College, for most valuable assistance rendered by him in the way of facilitating my researches, in reference to the early history of the College. My thanks are also due to the Reverend Edward C. Wickham, Tutor of the College, for the interest he took in obtaining access for me to the documents above described.

HENRY THOMAS RILEY.

ORIEL COLLEGE, OXFORD.

The various documents are described in the order in which they were shown to me by Dr. Hawkins, the Provost.—

A paper book of Computi, or Treasurers' Accounts, 1409-1415, in small quarto form, containing 222 pages; in fine condition, and excellently written throughout. The Computi previous to this date are probably no longer in existence. The accounts (in Latin) are set forth with the greatest clearness throughout the volume. In the first year, (A.D. 1409), the first head of Receipts is "Receipta de pixide,"—"Receipts from the pyx," apparently meaning moneys received throughout the year from partakers of the Holy Sacrament, in the Church of St. Mary the Virgin, in Oxford, which belonged, and still belongs, to the College. Then "Receipts from "Mortuaries and Sepulture Fees." Then, "Receipta "de Truncis," probably meaning, receipts from Alms-boxes, in the Church; the only item this year being, (tr.); "Also, from the boxes in general, about the Feast "of the Assumption of the Blessed Mary, 9*s.* 10*d.*" The next head is—"Receipts from Small Tythes," the largest item being "From Master John Dymmok, "24*s.* 8*d.*;" and other items, "From Thomas the Sta-"tioner (called "Thomas Walter," in a future account) "20*d.*; From the Manicipie of Lion's Hall, 20*d.*" Then follow "Receipts from the Churches of Abyrford, "Colby, and Litilmore;" "Receipts from payments for "Chambers," followed by a blank space, but below is entered,—"Memorandum, quod receipimus in Festo "Sancti Matthaei Apostoli xiiis. iiiid., de pecuniis incis-"tatis in studio Praepositi, pro communis lathomi et "suorum servientium, in parte solutionis."—"20*d.*" it "remembered, that we received on the Feast of St. "Matthew the Apostle 13*s.* 4*d.*, out of moneys inchested "in the Provost's study, for the commons of the stone-"mason and his servants, in part payment." The next heads of Receipts are,—"From rents arising without the "town;"—"From rents of houses within the town;"—"From receipts in the store-house (in staurro);"—"Receipts from the Bailiffs;"—"Receipts from Fines;"—"From profits elsewhere arising." Under this last head, are entered, among other items, the following (tr.);—"Also, we received four pounds on the ground of "mortuaries, for Catholic men buried within our Parish, "who died within one year after they came into the "Parish. Also, from a certain clerk in Salusbury, who "died on the 25th day of August last, one gown, which "(unum togam, quem) we sold for 3*s.* 4*d.*" Also, for the "burial of the same clerk, and composition thereon, "2*s.* 8*d.*" The receipts for this first year amount to 154*l.* 17*s.* 11*d.*

The Expenditure for the same year begins with, "Expense in Communis,"—"Expenses in Commons;" then "Expense exercecentes," or "Exceedings," i.e., additional expenditure in commons on remarkable days. Then follow "Expense battellorum," "Expenses of "battels" (food not consumed in commons, or at the common table, in the hall); "Expenses of the Provost, "the Vicar, and the other priests of the house;" "Expenses of the butler, the cook, the under-cook, the "barber, and the laundress." Then, "Expenses of "things bought," under which head occur the following items of more or less interest.—"Item, pro fegale et "hamis, iiid. obol. Item, pro seminibus ad ortum, iid. "Pro una cathena ad libriariam, iiiid. Item, pro pur-"gatione, sive wedatione, in gardino, iiiid. Item, pro "cathenatione, iis. iid.,—iid. datos fabro. Item, pro "potatione cum clerico villae, et pro potatione diver-"sorum transeuntium ad silvam, pro honore Sancti "Johannis Baptistae, iiiid." (Tr.)—"Also, for flints "and hooks, 2)d. Also, for seeds for the garden, 2*d.* "For a chain for the library, 4*d.* Also, for the cleansing, "or weeding, in the garden, 4*d.* Also, for putting up "the chains [?in the Library], 2*s.* 2*d.*,—2 pence given "to the blacksmith. Also, for the drinking with the "town-clerk, and for drink given to divers persons who "were going to the wood, in honour of St. John the "Baptist, 4*d.*" This is followed by—"Expenses of the "workmen," among which items are the following.—"Pro factura machinae fontis, solutos Bussy, xxid. Item, "pro plumbario apud Ecclesiam Sanctae Mariae, xiiis. "iiiid. Item, dedimus eidem plumbario unam togam, "quam habuimus ex causa mortuarii, utesset favorabilis. "Item, pro pynnes et pro crestes, vis. viiid. Pro mosse "et clavis, una vice vi*d.* Pro mundatione diaetae centena "clavornm. xd. Pro musco, crestes, et pynnes, ixs. "iiiid." (Tr.)—"For making a windlass for the draw-"well, paid to Bussy, 21*d.* Also, for the plumber at "the Church of St. Mary, 13*s.* 4*d.* Also, we gave to "the same plumber a gown, which we had as a mortuary "gift, that so he might be favourable,"—meaning probably, moderate in his charges. "Also, for pins, and "for crests, 6*s.* 8*d.* For moss and nails, at one time, "7*d.* For moss and half a hundred of nails, 10*d.* For "moss, crests, and pins, 9*s.* 4*d.*" It may deserve remark that the moss mentioned here, as also in the accounts of Queen's College, was used for the purpose of binding the earthen, or clay, walls; the pins and nails for fastening it on; and the crests were probably ornamental mouldings for the ridges of the walls. In Cambridge, canvas was used for holding together these earthen walls, when first built.

In the Computus of the following year (A.D. 1410), under the head of "Expenses upon the Churches," are the items (tr.)—"Also, for the hire of vestments for the "Feast of our Lord's Nativity, 12*d.* Also, paid to the "person who bought the oil and chrism, 12*d.*" Under "Expenditure upon the House," are the following.—"Also to a poor person, 12*d.*, seeing that he lost his "gown (togam) while he was working for us." Under this year there is a head of expenditure "Upon lords "and friends," under which occur the following items.—"Also, for wine taken with the bailiffs in the Provost's

" Chamber, that is, for three pottels, 12*d*. Also to " John Wygan, for carrying a letter to London, 6*d*. " Also, for a certain breakfast (jantacio) given to the " Bailiffs of Oxford and their wives in the Provost's " Chamber, in Lent, 10*s*. 8½*d*. Also, for wine given to " Snappe, 4*d*." Under "Expenses as to things bought," the follow items occur.—" Also, for a little lock, with a " key, to Rosamund's herb-garden (herbarium), 5*d*. " Also for goddardez (goddards, or wooden cups), 6*d*. " Also, for a purse to put the money in, 1*d*. Also, ex- " pended upon the servant of Lovelle, when he brought " the venison from his master, 8*d*. Also, for the Bailiffs, " spent upon drink and upon cherries, 8*d*. Also, to " Facelle, as a mark of regard (ratione amoris), 3*s*. 4*d*."

In p. 77, under the head of "Expenses of workmen " upon the Gate," the stone is mentioned as being brought from Shottover; the same soft crumbling stone so commonly to be seen in Oxford at the present day.

In p. 87, under the head of "Receipts for Stalls in the " Church of St. Mary," are two items,—" Received also " from Mariona Dymmok 20*d*. Also, from Chicheley, " 3*s*. 4*d*.," the latter no doubt, being Henry Chicheley, then a Fellow of New College, afterwards Archbishop of Canterbury, and Founder of All Souls.

Among the "Expenses" in p. 105 are the items:— " Also, paid for gloves given to the Bailiffs, 14*d*. Also, " for spices for the clerk of the Lord Archbishop of " Canterbury, 8*d*." In p. 109 (under A.D. 1412), " Also, " for the binding of the Sermons [for Sundays and Lent] " of James of Genoa (Januensis in Sermonibus) 16*d*. " Also, for binding the book of the Rose of Medicine " (Rose in Medicinis), and chaining the same, 24*d*. Also, " for the chain of the book, 4*d*." The "Rosa Medicinæ" was a work by John Gatisdene, or Gaddesden. According to Mr. Coxe's Catalogue, copies are to be found in the Libraries of Jesus, Merton, and Corpus Christi, Oxford.

In taking leave of this volume, I feel justified in saying that it contains the best written and most thoroughly intelligible set of accounts belonging to this distant period, that I have ever met with.

A thick small quarto paper volume, in a tattered condition, containing the Treasurers' Computi from 1450 to 1482. The accounts from 1415 to 1450 seem to be missing.

A thick small quarto paper volume, also in a tattered condition: it contains Computi from 1482 to 1515, then miscellaneous papers down to 1525. From that date to 1583, as I learned from the Provost, the whole of the accounts are no longer to be found.

A folio volume, known as "the Dean's Register," in old calf, containing 614 written pages, the leaves being of vellum and paper intermixed, and in good condition. At page 57 it begins to assume the character of a College Register: there being written, on a leaf of parchment, " Sequuntur acta præcipue memorabilia toto tempore " quo Magister Johannes Tailour erat Præpositus." The Elections of Fellows and Licenses to proceed in Arts, entered in this book, come down to 1634. Pp. 446–598 record the admissions of Exhibitioners from 1540 to 1715, and of Almsmen, during the same period, into St. Bartholomew's Hospital without Oxford; this Hospital (which had been founded by Henry I., and endowed out of rents due to the Crown from the City of Oxford), having been granted by Edward III. in 1328 in perpetual frankalmoigne to the Provost and Scholars of Oriel College and their successors. The first 38 written pages (pp. 9–47) are occupied with letters, deeds, and other instruments, from 1445 to 1534. From the disjointed nature and dates of its contents, this volume is evidently composed of several books bound up together, probably about a century and a half ago.

Continuation of the Dean's Register; a folio volume, somewhat larger in size.

A Book of Transcripts, small quarto, made by, or under the inspection of, the late Bishop Copleston, formerly Provost of the College. It consists mostly of transcripts from the Dean's Register, but it also contains sundry Letters as well; among them, two letters of King Charles the Second, one in behalf of Thomas Twitty, a Bachelor of Arts, recommending him as a Fellow, and the other revoking the letter previously written in his behalf (January and February 1674). A letter from Dr. Fell to Dr. Fuller, Bishop of Lincoln, 17 February 1674, congratulating him on "coming off " with flying colours." Receipt dated 12th January 1642, by William Parkhurst and Thomas Bushell for college plate placed in their possession (to be melted for the King's use),—" In guilt plate 29 lb. 5 oz. 5 dwt. " In white plate 52 lb. 7 oz. 14 dwt." A letter from Lord Chancellor Harcourt to Dr. Carter, the Provost, relative to a Prebend of Rochester. From Dr. Gibson, Bishop of Lincoln, to Dr. Carter, recommending a candidate for a Dorsetshire Fellowship. These are followed by a number of memoranda on College affairs, the rest of the volume being left in blank. There are also a considerable number of loose papers, either written or collected by Dr. Copleston, in reference to similar matters.

The following document was brought to my notice, in the College Muniment-room, by Professor Stubbs.—

A long parchment Roll, of three membranes sewed together, being a contemporary copy of Depositions taken, A.D. 1411, relative to riots in the University between the Northern and Southern Scholars, and resistance to the Visitation of the Archbishop of Canterbury; three Fellows of the College, Master William Symon, Robert Dykes, and Thomas Wyttone, by name, and John Rote, the chaplain of the College, being the parties principally concerned. According to the attestation of one John Sampson, the three Fellows and the Chaplain declared,—" Quod vellent stare cum patriotis suis, et " pro eisdem pugnare usque ad mortem."—" They " would stand with their fellow-countrymen [the " Northerners], and fight for them even to the death." They are here accused of being night-walkers, of collecting the scholars within Oriel in arms, of frequenting taverns, entering the College at 10, 11, and 12 at night, and, when they could not gain admission upon knocking at the gate, climbing over the College walls, and inducing strangers to do the same. After the charges, the interrogatories put to the witnesses are added, and are full of matter of interest. The fourth charge is (tr.);—" Also, " Thomas Wyttone, not being able to enter by the gate, " about 10 o'clock made entry by scaling the wall, and " came with great clamour to the door of the Provost's " chamber, awoke him from his sleep, and attacked " him with abuse and bad language; calling him false, " and telling him that he lied, to his head (mentiebatur " in caput ejus); inviting him also to arise, and come " out and fight him." The Provost, thus disgracefully assailed, was, we may fairly presume, a supporter of the Southern cause. See more, in reference probably to this feud, in Mr. Anstey's Munimenta Academica, Introd. p. lxiv.

It is here my pleasing duty to acknowledge myself much indebted to Dr. Hawkins, the Provost of Oriel, and Canon of Rochester, for the great interest he manifested in my researches, and the care he took to put me in the way of gaining such information as I might be enabled to commit to writing during my (too) brief visit. To the Reverend William Stubbs, Regius Professor of Modern History, and Fellow of the College, I owe many thanks, for his good offices in gaining me access not only to the archives of this College but to those of several other foundations as well. My best thanks are also due to D. B. Monro, Esquire, Fellow and Tutor of the College, and to C. B. Shadwell, Esquire, Fellow and Junior Treasurer, for the prompt courtesy with which they proffered me every assistance in their power towards facilitating my task.

HENRY THOMAS RILEY.

QUEEN'S COLLEGE, OXFORD.

Some of the following books are described in the order in which they were shown to me by Mr. Robinson; the rest, together with the Computi, were taken by me from their repositories in the Bursary of the College.—

The Entrance-Book: a folio paper volume, paged in part, but not throughout. None of its contents, original or copied, are older than the 16th century: they are of a very miscellaneous nature. On a slip of parchment which forms part of the binding are the words,—" 6 " Fellows died in this College in five years' time, and " four or five promoted by private Patrons. Vide Cat. " Scriorum in 1690, etc." Fol. 4 contains a few notes about the former history of the College. Fol. 5, fol. 6a. contains a list of Provosts of the College from the time of its foundation, beginning with Richard de Retford, Provost in 1340. In fols. 7–22 is a List of Fellows from the foundation of the College, the first Fellow being William de Cundale, 1340. This is followed by a list of persons admitted into the College, the earlier admissions being extracted from the "Liber Prompturarii," or Buttery-Book of the College. From 1589 to the present day the entries are original. It deserves remark, as Mr. Robinson has suggested to me, that the list as given from the Liber Promptuarii does not exactly agree with the list of Matriculations as given in the University Register. Among the original entries in this volume the following deserve notice:—"Term. " Pasch. 1651. Sir George Fletcher. June 16. Fellow " Commoner. George Johnston, servant to Sir George " Fletcher, June 16." "Term. Mag. Nat. 1651 . . . " William Ball, Aug. 6th, m. c. (upper commoner). " George Jordan, servant to William Ball"—these " servants" being admitted probably as servitors of the College.—" Joseph Addison, com., Mart. 18, 1687," and " Jeremy Bentham, com., June 28, 1760." The last four pages of the book contain a copy of the "inscrip- " tion upon the plates given to the College by several " Gent. Commoners since 1646." Under the date of July 7, 1651, is written,—"The greatest part of the " Coll. Plate suffered to be melted down for the benefit " and reliefe of King Charles 1st, at the time of the " Rebellion,"—words which are now nearly effaced.

There is kept in the hands of the Senior Fellow of the College, the Reverend L. P. B. Dykes (to whom I feel much indebted for many marks of courtesy which I have experienced at his hands), a comparatively modern paper book, of octavo size, and with the following contents:—(i.) " Dr. Smith's Rules and Orders for the better " regulation of the College, which were drawn up at " Lady Betty Hastings' request for the use of her Ex- " hibitioners, which every young student, at his admis- " sion, solemnly promises to observe." (ii.) " Sconces " and Penalties appointed for the better observation of " the aforesaid rules." (iii.) A copy of the Latin Sta- tutes of Richard II. (iiii.) " Compositio et Statuta " Grindalliana." (v.) " Statuta de Scholasticis Domini " Edmundi Grindall, necnon de Scholaribus per com- " positionem dicti Reverendissimi Patris ob defectum " Socii eligendis per Præpositum et Socios, anno 1583, " 17^mo die Febr." (vi.) The College's Graces, before and after Dinner. (vii.) A list of the Provosts, with biographical notes. (viii.) A list of the Bishops edu- cated at the College, with biographical notes. (ix.) A list of the College Livings. (x.) A list of the sites where the College has estates, or whence it has revenues. (xi.) Some Notes on the history of the College. (xii.) A list of fees due to the Provost from the College, begin- ning,—"Three collars of brawn about Christmas." (xiii.) The annual rent paid to the Provost for the rooms which he lets in his Lodge, beginning,—" Duke of Bucking- " ham's rooms, 2*l.* 0*s.* 0*d.*" (xiiii.) The Exhibitions be- longing to the College. (xv.) Some further Historical Notes. (xvi.) Colleges in Oxford rated by consent of the Convocation, Jan. 18, 1643-4.

A "Liber Obitalis," alleged to belong to Queen's College, Oxford, and containing entries as old as the time of Edward III., is mentioned by Stacey Grimaldi (Orig. Geneal., 1828, p. 247) and by J. Hubback (Evi- dence of Succession, 1844, p. 534). In the Manuscript Index of the private papers of the College, in vol. 5, p. 408 of the work by Mr. E. R. Mores, hereafter to be mentioned, there is named, as being in the possession of the College, in the middle of last century, a—" Mar- " tyrologium vetus, cui præfigitur Calendarium Paschale " obitualium Benefactorum Collegii Reginalis." This however does not appear to be the "Liber Obitalis" above named; nor is there, on enquiry made, any book of this description to be found at Queens' College, Cam- bridge. Neither the Martyrologium, with its Calendar, the Liber Obitalis, nor the Liber Promptuarii, men- tioned above in the Entrance-Book, was to be found at the time of my making these enquiries.—The informa- tion relative to them (at present) missing books was given to me by Mr. Robinson.

A small Common-place Book, a 12mo volume, con- taining 93 leaves of paper, and bound in limp vellum. It belongs to the first half of the seventeenth century, its contents in general referring to the affairs of the College, and mostly to its estates. There are also some miscellaneous memoranda in it: in fol. a.—" Sir Henry " Wootton, Provost of Eaton, hath the workes of Luther " in Dutch out of the Library. They were not fitt to " be alienated, intreat him to restore them, at least after " his death." In another hand is added,—" They were " restored to the Coll. after his decease, and are now " againe in the Coll. Library." The entries extend from about 1626 to 1636. In p. 87 are the following entries:—"1634. The Chappell repaired and beautified. " Fellowis commons (sic for "commons") encreased, " singulis i*d.* singulis prandiis (a penny to each at each " dinner) . . . . . Their brawne doubled."

Five small paper 12mo volumes, now preserved in the Provost's Lodge, written in a minute and graceful hand, and containing a history of the College under its various aspects; compiled by Edward Rowe Mores, M.A. and F.S.A. He was born, as stated on the fly-leaf of the first volume, at Tunstall, in Kent, educated at Merchant Taylors' School, and admitted a Commoner of the Col- lege 24th June 1746; M.A. in 1753. He died at Low Leyton, in Essex, 28th November 1778. On the inside of the cover of the First volume is pasted a pencil sketch of —"The inside of the Old Gate of Queen's Coll., Oxford, " and the East Window of the Old Chapel, with the " Chambers of the Black Prince, by George Bellas, " e Coll. Reg., A. B. 1753." This volume, which contains 98 pages, with two inserted leaves, includes transcripts of Charters, Royal Letters, and other documents, re- lating to the College (the ancient abbreviated forms being used), from the earliest date, the 18th of January, 14 Edward III., down to the reign of George II.; docu- ments and extracts relating to the Founder, Provosts, and other members of the College; charters, deeds, and muniments, as to places situate in the City of Ox- ford, now forming the site, or being the property, of the College. Its contents evidently throw much light upon this early history, not only of the College, but of the City of Oxford as well.

The pagination at the close of the First volume is con- tinued in the Second, and so throughout the series; which is filled with abstracts of early deeds relative to the College property; those relating to the County of Oxford occupying the Second volume. Without enter- ing into any details as to the College estates, it may be mentioned, viewing these volumes only as so many repertories of County history, that the other Counties, particulars as to which are given in them, are Cumber- land, Westmoreland, Berkshire, Warwickshire, Hamp- shire, Dorsetshire, Buckinghamshire, Kent, Gloucester- shire, and Durham, with the City of Westminster. At pp. 415–458 is a long and minute list and abstract of— " Chartæ et Munimenta in Thesaurario Coll. Reginalis " asservata, quæ ad Regiencses aut nihil aut parum " spectant," in general, with the dates of the documents annexed. The Counties enumerated in this latter list are,—Berkshire, Buckinghamshire, Cumberland, Ox- fordshire, Pembrokeshire, Hampshire, Surrey, Suffolk, Sussex, Staffordshire, Worcestershire, Westmoreland, and Lincolnshire, with the City of London.

Liber Sponsorum: a paper folio book, bound in limp parchment, and without pagination. It contains entries and signatures from the beginning of the 17th, to the beginning of the 18th, century; its entries being en- gagements made by the College Tutors (or perhaps Bursars) for payment of their Battels by certain under- graduates under their charge. The following is a sample:—" Be it knowne unto all men that I, Barnabas " Simpson, doe hereby bind my selfe to discharge all " such battles as any subscribed with myne owne hand " shall battle in Queen's Colledge in Oxford. In witnes " whereof, I subscribe my name. Barn. Symson." The names of the students for whom he answers are— " Carlos, Capper, Wharton, Bowen, Goodwin, Radcliff, " Symson,"—the date being about 1660.

Computus Book of the Treasurer and Chamberlain of the Receipts and Expenditure of the College; a folio parchment volume, in old leather, 1593–1613.

Computus Book, 1610–1628; a similar parchment volume, in old calf.

Computus Book, 1628–1657; a folio parchment vo- lume, in old calf.

Computus Book, 1657–1665; a folio parchment vo- lume, in old calf.

Computus Book, 1666–1712; a folio vellum volume, in rough calf.

Computus Book, 1713–1743; a similar volume to the preceding one.

Computus Book, 1743–1770; a vellum folio, in rough calf, with clasps.

Computus Book, 1770–1790; a similar volume, but thinner.

Book of Accounts for building the new Library of the College, 1691–3, a small quarto paper volume, in limp parchment.

An old Rental Book of houses and lands in Southamp- ton, in the latter part of the 16th century, in quarto, thin pamphlet form, and bound in two leaves of a hand- some Service-book, with musical notation. There are also several other old paper Rental Books, connected with Southampton, more or less imperfect.

A Register, or Chartulary, of the Hospital of St. Julian, or God's House, at Southampton, folio, with leaves of vellum, bound in calf of the 17th century. The very earliest part of this interesting volume was probably written in the reign of Edward III., while the latest entries in it seem to be of the time of Henry VII. It is prefaced with a "Custuma de Gussyche," or Custumal of Gussage (in Dorsetshire), giving the terms on which the boudmes there held their lands. This, however, occupies less than half a page, the rest of it being occupied by a list of Mayors of Southampton, beginning at the 7th of Edward III., and continued, in later hands, down to the 31st of Henry VI. After a list of the Kings of England, probably written in the time of Henry VII., comes,—"Modus recitendi sacerdotes ad Ordinis nostri fruitionem,"—"The mode of receiving secular" to the benefit of our Order." After this ceremony is described, it is added (translated from the Latin),—"And observe, that every one of the brethren and sistren of this place, that is, the House of God at Southampton, ought to say each day the Lord's Prayer one hundred and eighty times, and as often the Salutation of the Angel [Ave Maria]; that is to say, 40 times for the First [Prime]; 60 times for the Third Hour [Tierce]; 20 times for the Sixth Hour [Sext]; 20 times for the Ninth Hour [None]; 20 times for Vespers; 40 times for the Hour of Compline; and 20 times for all the brethren and sistren, and benefactors of the said house, as well living as dead." The ancient Hospital of St. Julian, or God's House, was founded in the reign of Henry III., partly as a Convent for nuns, and partly as a Chapel to a neighbouring Friary, which was burnt by the French in the time of Edward III., who gave the Hospital to this College, which is still in possession of the property. This Chartulary, if closely examined, would no doubt throw much light upon the early history of Southampton.

An old Expense-Book of the College, folio, leaves of paper without a cover: it is in Latin, and the writing is probably of the close of the 15th century. It begins with the Chapel expenses, "Custus Capelle," and ends with charges "Pro Stabulo Præpositi," For the Provost's Stable, and "Custus Focalium," "Charges for "Fuel." No names or dates seem to occur; and some portion of it is probably wanting.

A miscellaneous Account-book, kept by the College authorities, as against the students, 1639–74; an oblong folio volume, with paper leaves. It is filled additionally with loose memoranda of a contemporary date, consisting of bills, and lists of books bought (apparently) for undergraduates of the College. Some of the entries in this book are of a very quaint character, and throw much light upon the details of College life in the 17th century.

A Computus-Book for 1650, a long paper folio, bound in parchment. It seems to contain all the battels, payments, and rents of the College, for a single year. From it we learn that a tenant of this College at Denton had "Jocosa [Joyce] Wildgoose" for her name. On the first page is written,—"A plemor [? a thing to be "kept in plena memoria ?] for the Bursar—at his "peril—Write before you pay; receive before you "write." Thomas Lamplugh (afterwards Dean of Rochester, Bishop of Exeter, and Archbishop of York) was College Treasurer this year, and George Phillips Chamberlain.

The Buttery-Books, large oblong folios, begin at the year 1654. Their sole use would now be, to tell who were in residence at Oxford at certain dates.

This College was founded in 1340, by Robert de Eglesfeld, Chaplain to Queen Philippa, wife of Edward III. The oldest of its Computi, now existing, dates as early as—from "the Saturday after the Feast of St. Gre-"gory to the Feast of St. Michael then next ensuing," in 1347. There were no earlier Computi of the College known to be in existence when Mores made his compilation, already noticed. From the following extracts it will be seen that Eglesfeld was residing in his College at this date, having surrendered all his property to it, and amenable apparently to just the same rules as the rest of the Fellows. 1349 is said to have been the year of his death. In this Roll it is stated that its various items are set forth in the "Liber Dispensatoris," "the "Steward's Book," which has most probably perished centuries ago. The first item in the roll is (tr.)—"In "the first week, in which is the Feast of St. Cuthbert "[March 20], for the commons of Eglesfeld, Haukes-"worthe, Cundale, and Jurnelle, Colnigham for 2 days, "and for the commons of two Chaplains and of Herman, "11s. 7d. Also, for the battels . . . . . and of Eglesfeld, "2s. 11d., as set forth in the Steward's Book." Of the 28 weeks whose commons are here given, Eglesfeld was in commons for 21 weeks, half commons one week, battels alone without commons (probably from sickness) one week, and absent five. From the side of "Ex-"penses" in the roll, the following items are selected:—"Also, delivered to Sir [or "Dan" Domino] Robert "de Eglesfeld for his oblation on the Feast of the "Annunciation of our Lord, 1d. Also, for three covers "of putter bought for the cups (cifis) about the time of "that Feast, 3d. Also, delivered to John Burgh, for "the repair of one tabard and hood (caputii) about "the same time, 4d. Also, for mending a pot in the "kitchen, and for a riyye (? ringe) and staple for the "garden door, and a block and iron setting for the "lamp, taken together (in grosso), about the Feast of "St. Cuthbert, 2d. . . . . Also, delivered to Egles-"feld, for his oblation on Palm Sunday, 1d. Also, "delivered to the same, for his oblation on the day of "the Parasceve [Good Friday], 1d. Also, delivered to "him for his oblation on Easter Day, 1d. Also, de-"livered to Sir Robert de Eglesfeld in the week after "Easter, by the hands of Adam the groom (garcionis), "20s." Though apparently not one of the Fellows of the College, William Polmorva, who had been Rector of Exeter College a few years previously, was now holding chambers here; red earth being mentioned in this account as being used for the "torchura," or dawbing, of his chambers.—"Also, for the making of "one clicked key (latch-key) for the garden door, and "for the making of three feet for pots, 5d. Also, for "the binding of 6 morter metes (mortar-mills) with "cercs (hoops), and the mending of two cerves (tubs). . . . Also, for the lime upon one therin when "changed by order of Sir Robert de Eglesfeld, at the "time when Thuresby ate with him, 2d. Also, for a "horse hired by Peter for Sir Robert Eglesfelde, "when he went to London on Thursday next after the "Feast of St. Augustine, Bishop of the English (May 26), "for six days, 10d. Also, for a horse hired for Roger "Swynbroke, going to Denham, on Friday the day of "St. Margaret (July 20) to obtain money from Sir "William Muskham [the then Provost of the College], "8d. . . . . Also, for a horse hired for Sir Robert "Eglesfeld, when going to Southampton, about the "Feast of St. Peter's Chains (August 1), 23d. Also, "for a reddel (riddle, or sieve) bought to sift scandust "(sandust), about the time of the Feast, 1d. "Also, for an iron for the one of the Provost of Oriall "which was lent to Sir Robert de Eglesfelde (in uno "ferro pro uno Præpositi de Orialle accomodat' Domino "Roberto de Eglesfelde), 1d. Also, for parchment "bought for Sir Robert Eglesfelde for writing letters, "about the Nativity of St. Mary (September 8) on one "occasion, and on the Feast of St. Lambert (Septem-"ber 17) on another occasion, 1d." After this, Swynbroke is again named as going to Denham for money, his horse and groom costing 16½d.—"Also, paid to a "carpenter hired to make a windlase and a poleyn "(windlass and pulley), for two days, 7d. Also, for a "lamp, and an implement for hanging it by a cord, "and for a wooden implement with a binding of iron, "4½d. Also, for parchment bought for Eglesfelde for "writing letters, on the Feast of Saints Cosmus (sic) "and Damianus (September 27), ½d. Also, delivered "to Sir Robert Eglesfeld about the Nativity of St. "Mary (September 8), by the hands of Peter, 20s., "which he paid to John Stangrave for his place [piece "of land]."

Among the Receipts in this Roll are the following items:—"Received from the garden, from the Feast "of St. Michael to the same Feast next year,—for pot-herbs (oleribus), 8½d. Also, for parsely, 3½d. Also, "for leeks, 8d. Also, for chibolles [eibouls, small "onions], 22d. Also, for fenelstales [? fennel-stalks], "9d. Also, for fennel-seed, 8d. Also, for schrudyngis "[? shrivings, or clippings] of trees, 8d. Also, for "garlic, 12d. Also, for onions, 14d." Then follows a list of things, "Bought for the garden":—"For "garlic bought, 3s. 1d. Also, for leek-seed bought, "7d. Also, for onion-seed, 15d." All that occurs in this document bearing reference to the Founder of the College has been here extracted; but I would recommend that the whole of the Computus be copied before it has become, as it soon will do, for the most part, illegible.

The next Computus, apparently, is that of Robert Hoddirsale, but of uncertain date, and is mostly occupied with items of expenditure upon the College Chapel. One of 1350 has no name of the Bursar mentioned in it, and is in very bad condition. The next rolls that have been preserved are those of John de Heton 1351, and Master Henry Wytfeld 1354: the "Expense apud "Spersholt" (Sparsholt, in Berks.) in the latter Computus are curious. A Computus, apparently for 1354, 5, is almost illegible: that of Richard Fancourt for 1357–9 is mutilated at the beginning; being followed by one of Henry Witfeld, Bursar, in 1359, and two other Computi of Richard Fanceurt 1359, 60, and 1361. A Computus of Master Henry de Hopton follows, for 1361, 2, and one of William de Wiltone for 1362.

The next Computus, that of William de Wiltone for 1363, 4, deserves remark as containing an account of the expenses of Master Henry de Wyttefeld, the then Provost of the College, on the occasion of his journey to Avignon, in reference to a trial referred to the Papal Court, as to the living of Sparsholt, previously mentioned. He changed at London 23*l.* for florins, at 3*s.* 1½*d.* the florin, receiving 148 florins and 17 pence. He then sold his horse and saddle for 24 shillings. To Counsel and Notaries he paid 57 florins and 10 pence. Among his other expenses are the following items:—"For purchase of a gown (roba) with a "large cape, 24 flor. For budge [or prepared lamb-"skin] for the same, 10 flor. For cloth bought for a "tunic, (tunica) and a short cape, 12 flor. 2 gros [grossi, "French coin]. For budge, 4 flor. 1 gros. For a pair "of boots, 1 flor. For another pair of boots, 9 gros. "For purchase of a bed, 7 flor., 4 gros., and 6 deniers, "money of the Court. For hay for the bed, 3½ gros. To "a tailor, 1 flor. For linen vestments, 5 gros. 18 de-"niers, money of the Court. For 4 pairs of shoes, "11 gros. For gloves, 3 gros." Under the head of Payments for Commons is the following item,—"Given "in wine and other things among the Fellows [of the "House, or Society, with whom he lodged], at the time "of my arrival, 43 solidi, money of the Court." The sums total of each week's expenses, during his absence, are then given, until we come to the following item, —"In the 17th week I departed from the town before "making up the account; and I told Himberford [a "Fellow of the Society, who was his agent] to pay "what was to be paid."

For the Pope's Bull on this occasion, he paid 7 florins. As to smaller expenses,—to his barber he paid 4 gros., a coin apparently 5½*d.* in value, and to his in-door servant (intrinseco) and laundress, 10 gros. He also had his own guide, or escort:—"Also, paid to Thomas "Hyrland, that he should escort me safely, 20*s.* ster-"ling." In returning from the Court, at Avignon, to Caleys (Calais), 18 days were occupied, at an expense of 44*s.* 7½*d.*; the expenses from Calais to Oxford being 7 shillings. At Paris he paid, "for the King's protec-tion," one florin. In his journey to Avignon he occupied no less than 7 weeks, "by reason of the bad weather "(intemperiem), and the perils by the road." This document, it may be here remarked, has been examined at considerable length by Professor Rogers in his able work upon Prices in the Middle Ages.

The next Computus is that of Thomas de Nesse, 1364, 5. Under the head of "Custus Coquinæ," "Kitchen Expenses," the following items occur:— "Also, paid on the exchange of old dishes for the same "weight in new ones, 9½*d.* Also, for 12 garnitures "(? ornamental dishes) of peuter vessel (pewter "plate) bought of John Butler, 9*s.* Also, for ladilles "(ladles), 2*d.* For 3 mels (mallets), 8*d.* For one flos-"crok (flesh-hook), 3*d.* For one soup-boiler (pipma-"torio), 12*d.*" A Computus of William de Wilton follows, for 1365, and two of William de Wombwelle for 1365, 6, and 1366, 7. In the latter, under the head of "House Expenses," are the following items:—"First, "for cloth bought for the tables in hall, 6*s.* 8½*d.* Also, "for necessaries for the kitchen, namely, a tankerd "(large pail), ladel, and peperquernis (pepper-mills), "12½*d.* Also, to the cook for ouches on the garden, "4*d.*, and to another person for pulling up the nettles, "11*d.*" Under the head of "Moneys delivered for "parchment and writing," are the following:—"For "parchment bought for Southampton, 4*d.* For parch-"ment bought by Wombwelle, 7*d.* For parchment "bought by the Provost, 8*d.* Also, for writing done, "20*d.* Also, for parchment for writing the Summa "Summarum [a Commentary on the Decretals of Pope "Gregory IX.], 3*d.* Also, at another time, for parch-"ment bought by Thomas, 3*d.* For paper, 1*d.*, and "for parchment bought by the Provost, 2*d.*, and by "Wombwelle, 2½*d.* Also for repairing the Summa "Summarum, namely, binding and covering it, 5*s.* 8*d.*" This book, I find, on enquiry, is no longer in the possession of the College.) The "situla fontis" is mentioned in this roll, shewing that, as at Exeter College, a draw-well within the College was used.

The next Computi are those of Gilbert de Grymmsby 1368, 9, John Beyham 1369, 70, and one for 1371, 2 without a name. In this latter, which will be again referred to, in reference to another subject, the following times occur:—"First, for the commons of Caleys "[one of the Pneri Elecmosynariæ," or "Almonry "boys"] for 26 weeks, 16*s.* 8*d.* Also, for a new "cloak (cloga), 6*s.* 4*d.* Also, for making it, 9*d.* Also, "for blanket (thick cloth), 27*d.*" Among payments to the Fellows, it is stated that "Trevisa (who had now "removed to this College from Exeter College) re-"ceived half a mark and one penny." Under the "Expenses of the Chapel" are the following items:— "First, for wax bought on the Feast of St. Frideswyde, "6*s.* Also, for making candles and other things, 14*d.* "For candles for the Study (Studii) at different times, "14*d.* For making a little bell, 4*d.* For two keys, "and mending the Chapel lock, 13*d.* For mending "vestments, 3*d.* For rushes, 7*d.* For wine, as by "tallies, 5*s.* 8*d.* For the writing of the names (nomi-"norum) of the Foundresses (Fundatricium) of the "Hall, 8*d.* For the table and circumference, upon "which are written the names of the Benefactors of "the house, 9*d.* Also for the expenses of Middelworth "and Trevisa, in shewing the muniments of the church "of Newbold (Newbold Pacey, Co. Warwick), at "Stretton, and their charges on the road, 30*d.*"

In the Computus of Robert Blakedone for 1372, 3, the name of John Trevisa appears again as a Fellow. Linen is bought—"for two tablecloths, two finger-nap-"kins, and two savenaps" [sanapis.—This latter word appears as "savenaps" in one of the College Rolls of 22, 3 Richard II., and as "savenaps" in other instances; the "savenap" no doubt was worn like a bib, to save the clothes, at meals]. Another item is, "iij d. pro no-"rshyns ad eosdem stonemasons,"—"3 pence for nun-"cheons for the same stonemasons."

In the Computus of Robert Blakedone for 1373, 4, John Trevisa is again mentioned as a Fellow. A Computus of Robert Blakedone, Henry Wytfeld, Nicholas Heford, and William Middleworth, appears for 1374, 5. It will be again referred to.

At this latter date a considerable hiatus occurs in the surviving Computi. An "Indenture of Receipts" exists from August 1380 to some date effaced. In the Computus of William Brigge for 1381, 2, the following items occur:—"Also, for chains for chaining six books, "28*d.* . . For one pair of boots for the vicar of "Spersalt (Sparsholt), 16*d.*" The Computus for 1382–4 is that of "John Lockwode and Matthew Williathorpe, "Fellows of Queen's Hall." In the Roll for 1385, 6, without name of the Bursar, under "Chapel Expenses," are the items,—"Also, for a bell bought at London, "7*s.* 3*d.* To a carpenter for preparing wood for the "bell, 18*d.* Also, to a smith, 18*d.* To William Southam, "for carriage of the bell, 18*d.* To a mason, 2*d.*" This roll is very full and minute in its details.

The Computus of John Lokesley and Richard Brown, for 1386, 7, has some curious details under the head of "Chapel Expenses":—"First, they render account "of 3*s.* 4*d.* paid for three hair cloths (ciliciniis) for the "three altars. Also, of 2*d.* for candle sockets. Also, "for surplices, 14*s.* 11*d.* Also, of 4*l.* 9*s.* 3½*d.* paid for "desks (descis) for the Chapel. Also, of 5*s.* 6*d.* paid "to carpenters for one week, for making such desks. "Also, of 3*d.* for nails for the desks. Also, of 6½*d.* for "rushes for the Chapel. Also, of 8*s.* 4*d.* for planks, to "be placed beneath the feet at the desks. Also, for "iron wire for the bell, 1*d.* Also, for a lamp for the "Chapel, 6*d.*" From this Roll, as well as from several of the preceding ones, the names of all the then Fellows of the College may be obtained. Under the head of "Costs and Repairs within" occur these items:— "Also, for boards for the windows of the hall, 14*d.* "For hooks and thongs for the same, 4*d.* For moss of "trees, 3*d.* [the use of this for binding walls will be "found alluded to under the head of Oriel College]. "For timber for the little-house (parvam domum), 3*s.* "For straw, 5*s.* 7*d.* To Roger the reeder, for three "weeks, 4*s.* 6*d.* To a woman who drew out the straw, "2½*d.* For labourers, 3*s.* 4*d.*" Under the head of "Out-door expenses":—"Also, paid to Master Richard "Brown for his expenses in going to his own locality, "for the books which were left to us by legacy by "Master Henry Wythfild, 12*s.* 3*d.*" The attorney of the College at this date seems to have been named "Dymmok;" a name which frequently occurs in the accounts of Oriel College, at about 25 years' later date. Under "Repairs" is an item,—"For a lock to the door "of the shop which the laundress occupies, 4*d.* Also, "for one to Goterhalle." The College at this period had several shops, which it let to various tenants, situate in its immediate precincts.

The next Computus is that of John Lockusley and R. Coringham, 1387, 8. Under the head of "Costs and "Repairs within," are these items:—"Also, for rods

" (virgis) to support the vines in the garden, 15*d*. For " rushes for the hall, 6½*d*." Under "Out-door Ex- " penses,"—"Also, to John Cokirmethe, going to " Bamptone, 2*s*. 5*d*.; also, going to London for the " exchange of 20*s*. in gold that was broken and deficient " in weight, 3*s*. 2*d*. Also, to William Southam, for " carriage of cloths (pannorum) belonging to the Pro- " vost, in Lent, 8*d*. Also, to Robert Penrock, on the " Eve of the Annunciation of our Lord, going to London " with the Provost's horses, 20*d*. Under the head of " Books bought" occur the following items:—"To " John Brown, for a book containing Parisiensis 'de " Oenlo Morali' [now generally attributed to R. Gros- " teste, Bishop of Lincoln], and 'de Lingua,' [also " attributed to Grosteste], and the Collectorium Galeus' " [probably a Collection from the works of Galen, a copy " of which is in the Library of Corpus Christi, Oxford], " 24*s*. 4*d*. Also, for Occanus [probably meaning Ock- " ham] 'on the Poverty of the Saviour,' 4*s*. Also, " for the Subtle Doctor [Duns Scotus] on Porphyry, " 5*s*." None of these books are in the possession of the College at the present day.

The following Computus is that of Richard Brown and R. Coringham, for 1388, 9. Under "Repairs" are the following items:—"Also, for straw for covering " the latrine of Goterhall . . . For a key to the " chest which stands in the hall, and repair thereof, 3*d*. " Also, to Andrew the carpenter, for making desks in " the Library, 26*s*. 8*d*. For a labourer, pruning the " vines, two days, 7*d*." Under "Out-door Expenses,"— " For a cartload of red earth for (dawbing) a shop, 4*d*. " Also, for carriage of a load of schyndyl (shingles) for " the repair of the Chancel, 2*s*."

The next in order is the Computus of John Lokkislay and Matthew Willesthorp, for 1389, 90.

It is a well known fact that Henry Beaufort (afterwards Bishop of Winchester and Cardinal) was at one time a member of this College. There has not, however, I believe, been hitherto given any absolute proof of this fact; nor, so far as I am aware, has the exact date of his residence here been ascertained. In a Computus Roll of the 13th and 14th of Richard II., ending at the 1st of August 1391, the following entries are found in reference to this point.—"Item, Johanni " servienti Bewforth, pro necessariis emptis, et pro " opere suo ad vestimenta, xviiii*s*. v*d*." "Also, to John " the servant of Bewforth (Beaufort), for necessaries " bought, and for his labour upon the vestments, " 24*s*. 5*d*.," the entry being under the head of "Ex- " penses of the Chapel." At some distance below in the same Roll, is the following entry:—"Item, pro " duabus clavibus, unam (sic) ad Cameram Prapositi, " et alteram ad Cameram Bewforth, vi*d*." "Also, for " two keys, one for the Provost's Chamber, and the " other for the Chamber of Bewforth, 6*d*." Persons who occupied Chambers in the College, not being Fellows, generally paid a "pensio," or rent, for them; but Beaufort seems to have been exempt from paying for his, the "Chamber of Reymund" being the only one entered this year as being paid for. In the Computus for the 16th of Richard II., 1392, 3, there is an entry—" Pro vino Domino Duci Lancastrie, xx d.,"—"For wine given to the Lord Duke of Lancaster, 20*d*." He was father of Henry Beaufort, whose name however occurs in none other of these Computi. It will be remembered that in 1388, 9, he was in residence at Peterhouse, Cambridge (see the First Report of this Commission, p. 78, col. 2).

Henry of Monmouth, afterwards King Henry V., it has been alleged, was also a member of this College, 1398 being suggested by his modern biographer, Mr. Endell Tyler, as the year of his residence. Not the slightest allusion to this fact is however to be found in the Computus of that year, or indeed in those of any year near that date. The Computus of 1398 is however of unusual length, and there appears to have been a greater expenditure than usual, for plate and other things, incurred by the College in that year. It seems not unlikely, that in company with his uncle, Beaufort, then Chancellor of the University, he may have paid a lengthened visit to Queen's College at this date.

From the Computus for the 19th of Richard II., 1395, 6, we find that John Trevisa, though no longer a Fellow of the College, was paying 14*s*. 4*d*. yearly for a chamber which he rented there. In the Roll for the 22nd and 23rd years of the same reign, 1398, 9, he is entered as still paying the same rent, it being there stated that this was only part of the amount which he had formerly paid; his name may probably still be found, on examination, in rolls of a still later date.

Numbers of these rolls, belonging to the 15th century, are still in existence; their length generally increasing, as they become of more recent date. The whole of them, in my opinion, deserve a thorough examination; and much as many of them have suffered from time and neglect, no reasonable precaution should be omitted to ensure their future preservation.

As these rolls have been quoted by the late lamented Professor Shirley as affording some information in reference to Wyclif, the early Reformer, a few lines may be perhaps usefully devoted to stating the results of my own examination of them. In pp. 514, 5, of the Fasciculi Zizaniorum, edited by him in the Rolls Series, Mr. Shirley expresses an opinion that "the following " entries in the Bursars' Rolls of Queen's College prove " the residence of John Wyclif in various years between " 1363 and 1380." In the Computus of W. de Wiltone, 1363, 4,—the following entry (transl.):—"Also to 2 work- " men upon the Chamber of Wiclif for 4 days, 3*s*.;" in a Receipt Roll for 1365,—"Also, for 2 years for the " Chamber of Wyclive, 40*s*.;" in the Computus of Robert Blakedone and others, for 1374, 5,—"Also, for straw for " covering the latrine of Wyclyf, 2*s*.," and among the "Pensiones," or Payments, in the same roll,—" Also, for " the Chamber of Master John Wiclif, 20*s*.;" in an Indenture of Receipts from August 1380 to some date now effaced,—" Also, for the payment by Wiclif, 20*s*." All these quotations have been verified by me, with the exception of the second, the Receipt Roll for 1365, not having been met with. But in addition to these passages, another entry was found in the course of my examination, which had evidently escaped Mr. Shirley's notice. In the Computus for 1371, 2, (without a Bursar's name) already noticed—under the head of "Expensæ Pueroruin," "Expenses of the Boys," is the following passage,— " Item, pro factura unius tunicæ de Wiclif, viii d., et pro " duplatione, xii d. Item pro Magno Doctrinali, viii d. " Item pro cultello, iii d. Item, pro salario Magistri " sui ordinarii pro toto anno nunc præterito, xxxii d."— (tr.)—Also, for making one tunic [? a tabard] of Wiclif, " 8*d*., and for doubling it, 13*d*. Also, for a Great Doc- " trinal, 8*d*. Also, for a knife, 3*d*. Also, for the salary " of his ordinary Master for the whole of the year last " past, 32*d*." The other "Almonry boys" mentioned at this date are Caleys, Walter Exbrugge, and William Huthewayt. The former two had "ordinary masters" (general tutors) like Wyclif, but only for half the year, while Huthewayt had none. Now it can hardly be contended that the "Almonry boy" of Queen's College in 1371, 2, was the John Wyclif, the Reformer, who died, at the age of about sixty, in 1384. These boys seem to have been admitted to the College, according as its funds would allow of; they evidently lived partly also on their own means, as, from the accounts, we find some of them supplied with necessaries much more liberally than others. They are first mentioned, so far as I can gather from the rolls I examined, in 1362, when one "Adam" is the only Almonry boy named. In 1363, the same roll in which the "Chamber of Wiclif" is first mentioned, these boys are spoken of as "Pueri Eleemosynarii," but their names are not given. From the Roll of 1365, it appears that "Adam" was then the only Almonry boy in the College. In 1367, the heading is—"Pauperes " Clerici,"—" Poor Clerks," but Adam is still named as the only one in the College, in the following words:— " In panno empto pro Adam, ix s. iiii d. Item, cissori " pro factura, xvi d. In linea pro eodem, ix d. obol. " Item, in vii paribus sotularium, ii s. xi d. Item, uni " pauperi Mediolanensi, iii s. iiii d." (tr.)—"For cloth " bought for Adam, 9*s*. 4*d*. Also, to a tailor for making it " up, 16*d*. For linen for the same, 9½*d*. Also, for seven " pairs of shoes, 2*s*. 11*d*. Also, to a poor man of Milan, " 3*s*. 4*d*." Though Wyclif was paying for a room in the College in July 1365, from all silence respecting him in the two subsequent rolls, we gather clear that he was not in the College from September 1366 to 1367, or at least was no longer paying for his room. In the roll for 1369 there is a head of "Data Pueris Eleemosy- " nariis"—"Given to the Almonry boys," but their names are not mentioned.

Again, in the Computus succeeding that in which the charge for the education of Wyclif is mentioned, his three colleagues, Caleys, Exbrugge, and Huthewayt, are named: no master is paid this year for teaching them, but each has a "Salary" given him, probably instead, of 8 pence per term. In 1374 Caleys and Exbrugge were still in the College: Huthewayt was dead, there being a charge this year for "Oblations for the soul of " Huthewayt." The Wyclif who was again tenanting a chamber in the College in 1374, 5, and 1380, was in all probability the Almonry boy who had obtained help from the College in 1371, 2. The fact that in the account of 1374, 5. he is called "Magister"—"Master John "Wiclif" in no way militates against this position, inasmuch as the Almonry boy Caleys is mentioned as "Magister Caleys" in these rolls more than once. Indeed, it is a well known fact that, though the term "Magister," or "Master," was especially the title of those who had taken a Master's Degree in the Universities, it was frequently applied in the most arbitrary manner to persons of all ages and classes.

The simple facts of the case then seem to be—that a youth, John Wyclif by name, came to Oxford to study, somewhere between October 1363 and 1364; that he occupied a room in Queen's College, and paid two years rent for it in 1365—probably by the aid of friends, as the rent was by no means a very small one, and ran on unpaid to the end of the second year: that after this, he was in all probability absent from the University for some years: that in 1371, 2, he was again in Queen's College, no longer as a "Pensioner" there, paying a "pensio" or rent for a room, but, as an "Almonry "boy," receiving his commons probably, material assistance in his education,—witness his master for the whole of the year and the "Great Doctrinal" bought for him,—and a contribution from the College funds towards his music, or gown, the garb probably in which he was about to take his degree. Three years after (1374, 5) he again holds a room in the College, but only for a short time probably, and again in 1380, 1, after which his name, as paying a "pensio," or rent, disappears.

Be all this however as it may, and even granting that Mr. Shirley is right in his supposition that it is Wyclif the Reformer who was residing in the College in 1363, 4, we have, in Wiclif, the Almonry boy of Queen's College in 1371, 2, in addition to John Wyclif of Merton College, and John Wyclif the Reformer, a third Wyclif in the field. It would be interesting to know, supposing this to be the case, if any further particulars can be traced in reference to him.

In the College Bursary there are many scores, perhaps some hundreds, of parchment Computi of the House of God, or Hospital of St. Julian, at Southampton, beginning at the reign of Edward I., and coming down to the time of Charles I. They seem in general to be in excellent preservation, and would probably disclose many matters of interest, if closely examined.

I have here to acknowledge, with many thanks, the courtesy shown to me by the Venerable William Jackson, the Provost, and the College generally, in unreservedly submitting their archives to my inspection. I feel myself also almost at a loss to express how great my obligations are to Richard Robinson, Esq., Fellow and Tutor of Queen's College, for his good offices, so freely rendered me, in obtaining for me access not only to the muniments of his own College, but to those of several other Colleges in this University as well.

HENRY THOMAS RILEY.

TRINITY COLLEGE, OXFORD.

My best thanks are due to the Reverend S. W. Wayte, the President, for his kindness in placing before me the following volumes, constituting part of the archives of his College.—

A small quarto paper volume, in old binding, labelled "Computi Bursa., et Miscell. Coll. 1556–1669," and with the following title written on the side within,—"Liber Cautionum antiquarum, aburumque rerum "publicarum, quas Collegium spectant, penuriam "Computa Bursariorum, ad annum 1669." The volume is, in fact, a collection of miscellaneous papers relative to the affairs of the College, bound together in the earlier part of the 18th century.

On the obverse of the first leaf is written,—"March "22d, 1714. Taken out of the Treasury 4 Bundles of "Bursars' Accounts, ab anno 1556 ad annum 1579, ab "anno 1580 ad ann. 1599, 1600 ad ann. 1630, 1631 ad "ann. 1659. Restor'd 15 October 1715." These Bundles, or, at least, a portion of them, now form part of the present volume.

On folio 8b. is an entry, in the hand of Dr. Ingram, late President of the College, — "These valuable "original documents appear to have been carefully "collected and bound together in one thick to volume, "about the time of Dr. Bathurst's Presidentship; the "College papers having been much deranged, and "some irrecoverably lost during the Rebellion. Many "were saved by the care and diligence of Mr. Josias "Howe, at that time Bursar, who took them with him "into the country for a time, instead of leaving them "at the mercy of the Parliamentary Visitors, who had "peremptorily demanded them."

At folio 10a is the signature of R. Kettell, the then President, and of the several Fellows of the College, A.D. 1692. Then follow some leaves containing a Register of Benefactors, and lists of moneys borrowed from the common chest.

Under the head of "Liber Sigilli," is written, in a very cramped and difficult hand,—"Memorandum, re- "civyd of my Ladie a box, wherein is conteyned, "under the seall, the conveyance of the howse of "Clarkenwell, to be safely kept with the other evi- "dences of the College, the xxix of May 1575." "My "Ladie" here referred to, was Lady Elizabeth, the second wife, and afterwards widow, of Sir Thomas Pope, the Re-founder of the House, which was originally known as Durham College.

In a memorandum as to repayment to the College Treasury of part of a sum of money borrowed from it, s. a. 1578, it is stated that the unpaid residue has been expended (itr.),—"in repairs and other expenses incurred "at the time of the plague raging in this year." Under 1562 is an entry,—"Item, taken out of the treasure "howse the xxvii day of May and the copie that ther "was, that is, syx poundes iii s. iiii d. for we have mater "agaynst my Lord Ryche." Another entry is,—"Memorandum, that this 20th November (1647) ther "was layd in to the treasury the summe of one hundred "and threescore pounds, being mony deposited by "Sir Robert Napier for the Colledge use."

Lists of plate follow, and of articles of plate borrowed and returned; among them a "Poculum parliamenti, "cum operculo," a "Parliament-room," or "Parlour, "cup, with covercle." The vessels are generally distinguished by the names of the donors being added; among them "Mayerne's (? Sir Theodore, the eminent physician) pott of 2 spoute." A note, apparently by Dr. Ingram, calls attention to a curious memorandum "of Spanish money and other coin taken out of the "treasure-house to be changed into good current "money, to the amount of 15*l.* and upward." By the same learned annotator we are informed, at the end of a list of plate,—"All these, with other sumptuous "pieces of plate, melted down for the use of Charles "the First."

In another page (date 1566) the College agrees to be the place of deposit of an Indenture made between the President and Fellows of Corpus Christi College, Oxford, and Ambrose Edmonds, of Stanton St. John, "much in the same way," Dr. Ingram remarks, "that "banking-houses do at present." In another page, date 1582, "Richard Busbye" is named, as a bateller of the College. In a note by Dr. Ingram, it is suggested that he may have been the father of the celebrated Master of Westminster School. Numerous lists of sums received as caution-money then follow; about the year 1617 the caution-money of Martin Lister is entered. On coming down to 1643, a note by Dr. Ingram calls attention to the fact that the Rebellion now occasioned a hiatus of nearly twenty years.

This volume, which is without pagination, would probably yield much curious matter, if thoroughly examined.

Dr. Kettell's Register: a folio volume, in the original oak boards, the clasps being broken away; containing about 50 leaves of parchment, of which 20 only are filled. In folio 3a, there is an entry by Dr. Ingram,—"This Register was drawn up by Dr. Kettel, Presi- "dent, and continued by him from the foundation to "the year 1692 inclusive. The original draught of "this Register, in Kettel's own hand, is in the "Ashmolean Museum, Codd. A. Wood. 8400, fol. 28, "with many interpolations, corrections, and additions, "in the hand of its collector. This last mentioned "copy of the said Register seems to have been given "to A. Wood by Dr. Bathurst, President."—A note to the above word "given," suggests the substitution of "lent.—Warton's Life of Sir T. Pope, p. 374. App. "Note D." The Register is continued down to 1640, and was most probably discontinued in consequence of the troubles at the commencement of the Civil Wars. The first entry is the name of Thomas Slythurst, May 30, 1556, the first President of the College. The 199th admission is that of William Chillingworth, (elected scholar at the age of 16,) the eminent controversialist and divine.

Register of Admissions 1648–1737, a folio volume, paper, in old calf. It has an Index at the beginning, originally compiled by Arthur Charlett, Bursar, down to 1691, and continued after that date by interlineations,

Digitized by Google

In p. 36 is the admission, with the writing, of John Somers, 1667, "Son of John Somers, gentleman, in "the City of Worcester," afterwards Lord Chancellor of England. In p. 188 are the admission and writing of Eustace Budgell, son of Gilbert Budgell (formerly Tutor of the College), born at Simonsbury in Dorset. There is an entry, date probably 1665, by Dr. Ralph Bathurst, President, as to donations of admission plate, or money's part of which is to the following effect:— "That to avoid all delayes or excuse in this contribu- "tion, the Colledge shall peremptorily require it at "the hands of the Bursar, that soe they may have the "better plea and take the more care to see themselves "secured. That for the more honourable recommend- "ing the donour's names to posterity, there be a faire "Register-Book (alweis to be kept in the Burser's "hands), having this inscription,—'Liber Minerva- "'lium, continens donationes convictorum in prima "'admissione, vel alias qualescunque, ad ornandum "'vel instruendum sacellum, aulam, bibliotheeam, "'arbustum vel in alios publicos Collegii usus, "'erogandas.'"

At the other end of this volume there is a collection of notes and extracts, made by Dr. Ingram, in reference to the past history of the College.

Register of Admissions 1737–1838, a folio paper volume, bound in calf.

Register A, a large folio paper volume, bound in modern calf; being a register of indentures, deeds, and other document relative to the affairs of the College from the year 1556 to 1683. It also contains the admissions of Fellows and Scholars, duly attested by Notaries Public, as in the case of New College and Corpus Christi College, Oxford, and King's College, Cambridge.

Register B, 1685–1748, a similar volume, with entries commencing at each end of the book.

WORCESTER COLLEGE, OXFORD.

The documents are described in the order in which they were shown to me by Mr. C. H. O. Daniel.—

This College, originally Gloucester College, and generally called Gloucester Hall, and more recently St. John Baptist's Hall, was re-founded in 1714; no muniments, apparently, and but few miscellaneous documents, prior to that period, have come into its possession. The Entrance Book, kept in the Provost's Lodge, belongs only to comparatively recent times.

The Manuscripts in the College Library are not numerous, and in general have been described in Mr. Coxe's Catalogue. The following items, which have been named there, but not described at any length, deserve a somewhat more extended notice.—

An octavo volume, in old calf binding, containing about 50 leaves of parchment, a portion of which remains unfilled. Its title is.—"Liber Aulæ Gloces- "trensis Oxon. anno 1630, Principali Degoreo Wheat. "Historiarum Præfectore Candeniano." It begins with a list of Subscribers to the Chapel, which had just then been rebuilt almost on the site of the Chapel built by John Wheteamstede, Abbot of St. Alban's, in the 15th century, when the College was occupied by Students sent from the Benedictine Monasteries of England. From the original Latin the following passages are translated:—"John Matthew, Rector of the "Church of Buckland in the County of Gloucester, in "accordance with the last request of his dying son, "gave 100*l.*" "Kenelm Digby, Knight, 20*l.*" "John "Pym, Esquire, 20*l.*" "Roger Griffin, citizen of "Oxford, of the Company (Collegio) of Bakers, gave "2,000 shingles (scandularum), 22*s.* in value." "John "Speed, Doctor of Medicine, gave the Holy Bible, in "the vernacular idiom, being the old version of the "English Bishops." "John Hales, Master of Arts, "formerly Fellow of Merton, but now of Eton, College, "gave 32*s.*" Foster Alleyn.—"Master Thomas Allen, a "most celebrated Mathematician, and formerly an in- "comparable ornament of this Hall, left by testament "ten pounds to the use of this community, the same "to be expended at the discretion of the Principal, "A.D. 1632." In fol. 13 b. the death of Degory Wheare is entered, and the succession of Tobias Garbrand, M.D.

Dr. George Clarke, Fellow of All Souls College, bestowed upon this College a large portion, if indeed not the whole, of its original Library. Among its contents are a number of volumes that had evidently belonged to William Clarke, a relative of his, who had been Secretary to George Monk, Duke of Albemarle.

Among the Manuscripts in the Library, not noticed by Mr. Coxe, in his Catalogue, is a small square paper volume, with no title, but containing a Register of Baptisms and Marriages in the town of Leslie, in the County of Fife, in Scotland. Burntisland, Kirkaldy, and Falkland, are also often mentioned in it. It also contains summonses in cases of affiliation, and for ecclesiastical offences; and, taken altogether, its contents seem curious, and to deserve further examination. The entries are from A.D. 1606 to 1644. It seems not improbable that it may have come into William Clarke's possession through his connexion with General Monk.

A manuscript French Poem, paper, small folio, pamphlet form, bound in limp vellum, embossed with fleurs-de-lis. It is neatly written throughout, and has a Preface, beginning, "An Roy et a la Reine de la "Grande Bretagne," being addressed to Charles the First and Henrietta Maria, by M. St. Amant. The title of the Poem is.—"Ode Royale a leurs Serenis- "simes Majestez de la Grande Bretagne;" and it commences,—

"Dieux! en quel aymable sejour,
"En quel lieu de gloire et d'amour,
"M'ont conduit Zephire et Neptune?"

This work does not seem to be noticed in Mr. Coxe's Catalogue.

A folio volume, containing a written account of Archbishop Land's Trial, at great length, and neatly written, apparently by the same hand throughout. It comes down to the agreement by the Commons, on the 8th of January 1644, 5, to commute the punishment of hanging for decapitation. This also does not appear in Mr. Coxe's Catalogue.

A case, with pedigree and opinion stated, signed "Henry Brooke, Oxon., Jan. 21, 1737," stating to the effect that Mr. Foote (afterwards, the celebrated actor, Samuel Foote) was a "cognatus" and a "consangui- "neus" of the Founder of Worcester College (Sir Thomas Cookes); that the Founder's grandfather, i.e., his mother's father, was the common ancestor to them both, and—"that such relation will support Mr. Foote's "claim (in case he is otherwise qualified) to a fellow- "ship in Worcester College, preferably to other candi- "dates who are not Founder's kinsmen." The pedigree begins with Osberne de Bolebec, "who marries Avelina, "sister to Gunnora, wife of Richard first (?) Duke of "Normandy," grandparents of Walter Giffard, Earl of Longeville in Normandy. Foote, it may be added, was educated at this College, but did not succeed in obtaining a Fellowship.

I have much pleasure in acknowledging my obligations to the Reverend Dr. Cotton, the Provost, for the kind permission which he gave me to examine the Muniment-room and the Library of the College at my leisure; though, eventually, with comparatively small results. The Reverend C. H. O. Daniel, Tutor and Vice-Provost, and the Reverend W. E. Daniel, Divinity Lecturer and Chaplain, of the College, with no less courtesy and kindness, left no pains unspared in aiding me in my researches.

HENRY THOMAS RILEY.

THE MANUSCRIPTS IN THE LIBRARY OF STONYHURST COLLEGE, BELONGING TO THE SOCIETY OF JESUS.

(First Notice.)

By the liberality of the Rev. Edward I. Purbrick, S. J., the present Rector of Stonyhurst, the Library of that Institution has been opened to my inspection, in furtherance of the objects of the present Commission. Its contents, however, were too extensive and too important to be exhausted within the limited period at my disposal; a second Report therefore becomes necessary.

The more important manuscripts which I have examined are the following:—

1. A volume in 4to. upon vellum, of the 14th century, consisting of 110 leaves, in the original binding. It contains,—

i. S. Augustinus de Spiritu et Anima.

ii. Ricardus Heremita [de Hampole] de Emendatione Vitæ, sive de Regula Vivendi. [See Tanner's Bibl, p. 374, note h.]

At the end occurs this colophon, "Explicit liber "Ricardi Heremitæ qui obiit anno Domini MCCCXLIX "apud Sanctimoniales de Ampole, juxta Done- "castriam."

iii. Innocentius Papa Tertius de Miseria Hominis.

2. A volume in 4to. upon vellum, of the 15th century, containing 121 leaves. Its contents are the following:—

i. "Here begynnyth the ryghte excelent and most "glorious lyf and passyon of the ryȝt blessed "virgyne Seyut Kateryne." Fol. 1.

ii. "Passio Domini nostri Jhesu Christi, sive Testa- "mentum Nicholemi." Fol. 21.
Beg. "That tyme þ᷑ oure Lord Jhesu Cryst "was xxx yere He chese."

iii. A religious poem. Fol. 96b.
Beg. "Jhesu, for þ᷑ wurthy wounde
That went to þin hert rote."

iv. De ætate Beatæ Virginis Mariæ." Fol. 98.

v. The Abbey of the Holy Ghost, by Bishop Alcock. Fol. 99. [See Tanner, Bibl., p. 24.]

3. A volume in 4to. upon vellum, of various dates, in ancient oaken boards, consistiug chiefly of Theological Treatises, containing among others the following:—

i. An imperfect copy of Johannes Beleth de Ecclesiæ Officiis.

ii. "Epilogium de obitu Ven. Bedæ." Fol. 15.
Imperfect at the end, breaking off with the words . . . . . "referebat et sæpe dicebat" . . . . (§ 18, p. xvi of the Introduction to the Historical Works of the Ven. Beda, 8vo. Lond. 1838).
The Saxon verses which occur in the same letter are thus cited in the present copy,—
"For þam nedfere
Næni pyrfeþ
þances snotera
þoñ him þearf sy
To gehiegenne
Ær hi heonon-gange
Hþæt hi gaste
Godes oþþe yfeles
Æfter deaþe heonon
Demed beoþe."

Upon the whole this text corresponds with that given from Simeon of Durham, which is printed on the page of Beda's works cited above.

The present volume was bought from a pedlar, who rejoiced on parting with it for half-a-crown, the price which he asked. He had bought it for sixpence.

4. A volume in very large folio, containing,— "Specimens of the Military and Civil Costume of England, from the most remote period down to the 18th century, by John Carter, Architect, delineated during the years 1809, 1810, 1811."

It consists of 113 drawings, in folio, mostly coloured, and was purchased at the Towneley sale in 1814, by Lord Arundell of Wardour for 141*l.* 15*s.*

5. A volume in folio, upon vellum, written in the 14th century, and probably of English execution, consisting of 190 leaves. It is imperfect at the end, and is mutilated throughout, the greater Festivals having been cut out for the sake of the illuminations with which they were formerly ornamented, with the solitary exception of the Epiphany, on fol. 16*b*. It contains a Missal according to the use of the Cistercian Order. Under April 11 in the Calendar is noted the obit of Henry Beaufort, Cardinal of Winchester, who died A.D. 1447. The name of S. Thomas of Canterbury and the word "Papa" are erased in obedience to the Injunction of King Henry VIII.

6. Missale ad usum Ecclesiæ Eboracensis.

A volume in folio, upon vellum, consisting of 223 leaves, written in the 15th century. A leaf is wanting between fols. 83 and 84, and another between fols. 122 and 123.

This volume apparently belonged to the church of Tatham, near Hornby, in Lancashire, as the fly-leaves at the beginning contain various covenants between "Magister Thomas de Sauvage, persona ecclesiæ de "Tatham," on the one part, and "Johannes de Tatham, "miles," on the other, dated in 1279. There is another document between "Walterus de Tatcham, patronus "ecclesiæ de Tateham," and a "rector ecclesiæ ejus- "dem loci."

7. "Missale Leodiense."

A folio, written upon vellum, in the year 1472, consisting of 295 leaves.

8. "Missale Tongrensis ecclesiæ."

A volume in folio, upon vellum, of the 15th century, containing 252 leaves. There is also a large illumination.

9. "Evangelia Glossata."

A folio, on vellum, containing 127 leaves, written in the 13th century.

10. "Homiliæ Beati Gregorii papæ."

A remarkably handsome and interesting volume, consisting of 172 leaves, written in the monastery of S. Alban's in the 12th century during the period when Simon was abbot.* The initials are in gold and colours, executed with considerable taste and skill. At the beginning is the followiug inscription:—
"Hunc codicem fecit dominus Symon, albas, Sancto Albano, quem qui ei abstulerit, aut titulum deleverit, anathema sit. Amen."

In the beginning of the volume occurs the book-plate of "Tho. Phillips of Ielcford in the county of Bucks, "gent.," who appears to have had it from "Philip "Viscount Wenman."

11. "Expositiones Haymonis, de Temporali, super Epistolas et Evangelia, ab Adventu Domini usque ad Vigiliam Paschæ."

A MS. in folio, on vellum, written in the 13th century, consisting of 243 leaves. On fol. 2 is the inscription following: "Liber Sanctæ Mariæ Loci Benedicti de "Stanlauue." This refers to the Cistercian Abbey of Stanlawe, in Cheshire, an establishment which was removed to Whalley, in Lancashire, in 1296.†

12. A copy of the Latin Psalter, with ornamented initials, of which those prefixed to Psalms xcvii. and cix. are of a superior style of art. The calendar, which is imperfect, contains commemorations of S. Chad, and S. David. At the bottom of the first page is this inscription:
"Hoc est Psalterium Beatæ Mariæ super Tharente,‡ "ex dono domiuæ Leticiæ de Kaynes. Quicunque istud "abstulerit, sive defraudare studuerit, anathema sit." In the calendar, under the date of January 16, occurs the "Obitus dominæ Leticiæ de Kaynes."

This MS. consists of 55 leaves.

13. A volume in folio, upon vellum, consisting of 56 leaves, of Italian execution, containing the "Liber "Festivalis." It is of the 15th century. Fifteen miniatures of Saints, well executed adorn this volume.

14. "Summa Pisanella, auctore Bartholomæo Pisano."

A volume, upon paper, consisting of 359 leaves, in folio, written in the 15th century.

At fol. 262 occurs the following colophon: "Con- "scriptum fuit hoc opus in civitate Pisana per fratrem "Bartholomæum de Sancto Concordio, Ordinis Fratrum "Prædicatorum, doctorem decretorum, M.CCC.XXXVIII. "Prædictus autem frater Bartholomæus, compositor "hujus libri, obiit A.D. MCCCXLVII."§

15. A volume, in folio, upon paper, written in the 15th century, consisting of 263 folios, containing Bullæ et Conclusiones dubiorum.

16. Biblia Sacra Latina. Folio, vellum, consisting of 299 leaves, written in the 15th century.

17. Homiliæ. Folio, vellum, consisting of 88 leaves, written in the 15th century.

18. Vocabularium Latino-Anglicum. Folio, vellum, consisting of 71 leaves, written in double columns, of the 15th century.

The following extracts may perhaps serve to indicate the nature and dialectic character of this curious manuscript:—

Archula, a little whieche.
Arista, an ale of corne.
Asciola, a litel thixel.
Catulus, a whelp, or a chetou, or a kyndyl.
Cochia, heiȝt, a rund trou, and a schille of a fishe.
Emareio, to drie, or welwe.
Fex, dartes of ale or of wyne.
Girsa, a blecch.
Macera, a long swyrde, or a misericord.
Quaxillum, a thaphose.
Sirtis, a swelewe of þe see.
Sporta, a berynge knyppe.

At the end of the volume, in another and a later hand, occur the following memoranda:—
STANTON. In primis, anno Domini M.CCCC.LXXIIJ. in festo Purificationis Beatæ Mariæ Virginis, in cera ij lb. precium le lb. vijd. Summa xiiijd.

* Simon was elected abbot of S. Alban's, 18 May, 1167 (See M. Paris, Hist. Angl. i. 344, ed. Madden), and died in 1183 (Id., p. 424). M. Paris records his love of books and his beneficence to the monastery in the following terms:—"Iste, postquam feliciter in curam pastoralem esset "assumptus, non desiit libros optimos et voluminа authentica ei ploc- "ere sam Novi quam Veteris Testamenti (quibus non, vidimus no- "biliora), scribere, et ad unguem irreprehensibiliter præparare. Quo- "rum numerum longum foret explicare. Sed qui eosdem libros videre "desiderat, in almario picto, quod est in ecclesia contra tumbam "Sancti Koseri heremitæ (quod et ipse præcepit ad hoc specialiter "fieri), reposita poterit reperire; et qualis amator scripturarum idem "abbas exiterit per ipsos perpendere . . . . Notandum quoque "quod iste immortalis memoriæ abbas Simon duos vel tres elemantisi- "mos scriptores continue in camera sua honorifice sustinuit: unde "librorum optimorum ex pium impretiabilem ad unguem præparavit."

Item, die Dominica proxima post festum Purificationis, in oblationibus, vjd. ob.

No less than thirteen localities of the name of Stanton (probably very many more) are to be found in England, among which it is not easy to decide that to which the above memoranda relate.

19. A volume, npon paper, in folio, consisting of 118 leaves, written in more than one hand. It contains—

The Act Book of the Commissary of the exempt jurisdiction of the monastery of Whalley. Several original documents are inserted. The Acts extend from A.D. 1500 to 1538. The original heading is as under:

"Visitationes exemptæ jnrisdictionis religiosorum
" virorum abbatis et conventus monasterii Beatæ
" Mariæ Virginis de Whalley, ordinis Cisterciensis."

Imperfect at the end.
v. A poem upon "The quantitey of the Earthe." Fol. 64.
Beg. "She sayth, Sonne, thou hast shewed the " veritie."
End. "But where peace maketh habitation."
This last poem is of a much more modern date than the rest of the volume, and is written upon paper. At the end occurs the following memorandum: "Thomas
" Bellot, armiger, est hujus libri verus possessor;
" teste Mathæo Bellot, armigero, 1570."

27. A volnme in 4to. upon vellum, consisting of 127 leaves, written in the 14th century, containing a treatise entitled, "Le Livre de Seynte Medicines."

" cheitif peccheour, qe len apelle Ertsacnal Ed cud
" Irneh, a qi Dieux sea malfaits pardoynt. Amen."

"Dextera scriptoris careat gravitate doloris."

The mysterious words given above, if read backwards give the name of the author, Henri due de Lancastre, who died in 1360.

On the reverse of fol. 126, is the following inscription; "Cest livre est a moy Homfrey duc de Gloucester, du " don du baron de Carew." The duke of Goucester here mentioned is the youngest son of King Henry IV.

On the first leaf of this copy are seven escutcheons within a border, and within the initial letter is a shield bearing the arms of Henry the first earl of Lancaster.

Another copy is in the library of Corpus Christi College, Cambridge. See Nasmiths' Catalogue, No. 218, p. 295, and Walpole's Noble Authors, i. 187, ed. 1806.

This treatise is written in a minute hand of about the year 1300.

32. A roll upon vellum, consisting of three membranes, containing a poem in early English upon the instruments and other objects connected with our Lord's passion, of which there are several rude representations, followed by a description and a prayer. It commences with a painting of the Veronica.

The following lines upon the Holy Sepulchre may serve as a specimen :—

" The sepulcure where in Ihu were hyd,
" Thi blessed body all forhled.
" Lord, graunt me, ere þ' y dye,
" Sorowe of hert with teres of ey ;
" Clen clensed for þy mercy.
" Ere þat y in my grave lye.
" So þat y may or domes day
" To þat dom eum w' owt afray,
" And wend to hlys in cumpany,
" Ther as men schall nevyr dye ;
" But dwell in blys w' þe, Lord bry3t,
" Wher evyr is day and nevyr ny3t ;
" And lest schall w' owt hend,
" Ihu Crist uus þether send!
" Amen."

On the back of the roll, in another and a later hand, is an Office for a confraternity of S. Giles. Two leaden weights are affixed at the bottom of the third membrane for the purpose of facilitating the unrolling. Holes for similar weights are visible at the beginning also ; but the weights themselves no longer exist.

Another copy of this poem, also upon a roll of vellum, belongs to the College of Blairs. (See the catalogue of that collection, No. 13.)

33. A volume upon paper, in quarto, written in the 15th century, consisting of 133 pages, formerly the property of one of the family of "S. Georg," whose name occurs at the bottom of the first page. It contains—

A Treatise upon Contemplation, by Walter Hilton, in 92 chapters. Beg. " O gostely syster in Iheu Criste, I " pray the that in the callyng which our Lorde callyd " hath the to His service thou holde the payed."

34. A volume in folio, consisting of 385 leaves, written in double columns upon vellum, early in the 15th century, ornamented with 4 large and 21 smaller paintings. It contains—

The first part of the Chronicles of Sire Jehan Froissart, with the following rubricated title :

" Cy commencent les Croniques que fist Sire Jehan " Froissart, lesquelles parlent des nouvelles guerres de " France, d'Angleterre, d'Escoce, d'Espaigne, et de " Bretaigne. Et sont divisees in quatre parties ; dont " le premier chappitere fait menciou de la cause pour- " quoy elles sont faittes."

Beg. Affin que les honnourables adventures et nobles " adventurus."

Ends. " A Careuten, a Saint Lo, et par toutes les " marches sur le clos de Constantin. Explicit."

This noble MS. was bequeathed by Lord Arundell of Wardour. An estimate of the value of the text which it exhibits may perhaps be formed from the following extract (taken from folio 13 b), being the whole of chapter xxvi. (vol. i. p. 82, ed. Bruxelles, 1863).

La manière des Escoce et leur maintien quant ilz sont en guerre, et l'ordonnance des Angloys qui se cuidoient combatre a eulx.

Les Escocs sont durs et hardis et fort travaillans en armes et en ce temps la ilz avoient et prisoient assez pou les Angloys et encores font a present et quant ilz veullent entrer en royaulme dangleterre ilz mainnent leur est bien xx. ou xviij. lieues loing que de jour que de nuit de quoy moult de gens se pourroient esmerveiller qui ne sauvoient leur coustume. Certain est que quant ilz veullent entrer en Angleterre ilz sont tous a cheval les uns et les autres excepte la ribandaille qui les suit a pie. THE MANUSCRIPTS IN THE LIBRARY OF THE MONASTERY OF THE DOMINICAN FRIARS AT WOODCHESTER, NEAR STROUD.

The Provincial of the Order of the Friars Preachers, or Dominicans, having granted me permission to examine the manuscripts now deposited in the Library at Woodchester, I have the honour to forward the following memoranda respecting them.

As might be expected, the bulk of the papers relates to the inner history of the Order, more especially to that of the present establishment. There is also a considerable collection of sermons, meditations, lectures, &c., which do not fall within the scope of the present inquiry. But there exist certain historical documents which are of general interest, and these I proceed to specify.

1. The foundation charter of the monastery of Evesham, A.D. 709. Printed in the " Chronicon Abbatiæ de Evesham," edited by the Rev. W. D. Macray in the Series of Chronicles issued under the direction of the Master of the Rolls. Lond., 1863.

Beg. C. ẽps servus servorũ D'i Brihtunaldo Britanniarum eccl'ie primati salutem et aplicã benedictionem. Venerabilem virũ ecguinũ ep̃m quem bis tua frnitas ad aplicam sedem misit. . . .

The attestations are as follow :—

† Ego Constantin© romane sedis ep̃s per signũ sc̃e crucis has donationes s' libertatem confirmavi.

† Ego ecguinus humilis ep̃s confirmavi. .

† Ego rex Kenred corroboravi.

† Ego rex Offa consensi.

To this copy (apparently a very early transcript) a seal has been appended by a label, but it no longer exists. The silk bag in which it formerly was kept is still extant.

2. The provincial constitutions of the province of Canterbury ; collected by William Lyndewood, Bishop of St. David's. At the end is the following colophon :—

" Expliciunt Constitutiones Provinciales secundum " compilationem Willelmi Lyndewode, quondam Me- " nevie episcopi, cujus animæ propitietur Deus."

On a fly-leaf at the end occurs this note, " Iste liber " constat Johanni Buxtun, cappellano."

A MS. in duodecimo, upon vellum, of the 15th century.

3. A treatise in Flemish, consisting of a devout exercise upon the Life of our Lord. A manuscript of the 15th century.

4. A treatise called "Speculum Caritatis," by Ailred, abbot of the Cistercian abbey of Rievaulx, in Yorkshire.

a. Epistola abbatis ad monachum qui hunc librum, qui Speculum Caritatis, composuit.

Beg. Est quidem sanctorum virtus permaxima humilitas.

Ends. Verum ut pudori tuo parcatur, hæc ipsa epistola in fronte præfigatur, ut quicquid in Speculo Caritatis (hoc enim libri nomen imponimus) lectori displicuerit, non tibi qui parneris, sed mihi qui invitum coegerim, imputetur. Vale in Christo, dilecte frater.

Prologus in Speculo Caritatis. Vere sanctorum vera et discreta humilitas virtus est . . . . quid vero sit negligendum discernite.

This treatise is printed in the Bibliotheca Patrum, tom. xxiii. p. 91, edit. Lugd., 1677.

On the fly leaves at the end occur some verses, of which the first is "Vox Augustini redolens de more "carmini."

The former place of deposit of this manuscript is indicated by an inscription, which describes it as "Liber "cenobii Sancti Pauli in Zoira, quod communiter voca- "tur Rvodan Dale. Dirigatur illuc." Judging from the binding, however, on which the Tudor rose is conspicuous, it would appear to have found its way into England early in the 16th century. It is written upon vellum in the 15th century.

5. "Memoriale Fratrum Prædicatorum Anglorum con- "ventus Bornhemensis," consisting of accounts, contracts, receipts and payments, entries of students and novices, &c. It also contains a journal of events from 1706 to 1797.

A volume, in quarto, upon paper.

6. "A booke of authenticke copys concerning the con- "cession, donation, foundation, rents, and revenues of "the English cloister of the Dominicans at Bornhem."

A quarto volume, upon paper, consisting of 72 articles, upon 178 pages.

7. Various documents illustrative of the history of the English Dominican monastery while at Bornhem, near Malines, chiefly in Flemish. Among them are valuations of property, leases, rentals, lists of inmates, &c.

8. Various wills, settlements of property, foundations for masses, papers respecting the proceedings of the General Chapters and Provincial Synods of the Order.

9. Papers respecting the establishment of the English Dominicans at Bornhem by Cardinal Howard, 1657, 1658.

10. Papers on the history of the convent of the Corcleliers at Bornhem before the arrival of the Dominicans in 1657.

11. Papers connected with the history of the Irish Dominicans at Louvain, and the Irish college of Friars Preachers at Lisbon.

12. Permission granted by the master-general of the order for founding a convent of English Sisters of the Second Order in Belgium in 1660.

13. Trial of Joseph Komish, priest, at the Old Bailey, 17 January 1679–80.

14. Copy of the order of King James II. for the pardon of Mr. Monson, 8 April 1686.

15. Original mandate of King James II. for Mr. Richard Short to be Fellow of Magdalen College, Oxford, dated Whitehall, 14 March 1687–88. Signed and sealed.

16. Original letter from Louis Fr. Gabriel, Bishop of Amiens, to Lady Stourton, 6 February 1645. Holograph.

17. Biographical memoir of Sister Christiana Touchet, daughter of the Earl of Castlehaven, who was professed as a nun of the order of St. Dominick at Brussels, 28 Feb. 1677, in the 21st year of her age.

18. A volume in folio, upon paper, consisting of 14 pages in a paper cover, bearing the title, "Sir Edward "Southcote's Memoirs." Two pages are blank, the rest is written in a close and compact hand, there being about 54 lines in each page.

These Memoirs consist of two letters addressed to Philip Southcote by his "loving Father, E.S." The first letter (which is undated) occupies six pages and the greater portion of a seventh. It begins thus:—

"Dear Phill: Being you and your grandfather were "both military men, I shall here, a little att a time as I "have leasure, give or leave you the line of his life for "your amusement when you are under your tent."

The following is an abstract of this interesting narrative:—

Soon after the writer's father [Sir John Southcote] had returned from his studies beyond the sea, the civil war broke out. He obtained leave from his father and grandfather to volunteer for the King, but this was granted very unwillingly, as he was the only heir of the family, there being but one son (himself) and three daughters. The eldest of these, Mary, was a Benedictine nun at Ghent, who died at the age of 80, with great tokens of sanctity. The second daughter, Dorothy (a very handsome woman), married Colonel Stanford of Perry Hall, in Staffordshire, one of the leading beaux of the time, but had no issue. Katherine, the third, at the age of 32 made a good match with Sir John Smith of Crabbit* in Sussex, a widower of 60 years old, with 1,200*l.* a year. He had many children by the present marriage, though no issue by his former one.

The first adventure in which Sir John was engaged was while serving in a corps de reserve. The enemy (the Parliamentary army) observing this body of nearly 1,000 horse, fired at them with cannon, which killed several of their men and horses. He found it very unpleasant to stand still in cold blood to be thus shot at in sight of the two armies, which were now closely engaged; but this was their fate for nearly an hour. By that time the King's army had forced its way through the enemy and "nailed up" the cannon. As Oliver's troops were begining to give way the reserve were called up to pursue. This was the first occasion upon which Sir John made use of his little battle-axe, a weapon carried by all the King's troops. It hung to the wrist by a ribbon, and did not hinder the use of the pistol or sword. It was a "dead doing thing," and like the masons' "hailthing hammer" had a sharp little axe on one side and a hammer on the other. The hammer was most generally preferred. It was effective in felling the enemy to the ground "with one rapp upon "their round heads." This was a new invention. The enemy in reprisal first discharged their muskets and then fought with the butt end; this did great execution but spoiled the fire-arms by breaking the stock and bending the barrel.

The army being at no great distance from Perry Hall, our hero went thither to see his brother and sister Stanford. He rode up the staircase, and did not dismount till he reached the table where they were sitting at supper. They were much pleased with his frolic and glad to see him. Next day they had great discomfort in hearing of the Earl of Northampton's misfortune. Going from Tixall House, where he was quartered, to meet a strong party at Hopton Heath, "in the middle of this action the Earl's horse unfor- "tunately set his foot into a rabbit hole, which brought "the horse upon his knees, and when he was in that "posture was killed out right by one stroake of a "halbert upon his head."

During the course of the next day the rebels plundered Tixall House, "our noble lord" [Lord Aston] being then a commander in Lichfield Close, and no one in the house but Lady Aston and her daughter, then about five years old.† The Parliamentarian officer ordered that Lady Aston should not be disturbed in her chamber, but a soldier in despite ceased nature at her door. The rest of the house was totally plundered. Her ladyship had to beg a little new milk of a neighbour, and a skillet to boil it in; this was all the breakfast, dinner, and supper which they had that day.

Having spent one day at Perry Hall Sir John returned to the army with the ill news of the Earl of Northampton's death. Now and then skirmishes occurred, but no engagement until the first fight of Newbury, in which he was in the main body of the army, and took prisoner Captain Hall, who commanded what was called Oliver's own troop, whom he carried first to Newbury, and next (when news came that the King's army had been defeated) to Reading. Eight or ten days afterwards Southcote accepted as Hall's ransom a fine managed horse, a suit of armour, a diamond ring, and a promise to the effect that if he in his turn were made prisoner he should immediately be released without exchange.

The King hearing of this exploit made the chief performer of it a knight, but expressed some little dissatisfaction that so marked a man as Captain Hall should have been released without the exchange of a prisoner of equal rank. Sir John Southcote's friends remarked, in his defence, that as he ventured his life without receiving any pay, either for himself or his retainers, it was reasonable that he should do as he pleased with his prisoners.

Sir John was present at the second battle of Newbury, and shortly afterwards took part in the seige of Oxford, into which he was ordered to enter before it was entirely surrounded. After this seige he was exceedingly anxious to enter the service of Prince Rupert, who was the greatest beau as well as the greatest hero in the royal army. His mode of fighting was to charge right through the enemy and then to fall upon their rear, slaughtering them with scarcely any opposition. One very cold morning he took a very fine laced handkerchief out of his pocket and tied it about his neck; hence originated the habit of wearing laced cravats. In all his attacks he was successful. A little black dog always followed him into the field, "which the Round-" heads fancied was the Devill, and took it very ill that " he wond sett himself against them."

In the fatal battle of Naseby the prince forced his way through the body of horse that opposed him and "nailed up" their cannon; but meanwhile the main body of the rebell horse broke in upon the foot of the King's army and made a fearful carnage, leaving upwards of 20,000 dead, wounded, and prisoners. The writer of this letter afterwards visited the ground and was shown the windmill in which the King sat to see the battle, and the hawthorn-bush where Oliver placed himself for the like purpose. There was a little valley, in which the foot were so hemmed that there was no possibility of flight.

After this battle the King appeared no more in the field. Sir John returned home and then travelled into Italy for a year. Then for a year or two he spent his time between Mistham and London, and became upon friendly terms with "Lady Elizabeth Cleopol," Oliver's daughter. Next, he made a pilgrimage to Loretto. On his return, being at Paris, he found letters from Lady Elizabeth asking him to buy her two damask beds, one with gold, the other with silver fringes, and also very many yards of the richest gold and silver stuffs for her own wearing.

The narrative now details the particulars of his sister's marriage, the death of his mother in London, and her burial in S. Clement's Church in the Strand; the intended second marriage of his father "with a " sister of Mr. Weston of Sutton, an ancient made of " about 50," and his death; and lastly, his own marriage with the eldest daughter of Lord Aston of Tixal. During his courtship, when on his journey to visit the lady, at Kingston-on-Thames he found that Oliver had got intelligence that he had purchased horses for his servants; whereupon he sent orders to the captain of a troop of horse there to apprehend Sir John and his men, and to carry them to Lambeth House, at that time a prison for the Cavaliers. Sir John hereupon sent a letter to "Lady Elizabeth Cleopole, who went to her "father in a huf" and explained the matter. A discharge was immediately sent, along with a complimentary excuse. Coming to Tixal, Sir John was married first by a priest, then by a Justice of the Peace, Justice Crompton, a remote relation of the Aston family.

The writer next records his reminiscences of the great plague, he being then five years old. Next summer he heard of the fire at London, he then being at Enfield with his aunt Stanford, who had retired from London from the plague. As soon as it was dark the fire was plainly visible. He heard the people as they passed along call out "forty pounds for a cart," "any money for a cart," to carry their goods. Next morning he returned to Standon for a fortnight, and when they passed through London, the fire was still burning. One of the servants, a Frenchman, being heard to speak broken English, was seized by the constable and watchman, but Sir John explained who he was and where he lived, and having given them half-a-crown to drink, they dismissed the servant.

Appended to this letter is a postscript, in which it is mentioned that the first time Sir Edward went to Bath, he there met Sir James Long, an old friend of Sir John Southcote, with whom he had served in the garrison at Oxford. The diversion of these two at that time was to go a-birding, as they called it. Each of them armed with a long fowling-piece charged with a single bullet, walked within the works, over which if a Roundhead popped his head they fired at him, and as they rarely ever missed, they knocked over 20 or 30 of them in their morning's walk. Witham House was totally plundered after the surrender of Colchester, by a party commanded by Captain Foster, who left neither lock, latch, nor bolt on any of the doors, nor a pane of glass in the windows. They destroyed all the old writings of the estate. In James's reign the son of this Captain Foster, though he was High Constable, and had an income of above 200*l.* a year, was convicted of sheep-stealing on a very large scale from Tiptree Heath, but escaped the gallows by entering into a bond in 1,000*l.* to make reparation to all he had wronged.

The second letter is dated Dec. 9, but no year is mentioned. It begins thus,—

" Deare Phill: When you were here I intended to " have given you some relation of the very grand " manner of my lord grandfather's living at Standon, " being there is scarce anybody but myself left that " remembers it. But it went out of my mind again. " But now having a little leisure, and understanding " the bearer of this is going to London, I take this " opportunity of sending you a little sketch of it."

Walter Lord Aston, grandfather to the present lord, married the Lady Mary Weston. His father was many years ambassador in Spain. The estate of Standon coming to him through his wife, a descendant of the great Sir Ralph Sadler, he removed thither, and there began his magnificent way of living. He had 101 persons in his family. The writer resided there for three or four months every summer, from the time he was six until about his fourteenth year.

The table was served with three courses, each of 20 dishes; and these were brought up by 20 men, who stamped up the great stair like thunder at every course. My lord had four servants behind his own chair. He was very curious in his wine; but first of all drank at one draught a whole quart either of malt drink or wine and water, as a remedy for stone and gravel. At all the inns he lodged at in travelling they kept a quart glass called My Lord Aston's glass. Sir Edward Southcote saw one at the Altar Stone at Banbury not many years ago. The servants all dined together in the hall, and what was left was thrown together into a tub which two men took on their shoulders to the court gate, where every day 40 or 50 poor people were served with it.

When my lord did not go hawking in the afternoon, he always played at ombre with his two sons for an hour, and at 4 o'clock returned to a covered seat in his vineyard. There he sat alone, and none durst approach him. At 5 o'clock his chariot, with a pair of his six grey Flanders mares (the chariot was made so narrow that none could sit by him), took him "a trole" about the park for five or six miles. He returned at 7, and by 8 would be in bed. He always lay in bed without pillow, bolster, or night cap. Winter and summer he rose at 4, and entertained himself with books until it was time to go a-hunting or hawking at wild ducks. He would never allow any but hunted venison at his table. Every day but Sunday one buck was killed at the least, but most commonly a brace. He never made or returned any visit, the court and address of that county being made to him.

Thus my lord lived until his son prevailed on him to return to Tixal. This was a great cross to his lady, who liked this way of living. And being now so far removed from her dear daughter Southcote, she grew melancholy and lost her wits, keeping almost perpetual silence, and refusing nourishment.

Not long afterwards his lordship died, and his corpse was attended from Tixal to Stafford by about 1,000 people. Sir Edward at Mistham kept a pack of hounds, while his father diverted himself with a goshawk for pheasants. The plot of Oates brought great persecution upon the Catholics. His father was convicted for his religion at the county sessions to pay 20*l.* a month as well as two-thirds of his estate, which soon ran up to 900*l.* For want of prompt payment he had four bum-bailiffs for five weeks in his house, who seized all the household goods and the plough horses of the tenants till he paid. Through the influence of his friend Sir John Thompson (afterwards Lord Haversham), his near and very good neighbour, Sir John Southcote obtained a Quietus from Sir Robert Sawyer, the Attorney-General. After this he lived pretty quietly, the plot losing credit daily.

Various family details follow: the death of his father and mother, the former at Drayton, the latter in St. James's Street, London. Sir Edward's marriage at Mr. Corker's Chapel in the Savoy, by Bishop Ellis. He resided at Mistham and then at Witham. Kept five or six store horses for his coach and four or five for the saddle. Had constantly five dishes at a course and three courses daily. Had also a dairy of ten cows, and the tallow from the beef and mutton was enough to supply the house with candles the year about.

He continued thus for the last years of James's reign. Then came the Revolution. Has lived ever since in the iron age of double taxes, the expenses of which have amounted " to something above 5,000*l.*, " of what your brother and I have paid. And had " there been no land tax att all, as in all other reigns " before King William's, hee and I might have had att " this day 10,000*l.* in our pockets."

The Manuscripts of the Corporation of Abingdon.—Additional Report.

Since the publication of the preceding Report, some additional documents belonging to the Corporation, illustrating the history of this Borough in the middle and latter part of the 16th century, have been brought to light, and have been obligingly placed before the Commission by Mr. Godfrey, the Town Clerk. — Before entering upon a somewhat detailed account of their contents, I gladly avail myself of this opportunity of correcting a clerical error in p. 98 of the former Report. It was to Mr. Godfrey, Jun., son of the Town Clerk, and not to Mr. Morland, Jun. as there stated, that I should have expressed my obligations for his courtesy and kind attentions during my brief but pleasant visit to the town.—

Chamberlains' Accounts of the Borough of Abingdon A.D. 1583-7: a series of small quarto paper sheets, which appear to have been formerly stitched together in the reverse order of the years, 1587 coming first, and 1583 last, but are now loose: the accounts for 1587 and 86, being uppermost, have been much eaten away at one corner of the leaves by mice. An entry on the obverse of the outer leaf of the first set of Accounts, describes it as the—" Acounte of Ryehard Tesedale, Chamberyn flor " the yeare 1587, W. Braunch, Mayor: " Tesedale was a member probably of the same family as Thomas Tesedale, one of the founders of Pembroke College, Oxford: this surname occurs very frequently in these records. Under each year the receipts of rents and other moneys due to the Corporation are first entered, and then the payments for the year. The writing of the entries under 1587 and 1583 is very clear, that under the other years is in various places somewhat indistinct. The names of many of the then householders of the town appear in these pages: among them are the names of Mr. Humphrye Hide, or Hyde, Edward Hardyuge, Mr. Anthony Tesedale, Thomas Godfree, or Godfrey, and the families of Bostock, Bowle, and Stagpoole. " Mr. Orpwood's house " is mentioned more than once. In the set of Accounts next described, a Mr. Orpwood is mentioned as Mayor and Sheriff. The Sub-Mayor is occasionally cited as giving instructions for payments, in place of the Mayor. Among the localities of the town, the following are named, in general under each of the years,—Broade Streate, the Winyard, Bore Streate, East St. Helyns Streate, West Streate St. Helyns, Little Bury Lane, the Bars, Barre Streate, Bochirowe, the Steart, Bagley Close, Broade Streate, and Ockes Streate.

The following are some extracts from the payments made by the Chamberlain in 1587.—" Paid to Thomas " Porter [for] the cariage of iiii lodes of dunge ffrom the " Gyld Hall dore, against the Sises, and sweepynge of the " same place, vi d. Item, paid to Mr. Wilkan for wyne, " for beare, cakes, rosewater, and other thynges, at " the apointment Mr. Bostock, when he was Maior . . These Accounts occupy 92 leaves in all, including those previously mentioned as being nearly entirely torn away.

Chamberlains' Accounts of the Borough of Abingdon, A.D. 1558-81: a series of small folio paper leaves, 184 in number, in fair condition, now detached, but formerly bound up in one or more volumes, to all appearance. As in the case of the preceding set of Accounts, when bound together, they were arranged in the reverse order of the years, the year 1581 commencing the volume or volumes, and 1558 coming last. In general, these accounts are more legible, and much more carefully kept, than those previously described. The names of localities are the same as those before mentioned; the same names of families frequently meet the eye, and among surnames more or less peculiar, those of Grigg, 1558. "Item, payd for a chest carried from the Church to the Cownsell howse, and for the keye thereof, v d." This last Account contains a list of the names of all the then tenants of the Corporation property, with the amount of yearly rent due from each.

In addition to the two preceding series of Accounts, there are still existing six mutilated leaves of an oblong folio book, or set, of Accounts, of probably earlier date; four of which contain receipts by the Chamberlain, Wyllyam Wyttynton, of rents and other payments due to the Corporation from tenants and other persons in the year 1557: the names of the localities are also given, being similar to those already mentioned. The other two leaves contain, apparently, rough notes of payments made by Richard Ely, Chamberlain, between Michaelmas 1557 and Michaelmas 1558. The entries are decipherable, but quite destitute of interest; with the exception of the following,—"Item, paid to Adams for a load of stones, " digynge in thubbie, for grownd pinnynge, ii d."

THE PETYT MANUSCRIPTS: INNER TEMPLE.

William Petyt, Keeper of the Records in the Tower, in the reign of Queen Anne, and at one time Treasurer of the Inner Temple, made a large collection of printed books and manuscripts, which, after his decease, came into the possession of the Honourable Society of the Inner Temple, in the year 1708.

Among these manuscripts two of the most remarkable volumes are those marked No. 538, Vols. 46 and 47: thick folios, which have been recently rebound, in red morocco leather, the contents being in general carefully mounted on stout paper.

The original title of the first of these two volumes seems to have been, from a fragment of parchment inlaid in the paper on rebinding,—"Originall Letters "of severall Kings and Queenes, the Life of St. Edmund, "Archbishop of Canterbury." In the catalogue made by Petyt himself, or under his inspection, fol. 276, the volume is thus described:—"A Collection of Originall "Letters of Queene Anna Cleve, Edward 6, Queen "Mary and Elizabeth, and Great Men. Considerations "about a peace with Spane, and reasons for and against "it. Secret and last instructions given by Phillip "2d King of Spaine to his Sonne Phillip the 3rd, "touching how to governe himself after the decease of "his said Father. A Copy of the Elector of Saxony "his Answer to the King of Denmarkes Letters for a "League to be made between the princes of Religion. "A Treatise of peace between England and France, "1498."

The following is a somewhat fuller account of the diversified contents of this volume:—

Fol. 2. A Letter, in Latin, finely written, addressed, in the name of the "Consules and Praeconsules" of Cadiz, to William Lord Burleigh, High Treasurer of England, asking for compensation for damage done to Cadiz by the English Fleet. The fleet would have perished they say, from famine, in the opinion of many, had it not been relieved by the ships of Cadiz (nostratim naves). It is not signed, but is endorsed, in the same hand in which the rest of the letter is written,—"Humilis declaratio Jacobi Kemerlingk, nomine inclyti "Senatus Gedanensis, apud suam Reginalem Majestatem "Angliæ agentis."

Fol. 4. A Letter from the Privy Council to the Princess Mary, signed by "E. Somerset, T. Cant.," and others, endorsed "To my Lady Marye's grace." The date is indistinct, but apparently, "Richmond, "7 July 1549."

Fol. 5. A Letter from King Edward the Sixth to the Princess Mary (apparently the original), dated 25th of November 1547, asking her to exchange manors which she has in Essex, St. Osythes, Claxton Magna, Claxton Parva, and Willeighe. It has the signature, apparently in the king's hand, "Edward" at the top. This letter has been printed in Nichols's "Literary Remains of "Edward VI.", edited for the Roxburgh Club, in 1867.

Fol. 7. A Letter signed by "E. Somersete" and the rest of the Council, with the signature "Edward" at the top, and—"By the King," addressed to the Princess Mary 22nd of July 1550. It notifies the appointment of Lord Riche as Chancellor, and Sir William Petre as one of the principal Secretaries. Hopes are expressed that she will show herself "Con- "formable to that which on our behalf shall by them be "proposed."—a change of her religion, namely.

Fol. 9. A Letter from the Princess Mary to King Edward the Sixth; in a cramped hand, and very faint ink. At the end is written in larger writing and a darker ink:—"From Beau Lyeu, the xvith of Maye, "scrylled with a rude hande." It concludes,—"Your "Majestye's most humble Sister, Marye."

Fol. 10. A Letter of Prince Edward to the Princess Elizabeth, 18th of December 1546. Printed in Nichols's "Literary Remains of Edward VI." (p. 32), with two slight errors.

Fol. 12. A Letter from Maria, daughter of Emanuel, late King of Portugal, to the Princess Mary, daughter of Henry VIII., King of England; in Latin, and finely written. It is dated "Santarem [Santarenam], Nonis (5) Decembris 1546." A complimentary letter to the Princess, extolling her virtue and erudition.

Fol. 13. A Letter from Anne of Cleves to the Princess Mary, dated the 8th of January 1553, and signed—"Your assured lowyng frynd to her lyue [s'end], your "to command, Anna the Dow[ager] off Cleves." It treats of the King's taking her manor and lands at "Byshsm in Barkshyre," and giving her, as a recompense, the house of Westroppe in Suffolk.

Fols. 15 to 28 are occupied by a small printed book inserted, being a treatise addressed to Pope Paul V. in favour of the Venetians. Its title is,—"Ad Paulum V. "Pont. Max. Epistolæ IIII. Clarissimorum Italiæ "Jurisconsultorum. Phinopoli 1606."

Fol. 29. A list, in writing of the early part of the 17th century:—"MSS. out of John Fox his Study." There are 23 articles mentioned, several of which are bound up in the present volume. It begins with "1. "Regis Henrici Sexti Miracula,"—probably, Blackman "On the Virtues and Miracles of Henry the Sixth," published by Hearne at the end of Otterbourne. "2. "Vita et Mors Regis Edwardi Secundi, ex Gallico "Thomæ de la Moore, Equitis, in Latinam versa:" this is contained in the next volume, or Vol. 47.

Fols. 31-33. "Della dispositione dell' Inghelterra "per questa impresa." Finely written, with faint ink, in a hand of the 17th century.

Fols. 35-379. A large mass of papers relative to the war with Spain, and foreign affairs generally at the close of Elizabeth's reign. The following is a summary of them, with but little variation, as given in fol. 35, the various articles themselves being written in different hands:—

Fol. 36. Against making peace with the Spaniards.

Fol. 47. Conditions touching the intended peace with them.

Fol. 49. Articles betwixt the King of Spain and the Leaguers—"Copye made by the original brought from "Paris."

Fol. 53. A Discourse of the state of Denmark and Norway, A.D. 1588.

Fol. 66. An Overture how Queen Elizabeth might readily have peace with Spain.

Fol. 69. Reasons of State against peace with Spayn.

Fol. 83. Conditions of resignation of the 17 Provinces by the King of Spayn to the Archduke.

Fol. 87. A treatise not to trust an enemy.

Fol. 103. Conditions touching peace with Spayn.

Fol. 139. Reasons for peace with Spayn, and an answer to it.

Fol. 142. "Duces Sabaudiæ nihil juris habent in "Genevam."

Fol. 156. A Letter to the Earl of Essex against peace with Spayne; in Latin.

Fol. 162. The French King's speech to the Parisians, going to war; in Latin.

Fol. 164. Articles with the Estates of the 17 Provinces, when they were given to the Archduke.

Fol. 166. "Treatise" of Blois, between Queen Elizabeth and Charles IX. of France, A.D. 1572.

Fol. 168. Instructions given by the Archbishop of Lyons to the Duke of Guise.

Fol. 171. A "Treaty" that it is lawfull for a Popish Priest to make a league with a Protestant.

Fol. 175. A Letter from the State of Geneva to Queen Elizabeth, touching their distresses; in French.

Fol. 180. Propositions from the Commissioners of England to them of Spayne; in English and French.

Fol. 183. The authority granted to the Earl of Leicester in the Low Countries; in Latin.

Fol. 187. A Coppie of the Elector of Saxony his Answer to the Kinge of Denmarke's Letter for a League to be made betwen the Princes of the (Reformed) religion; in English.

Fol. 194. A Relation of Cales Voyage, 1596—the Expedition under the Earl of Essex to Cadiz.

Fol. 198. A Treatise, in Latin, for all princes to oppose the Spanish greatnesse.

Fol. 220. Conditions offered by Sigismund, King of Sweden, to the Poles, to chuse him King; in Latin.

Fol. 224. The Answer of the States of [the] Low Countryes to the Poles, why they obey'd not the Spanyard; in Latin.

Fol. 229. Letter by the King of Navarre to the Clergy and Nobility of France and Paris, A.D. 1586; in Latin.

Fol. 241. Copy of a Letter of the City of Verona to Brescia; in Italian.

Fol. 244. "In Libellum Baronianum." In Latin; it begins—"In Libellum Baronium [sic] la. Gu. Co. Cr. I. V. D. Salvete, qui salutem nobis denegastis." The penmanship of this treatise is exquisite.

Fol. 256. A printed broad sheet, with the Venetian Lion at the top, being a Declaration of Leonardo Donato, Doge of Venice, against the Bull of Pope Paul V.; in Latin. "Impressa apud Rampasettum Typographum "Ducalem."

Fol. 257. A Letter of a Suisse Canton to the Pope, 28th May 1606; in Italian.

Fol. 259. Copy of a Letter from the King of Spain to the Pope; in Italian.

Fol. 262. A discourse from the Agent in Turkey, in Latin; addressed,—"Illustri et Magnifico Angliæ "Cancellario U. U. Domino et amico observan- "dissimo."

Fol. 279. A treatise or oration against the Jesuits; in English.

Fol. 319. Heads of the peace between Spayne and England, A.D. 1604; in Latin.

Fol. 339. "Oratio habita per Senatorem Alexandrum "Ronidium Londini die 30 Maii 1604, respondentem "Comiti de Northampton in prima conferentia."

Fol. 342. The Treaty of accord betwixt the Queen and the United Provinces, A.D. 1585; in English.

Fol. 379. The State and Force of the port and other maritime townes in Kent,—bearing reference more expressly to the tonnage of the vessels and boats of the various places, and the several landing-places of the county; of the time apparently of Henry VIII.

Fol. 385. A Letter from Mr. Rosni [afterwards Duke de Sully] to the Queen Regent of France; translated into English.

Fol. 386. Extracts from Rudborne's "Historia "Parva," as to the Life of St. Edmund, Archbishop of Canterbury; made apparently by W. Lambard, the Kentish antiquary.

Fol. 391. "Cardinalis Pole de sua ac Carol. Moroni "suspensione ad Papam Expostulatio."

Fol. 431. The Lord Protector and the Counsell the xxiiiith of June [1549] to Mr. Gregorye. In English; its object being "For encouraging the frequent and "dyscrete preathing of God's hollie word and com- "mandement." Signed,—"E. Somerset, R. Riche Canc., "F. Shrewesbury, W. St. John, A. Wyngfeld, Arrendelle, "Edward Mountagu." On the reverse is a communica- tion, of the same date and to a like effect, to Mr. Dr. Raynoldes. They both apply to the West of England, then under the government of the Lord Privy Seal. These and the following Letters, down to fol. 471, are all copies of the original documents.

Fols. 432a.-434b. Letter from my Lord Protector and the Council to my Lord Privy Seal, 29th June 1549, with several signatures. It seems mostly to bear reference to the late rising at Sampford Courtney in Devonshire, occasioned by the recent alterations in the Church Service.

Fol. 435. From the Lord Protector and the Council, the 10th of July 1549, to the Lord Privy Seal. It begins, "We do nnderstand at good length yonr "contynuall travaill for the scayre of the rabelle in "those partes." Signed by "E. Somerset, W. Petre, "R. Riche," and several others.

Fol. 436a. From the Lord Protector to the Lord Privy Seal, the 12th of July 1549.

Fol. 436a. From the Lord Protector to the Lord Privy Seal, the 17th of July 1549.

Fol. 469a. A Letter from the Lord Protector to the Council, at London, 7th of October 1549.

Fol. 470a. To the Lord Protector, the 11th of October 1549, signed "John Russell, Wylliam Harbert."

According to an entry at fol. 29a. in this volume, already noticed, all the above transcripts, from fol. 431, are MSS. "out of John Fox his studye."

Fol. 481. "Vita B. Edmundi Cantuariensis Archie- "piscopi," written in a fine hand of the last half of the 16th century. According to the entry at fol. 29, above noticed, this was also from Fox's study.

The Second Volume of this Collection (No. 538, Vol. 47) is much thicker, and somewhat taller, than the preceding one, and similarly bound in modern morocco leather. A much larger proportion of its contents are original than in the preceding volume; in Petyt's written catalogue, already noticed, they are thus briefly de- scribed:—"A Collection of original papers, under the "hands of Queene Jane, Bishop Bonner, Queene Mary, "Queene Elizabeth, and of many of the great officers; "and of other papers relating to Religion, and the "Church and Convocation, in her raigne, and alsoe "concerning Priests and Jesuites."

Fol. 2. A copy of a Letter from Edmund Bonner, late Bishop of London, to Queen Elizabeth, dated the 26th of October 1564, from the Marshalsea Prison in Southwark. It is written in Latin, and begins, "Auxi- "lium meum a Domino. Serenissima, clementissima, "et optima Regina, salutem, addere etiam . . . . felici- "tatem, eamque perpetuam, cum omni meo obsequio "et servitute," and is signed "Edmundus Bonnerus," from "sede tribunalis tui regii in Southwarke." The letter is of considerable length, and in it he appeals to the Queen's clemency, and quotes from the Fathers in support of his conduct in the preceding reign.

Fol. 3. A fragment of an original Letter of Bonner while Bishop of London, and dated — July 1558. From the mention in it more than once of "Your Grace" it no doubt was written to Cardinal Pole, the then Arch- bishop of Canterbury. In the latter part, in reference to the heretics then awaiting punishment, is the follow- ing passage:—". . . . Your Grace and my Lord Chan- "cellor, I should doe well to have them [the heretics] "burnt in Hammersmythe, a myle from my howse here "[Fulham]; for then can I giff sentence against theym "here in the Parisho Church very quickly and without "tumult, or having the Sheriff present." A somewhat similar letter on the subject of burning the heretics at Hammersmith, addressed to the Lord Chancellor [pro- bably Heath, Archbishop of York] was in existence among the records formerly preserved in the Tower.

Fol. 4. A curious paper, written probably about 1560, and headed "Bonner's petigre;" making out that he was the bastard son of one Sir Jhon Savage, a priest, who had seven illegitimate children "by three sondry "women," the fourth of them being "Edmund Boner, "godd of Elizabeth Fyssean; which, when he was "conceived, was sent to Kimesley in Worcesshire, to "one Thom. Savage, and after was married to a car- "penter called 'Boner,' of Potters Haundley, by Mal- "verne Hill. Of this Edmnnd Boner came D. Darbi- "shere, Chauncellor (?), as the fame talketh." Strype apparently altogether rejects this story.

Fol. 5. A short Latin address to Queen Elizabeth, on persecution for religion's sake, quoting St. Augustine, and citing the case of King "Nabugodonosor," and Shadrach, Meshach, and Abednego.

Thus far the pagination is in pencil. Here it recom- mences, with fol. 1, in ink.—

Fol. 1. A Letter from Edmund Boner, directed "To "the Kinge's Highnes," "At Roane . . . the ix. day of "August." He has been at Lyons and elsewhere, having been sent upon an Embassy, with Thomas Wyat the Elder, to the King of France.

Fol. 3. A Letter from the same "To the ryght "Honorable my very singular good Lorde, my lord "Pryvey Seale." Dated also "At Roan the ix. day of "August." A long letter; in it he expresses a hope that he "may sute my proceedings to the King's "contentation."

Fol. 5. A Letter from Edmund Boner "To the King "of England." Sent by the hands of this "Currour "[Conrier] Francesco." Dated at "Burges in Bary "[Berri]," the 18th of August. He mentions the depar- ture of the Bishop of Winchester [Stephen Gardiner] and Mr. Dr. Thirleby [afterwards Bishop of West- minster] from Lyons.

Fol. 7. A Letter of the same date, from E. Boner to the Lord Privy Seal.

Fol. 9. "The Copie of my Letters sent from Blese "[Blois] by Barnabie, secundo Septembris." A Letter by Boner, filled with complaints against his fellow Envoy, Mr. Wyat, whose former imprisonment in the Tower is alluded to. The Letter is very long, and remarkably curious; it is in Boner's handwriting, and the original was intended probably for the Lord Privy Seal. The following is the charge under head ix.:— "I can not commend Mr. Wyat, in that in all his factes "and doynges he useth Maudu as a God Almyghty, who "is as glorious (sic) and as malitious a harlot as ony "that I know; and withall as greate a Papiste, wher he "dare utter it."

Fol. 12. Original Letter of Lady Jane Grey as Queen, signed at the top, "Jane the Qucene," dated "the 18th "of July in the first yere of our reign," and addressed to "our trustie and well-beloved Sir John Saintlowe "and Sir Anthony Kingston, Knight;" commands them to levy forces for putting down the seditious movement against her, and for the purpose of so doing to proceed towards Bucks.

Fol. 13. An original Letter, signed "Mary the Qucene" at the top, dated "9th of July 1553, at our "Manour of Kennynghall," and addressed to Sir Edward Hastinges, Knight; commands him that by reason of the death of her brother, she is now the lawful Queen, and charges "him to have an harte and an ie vigilant "and fully bent to Godes glorye, our honour, the suertie "of our persone, the universalle quyetnes of the whole "realme, specially of that our County of Middlesex."

Fol. 14. Original Letter of the Lords of the Privy Council to the Bishop of Worcester [John Whitgift], dated 28th of May 1581, and signed by Bromley Chancellor, W. Burghley, F. Walsingham, F. Knollys, and others; enjoins him to make enquiry in his diocese as to recusants.

Fol. 15. Original Letter of the Lords of the Privy Council to the Bishop of Worcester, dated the 7th of March 1582, and signed by R. Leicester, F. Walsingham, F. Knollys, and others. A lawsuit is mentioned between John Russell (apparently) of Strentham, Co. Worcester, and Thomas Handforde of Wollashulle, in the same county, as to stopping the course of the river Avon, to the prejudice of the poor, especially. He is requested to mediate in the matter.

Fol. 16. Original Letter of the Lords of the Privy Council to the Bishop of Worcester, against recusants; dated 1st of April 1582, and signed by Walsingham, Hatton, Bromley, Knollys, and others.

Fol. 17. Draft apparently of a long Letter in answer thereto, sent with the Bishop's "Certificates of such as "refuse to come to the church."

Fol. 18*a*. "Oure opinyon concernynge the proceed- "inge with the Jesuytes and Semynarie priestes. and "other Papistes, by such as shalbe appointed to have "conference with them." In the next page a list is given of 25 Protestant Divines, beginning with Dr. Fulke [Master of Pembroke Hall, Cambridge], and ending with Mr. Tower.

Fol. 20. Copy of a Latin Letter of John [Whitgift], Archbishop of Canterbury, to Queen Elizabeth, asking her to nominate one of the Clergymen, whose names he has given, to be a Suffragan Bishop within the Province of Canterbury.

Fol. 21. Letter of Edmund [Grindal], Archbishop of of York, to Matthew [Parker], Archbishop of Canterbury, 4th March 1574. Printed in the "Remains of "Archbishop Grindal," p. 353, published by the Parker Society. In the next page is the draft of Archbishop Parker's answer to it, given in p. 474 of the "Parker "Correspondence," edited in 1853 for the Parker Society by John Bruce, Esq., and the Reverend T. T. Perowne. In addition to those named in the sequel, there are about 25 letters in this volume, written either by Archbishop Parker or his correspondents, which are printed in the volume above-mentioned.

Fol. 25. Original Letter of the Lords of the Council to the Bishop of Winchester [Robert Horne], dated Grenewich 7th November 1573, on the observance of the Book of Common Prayer; signed by W. Burghley, T. Lyncoln, T. Sussex, R. Leycester, and others.

Fol. 26*a*. "A Copy of a Letter from Gentlemen in "Suffolk to the Concell, concerning favour towards "Ministers." It speaks of an odious name put upon them by certain persons,—"the name of puritanisme; "we detest both the name and heresy: it is a compound "of all the heresies aforesayd. The Papist is pure and "immaculate, he hath, short of goodness for himself, "plenty for others. The family cannot sinne, the be "so pure, that God is homified in they, and they deified "in God."

Fol. 26*b*. Written in the same neat hand as the preceding. "A Copy of a Letter from 7 of the Privy "Councell to the two chief Justices, to observe favour "towards Protestants throughout the Circuit."

Fol. 28. Original Letter from Dr. William Maister, —"To the Right Worshipfull Sir Christopher Heidon, "Knight," dated Norwich, 15th of May 1574. Endorsed, apparently by Archbishop Parker,—"Dr. Mas- "ters. How he was handled in Norffolk for putting "down the prophesy men." Master appears to have been Chancellor of Norwich, and in his letter he complains that great people have set him, "a poor Chancel- "lor," to carry out commandments which they would have scrupled to carry out themselves.

Fol. 29. A Letter of Thomas Lamphy to the Archbishop of Canterbury, dated the 3rd of October 1571; as to the discontinuance of his lecture at Whittington College, unless he would sign certain articles. He speaks of himself as having been one of about 30 of the Synod, who wanted certain faults to be removed which they found in the Book of Common Prayer. This letter does not appear in the "Parker Correspondence," above-mentioned.

Fol. 30. Part of a Letter in Latin, without a name, addressed to the Archbishop of Canterbury, treating of the Hebrew names of the Deity, Adonai, Elohim, and Jehovah.

Fol. 31. Copy of a list of names of persons, desirous of supporting "a Supplication to my Lorde Burley, "Chancellour of Cambridge, for reformation of certain "matters amisse in the new Statutes of that Univer- "sity." Dated the 6th of May 1572, and endorsed,— "The names of such as joyned against the heades, "touching the new Statutes at Cambridge."

Fol. 32. A Letter of Robert Jhonson to the Archbishop of Canterbury, date 14th of August 1571. He had forborne to answer the first of his Lordship's three articles,—"for that it seemed to me to contayne a licence "of ministering baptism to women, a thing forbidden "by the word of God," for which he has since been suspended and sequestred from preaching and ministering the sacraments,—"and thereby My Lord and his "familye have longer then their accustomed maner "hath been, wanted those most necessary, comfortable, "and Cristian helpes, &c." He offers to make submission on certain terms. This letter does not appear in the "Parker Correspondence."

Fols. 33, 34. A Letter of the Archbishop of York to the Archbishop of Canterbury, dated 28th of August 1571; and, apparently, the draft of an answer by the latter, dated 8th of September 1571, beginning,—"Mr. "Bullinger's book is done in Lattin, not without the "advice of My Lord Burghley."

Fol. 35. Draft of a Letter written by Parker, Archbishop of Canterbury, to Lord Burghley, 4th June 1571, in reference to the examination of Mr. Goodman and others. Printed in the "Parker Correspondence," p. 381.

Fol. 38 (no fols. 36 or 37). The Lords of the Concil to Archbishop Parker and Sandys, Bishop of London, 15th of June 1571. Printed in the "Parker Correspondence," p. 384.

Fol. 39. "Mr. Cartwright's refusall to dispute with "Mr. Whitegifte before the Masters of Colledges," 8th of March 1570, 1. The paper is signed by John Whitgifte, Vice-Cancel., Andrew Pern [Master of Peterhouse], and six others.

Fol. 40. Original Letter of "Jhon Whitgift," dated from Trinity College, Cambridge, 29th of November 1570, and addressed apparently to the Archbishop of Canterbury, in reference to Cartwright's examination.

Fol. 41. An address to Qneen Elizabeth by a person whose name is not given, but Christopher Goodman, no donbt, in reference to "the displeasure unjustly con- "ceyved" by her against him, he having written "a "boke against the usurped authorite and regiment of "women." It ends,—"I apperteineth to you there- "fore to grounde the justice of your authoritie not upon "that law which from yere to yere dothe change, but "upon the eternall providence of Him who, contrarie "to nature, and without your deserving, hath thns "exalted yonr hed."

Fol. 43. A paper, signed by Goodman, and addressed to "Your good Lordshippes," expressing contrition for some things written in his work.

Fol. 44. "The declaration of James Clercke, of the "Middle Temple, London, Gen., made septimo Junii "towchinge Parsons the now Jesuite." It gives a full account of Parsons's early life, his education at Taunton

School and Oxford, and his acquaintance with Mr. Alexander Popham, Mr. Tristram Mitchell, and others.

Fol. 45. A long Latin Letter to the Bishop of Ely [Richard Cox], date — November 1570; the name of the writer obliterated.

Fol. 47. Copy of an address to the "Auncientes and "Benchers of the Inner Temple," dated 20th of May 1569, and signed by Pembroke, N. Bacon, F. Knollys, and several others of the Privy Council; in reference to the deliberations that had been held in the Star Chamber, in presence of the Archbishop of Canterbury and other Bishops, and some of the Justices, upon the non-attendance at church of several members of the Inner Temple, and their not receiving the Sacrament.

Fol. 48. Original of the address of the Privy Council, dated Windsor, 6th of November 1569, to the Archbishop of Canterbury in reference to recusants. Archbishop Parker has scored in three places with his usual red chalk. Printed in the "Parker Correspondence," p. 355.

Fol. 50. Original Letter, signed "Elizabeth R." at the top, to the Archbishop of Canterbury, dated Hatfield, 1st of August "in the 13th year of our reign "(1571); "charging him to proceed in securing uniformity. Printed in the "Parker Correspondence," p. 386.

Fol. 51. A letter closely written, and in a small and difficult hand. It appears to have been sent to the Bishop of Norwich, but by whom, so far as on a cursory inspection could be ascertained, does not appear. It is, however, endorsed, apparently by Archbishop Parker. "Crane, his lewd letter."

Fols. 53, 54. Draft of a Letter from Archbishop Parker to Sir W. Cecil, dated 2nd of February 1570. Printed in the "Parker Correspondence," pp. 375, 6.

Fol. 55. A brief paper in Latin, "Contra Anabaptistas."

Fol. 57. Apparently the draft of a Letter, headed at the top, "To y^e Lord Treasorer;" but endorsed in another hand,—"The Archbishop to Mr. Secretarie, "towching Mr. Cartwright's madd brother."

Fol. 58. A long Latin Letter, signed by the Fellows of Magdalen College, Oxford, appealing to the Archbishop of Canterbury for his protection.

Fol. 59. A draft of a letter, endorsed "Matthew "Cant. to my Lady Bacon of her husbandes binding "a poore man to give 5 li. a yeare to a kinesman of "his at Cambridge," dated 6th of February 1567. Printed in the "Parker Correspondence," p. 311; but the above endorsement is there omitted.

Fol. 65. Sir W. Cecil to Archbishop Parker, 15th June (or January?) 1564: he sends the Archbishop a draft for him to correct, and expresses a fear that the Queen "will be provoked to some offence, that there "is such cause of reformation." Not printed in the "Parker Correspondence."

Fol. 66. Draft of the will of John Story, Doctor in Law.

Fol. 69. A long written paper, endorsed "To Black-"well," in reference to a contemplated religious discussion before arbitrators. At this point in the volume, a large collection of papers relative to Blackwell, the "Arch-priest," and the Jesuits, begins.

Fol. 75. A draft of a Letter, not signed, and endorsed, in another hand:—"The cause of this letter proceeded "of Blackwell wordes to the Jesuites, he having ex-"ceptions against him." The letter begins,—"Un-"willingnes to shewe myselfe either to quick in "takeinge, or over tender in brooking, injuries, hath "hitherto not a little (as to me semeth) staide both "tongue and pen from due questioning and com-"playninge."

Fols. 76–83. A defence, apparently of Blackwell, against charges brought against him by the Jesuits.

Fols. 84, 85. Two leaves written in a small hand and very faint ink; endorsed, — "Mr. Bagshaw of the "delayes of the Jesuites. There is another copy there-"of;" after which is written,—"Dr. Bagshaw . . ." . . . . . been slaundered at Rome by the Jesuits."

Fols. 86–90. A Latin treatise, by a member of the Church of Rome, neatly written, and entitled "Adversus "factiosos in Ecclesia."

Fols. 91, 92. A short Latin treatise, apparently on the same subject, and endorsed,—"An answer to Mr. "Bisshopes [the name is doubtful] Reply against a "treatise proving those to be factious that receyved "not the Cardinal's gubernation."

Fol. 93. A paper, in extremely minute writing, headed "Jhesus Maria," and commencing,—"That we "cannot in confidence, policie, nor equitie, admitt of "Mr. Blackw[ells] Archpresbyteric:" and then follow 30 reasons, given at length.

Fols. 94–97. Several pages of very minute and close writing, containing charges against the Jesuits, probably by Blackwell. It is headed,—"A brief collection "of the causes moving me never to yeelde to the "Jesuites Howse, &c." In fol. 95a, under charge 22, the following occurs:—"The catalogue showed unto me "was thus, viz., all these here folowing have been in-"famed and evil spoken of bie the Jesuites, and such "as were Jesuitally affected; whereof though some "were not of England, yet I will write them as I "found them, &c." Then follows a list of about 100 persons, foreign and English, commencing with Sixtus V., the then reigning Pontiff, and Queen Elizabeth.

Fols. 97–105. Two copies—the second in a much clearer hand—of a paper beginning "Right worship-"full," and ending "Your worship's poor afflicted W^m "Watson." He recounts at great length the hardships inflicted upon him by the Jesuits. He was one of the 24 priests confined in the Marshalsea, that utterly disliked and condemned Babyngton's attempt [against the life of Queen Elizabeth, in 1586]. The following passage also occurs,—"Insomuch as I heard myself a "Scotts Puritane at a noble man's table of Scotland "say, that it was the Papists of England that must "helpe Kinge Jamee to the crowne, as Leicester's buke "had given yt him, or els he would never gett yt." Endorsed "April 1577 [a date that is evidently wrong]. "A letter from William Watson, a priest, unto Mr. "Attorney General." On closer examination, this would probably be found to be a paper of singular interest.

Fols. 106–112. A series of small tracts, finely written, prefaced with their titles, in another hand:—"Parsons "collections afore his flyghte. The Spainards letters "for the Jesuits to Rome. Parsons labouringe for a "redd cappe."

Fol. 113. Written in a small hand and faint ink, a series of answers, apparently, to the charges contained in fols. 94–97. The paper begins,—"The first [Jesuits "in England] were J. Parsons and J. Campion, sent be "theyre General, aboute xxii. years agoe."

Fol. 114. A Latin Letter, signed "G. B. Archp" [Gulielmus Blackwell, Archipresbyter, "William Black-"well, Arch-priest"], complaining of Benson having despised his advice.

Fol. 115. "A Letter of Mr. Blackwelle to Dr. Bagshawe, threatening him very sharply."

Fol. 116. A short Latin Letter, signed "Vester totus "Herring," addressed "To my friend Mr. Thomas "Layer [or Sayer]," and endorsed, in an old hand,—"Garnet, that he hath power to graunt faculty only to "Jesuits, and Mr. Bl[ackwell] to priests."

The papers in this volume, connected with the Jesuits, and the Roman Catholics of England generally, in the time of Elizabeth, are continued to fol. 317. At fol. 318 another class of papers begins.

Fol. 315. An original letter, signed "Your Lovying "syster, Mary the Qucene," and dated "At our "manour of St. James, the 26th of January in the first "yeare of our reign [i.e. 1554]. On account of the present tumulte [Wyat's Rebellion] her Majesty thinks it expedient that the Princess should put herself in readiness "to repair hither." Addressed, "To our "right dere and entirely beloved sister, the Lady "Elizabeth."

Fol. 316. Agreement signed by the Lords of the Council to abide by King Edward's limitation of the descent of the Crown: the original document. It is printed in Nichols's "Literary Remains of King Ed-"ward VI.," p. 572.

Fol. 317. A corrected draft, in the handwriting of King Edward VI., headed—"My devise for the suc-"cession:" Lady Jane Grey is to succeed to the crown, to the exclusion of his sisters, Mary and Elizabeth. Printed in Nichols's "Literary Remains of King Ed-"ward VI." p. 571.

Fol. 318. A draft of proposed sumptuary laws, in English, as to the wear of clothing of various qualities, from persons of the blood royal down to husbandmen; in the handwriting of King Edward VI.—"No hus-"bandman to weare any died cloth, nor lether tanned "or dressed, out of the realme."

Fol. 320. A letter from George Withers to Archbishop Parker; dated "Burie, 24 May 1565," and endorsed,—"Mr. Withers to the Archbishop, of his "yeilding to weare the cornered cappe." After having been suspended from preaching for refusing to wear the cornered cap, at the urgent request of the people of Bury, he now agrees to do so in future. Not printed in the "Parker Correspondence."

Fol. 328. A communication of the Privy Council to the Bishop of Worcester [John Whitgift], as Vice-President of the Marches in Wales, dated 25th of January 1578, as to "daungerous practises of poperie used in "the house of one Mr. John Edwardes of Chirk, or "dwelling neare thereabouts, in the Countie of Den-"bigh."

Fol. 329. Depositions presented to the Privy Council, at the same date, relative thereto.

Fol. 330. The Privy Council again to the Bishop, thanking him for his pains and good discretion therein.

Fol. 331. The Privy Council to the Vice-President and Council of the Marches in Wales, 1st of April 1578.

Fol. 332. The same to the same, 28th of September 1578; in reference to conformity.

Fol. 333. The Privy Council to the Bishop of Worcester, Vice-President of the Marches in Wales, 8th of February 1579, 80; announcing that Sir Henry Sidney, the Lord President of the Marches, is about to return there and take the duties upon him.

Fol. 334. The Privy Council to the Vice-President and Council of the Marches in Wales, 11th of February 1579, 80; complaining that the house of the Lord President has become in debt to the extent of more than 1,000*l.*; whereas when the President left, it was out of debt; also, that the fines imposed were never more grievous than now.

Fol. 336. A very long Letter from Dr. Thomas Sampson, apparently to Archbishop Parker, written in an expostulatory tone, dated 9th of November 1574. It is not printed in the "Parker Correspondence."

Fol. 338. A Letter from the Privy Council to the Bishop of Worcester, Vice-President of the Marches in Wales, "from Noneuch," 18th of June 1580; requesting him to extend the time for a collection of money to be made in the Marches, towards a fund for the relief of the town of Portsmouth, which had lately suffered by fire.

Fol. 339. From the same to the same; Whitehall, 16th of December 1580; as to the system of educating the young gentlemen of England beyond seas, whereby "they are nourished and misled in Papistrie."

Fol. 340. From the same to the same, 24th of October 1580; endorsed,—"Touching Recusants."

Fol. 342. "Interrogatories to be administered unto" several members of the Temple. Three of the interrogatories to "Mr. E." are (2) "Item, whether have you "said of late tyme that the marriage of preistes was "unlawfull, and their children bastardes? (3) Item, "you being requested in your chamber to goe to a "sermon at Paules Crosse, whether said you that you "would heare not one knave of them all? and that "Mr. Alpeye [? Alneye], the Master of the Temple, "stoode in the pulpytt like a crowekeeper? (4) item, "whether, after your committing to the Fleete, said "you that you cared not a curse for the Commis-"sioners?"

Fol. 344. "The assertions of Raphe Liner, tonching "the Canon Lawe, the Englishe Papiste, and the Eccle-"siastical offices of this realm, with his most humble "Petition to hir Majestie for redreasse."

Fol. 346. "Articles enquired of the learned in the "lawes ecclesiastical, touching the faculties."

Fol. 349. Thomas Byng [Master of Clare Hall, Cambridge] to Parker, Archbishop of Canterbury, 9th of June 1573. The Archbishop has asked for a copy of the sentence given upon Mr. Clark, for a summons made by him contrary to the Cambridge Statutes: the copy so requested is now sent. Not printed in the "Parker Correspondence."

Fol. 350 a. A written paper, endorsed "A spiteful "speech to Bishops, out of a boke called 'The Harborow "'of a faythfull subject.'"

Fol. 350 b. "A short forme of thanksgiving to God "for ceasinge the contagious siknes of the plague, "to be used in Common Prayer on Sundays, Wednes-"dayes, and Frydayes, in sted of the Common prayer "mayd in the tyme of mortalytye, comaunded by the "Bowship of Elye to be used in his Cathedrall Churche "at Elye, and the rest of his Diocesse."

Fol. 353. "The Byeshoppe of Winchester, for the "instruction of Mr. Doctor Boner in such tenne articles "as he hath put in wryting, and generally in al other "thynges concernyng the Kynges Hieghnes affaires, "and the office committed to the said Doctonr Boner "of legation and ambassyate in the Cort of France, "sayth as folowyth."—Endorsed . . . "at Vienne, "xx. Augusti." This belongs to the series of papers, fols. 1–11 of this volume, notices of which have been already given in this Report.

Fol. 364*b*. Oaths of certain of the Bishops in 1534, repudiating the Papal Supremacy, namely, Stephen [Gardiner] Bishop of Winchester, John [Stokesley] Bishop of London, Edward [Lee] Archbishop of York, and Cuthbert [Tonstall] Bishop of Durham.

Fol. 371. Letter of John Storey, Bishop of Rochester, to King Edward VI., thanking his Majesty for his preferment. He incidentally mentions the fact that the "conversion of tillage into sheep pastures" has brought decay upon the villages, towns, and cities of England.

Fol. 373. The Queen's will is expressed, under her signature, that married men shall not keep household in Cathedral Churches and Colleges: temp. Elizabeth.

Fol. 389. "An absolution pronounced by Cardinal "Pool to the whole Parliament, 2 yeere Marie 1554."

Fol. 390. "The Oration made by Mr. Doctour "Feknam, Deane of Powles, unto the Quene's Highnes, "in the favor of Sir John Cheke, Knight, before the "rehersall of his recantation."

Fol. 392. "Injunctions given in the Vysytation of "the Reverend Father in God, Nicolas, Bishop of "London, for uniformity in his dioces, in the iiiith yere "of the reign of our Sovereign Lorde King Edwarde "the Sixt."

Same few of the foregoing articles, in addition to those already indicated, may have possibly appeared in print, in the Parker Society's publications, or elsewhere: but the great majority of them, it is believed, have hitherto remained unnoticed by the press, and, in all probability, unexamined.

There are also a very large number of additional papers in Vol. 47, for a detailed description of which opportunity has been wanting in the present Report. The late Mr. John Bruce, F.S.A., on the occasion of his consulting the volume for the purpose of completing the printed edition of the "Parker Correspondence," seems to have paid some attention to the general nature of its contents, and, as the result of his examination, took the pains, in his own handwriting, to draw up a brief summary of the contents, in a classified form. This summary, a memorial alike of his learning, his industry, and his precision, is bound up at the beginning of the volume; and, under the circumstances, it has been thought advisable here to insert it, as being, to some extent, supplementary to this Report.

Mr. Bruce's Summary of the Contents of the Petyt MSS., No. 538, Vol. 47.

"The Letters and Papers in this Volume may be thrown into the following divisions:—

I. Fol. 303–314. A translation into Latin (probably by Geoffrey Baker) of the French Chronicle of Edward II. by Sir Thomas de la Moor.

II. Fol. 409–415. Early English Ecclesiastical documents, one a treatise or Confessio, ascribed to Wicliffe De Ecclesia.

III. Papers relating to affairs of Henry VIII.—

Fol. 1–11. Letters of Bishop Boner; some of them are later than temp. Henry VIII.; but the chief of them relate to Boner's complaint against Sir Thomas Wyat the Elder, when joined with him on a foreign Embassy.

Fol. 353–364. Boner's instructions on that Embassy.

Fol. 365–370. Oaths of Bishops, temp. Henry VII., repudiating the Papal supremacy.

Fol. 371. Letter of Dr. Storey to Henry VIII.

Fol. 398–406. Copy of the Will of Henry VIII.

IV. Original documents of the reigns of Edward VI., Jane Grey, and Queen Mary.—

Fol. 316–319. Edward VI.'s Devise for settling the the succession to the throne on Lady Jane Grey.

Fol. 416–417. Other papers relating to the same subject.

Fol. 417*b*. Letter of Edward VI. and his Council to Bishop Gardiner.

Fol. 389–396. Ridley's Visitation Articles 1550: the Deposition of Bishop Gardiner by Edward VI., and papers relating to the reconciliation with Rome under Mary.

Fol. 407. Archbishop Cranmer's order for the removal of images out of Churches, 4th February 1547, 8.

V. Correspondence of Archbishop Parker.—

Fol. 18–66, 320–327, 336, 342–352, 364*, 372–382, 419–523, 525–592 (end of the volume). These papers are part of Archbishop Parker's Correspondence with the government and his brother Bishops, together with various illustrative papers and letters. They are exactly the same kind of papers as some of those which the Archbishop bequeathed to Corpus Christi College, Cambridge.

VI. Fol. 14–17, 328–335, 338–341.—Correspondence of the Privy Council with the Bishop of Worcester, as Vice-President of the Marches of Wales.

VII. Fol. 69–302, 383–341.—Correspondence of the Arch-priest Blackwell. These papers seem to be most valuable in reference to the History of the Roman Catholics in England during the latter part of the reign of Elizabeth and that of James I.

At the moment of closing this Report, I have received the following communication from Mr. J. E. Martin, the Librarian of the Honourable Society of the Inner Temple; who has added therein to the obligations I feel myself under to him for the courtesy and attention which I have experienced at his hands.—

"Besides Vols. 46 and 47 of No. 538, Vols. 17, 52, " and 54 of 538 contain papers of the same nature; " and a careful inspection of many other volumes would, " I think, reveal papers not noticed either in our own " Catalogue or in the list appended to the Report of the " Record Commission in 1800."

HENRY THOMAS RILEY.

CHETHAM LIBRARY, MANCHESTER.

A folio volume, paper, writing of the 16th and 17th centuries, containing 631 numbered pages.

The contents are miscellaneous, but all relate to Ireland. They comprise portion of a history of Ireland; a description of Ireland; notes of the Peerage of Ireland; lists of fees in different Courts; copies of Acts of Synods; copies of King's letters and Council letters; copies of provincial Statutes; copies of Petitions; a large body of notes regarding Churches and religious foundations in Ireland.

Portions seem to be in the handwriting of Dudley Loftus, and portions in the handwriting of Thomas Preston, Ulster King at Arms.

A full catalogue of contents follows.

Page 1. Portion of a history of Ireland. Begins, "With this Bartholemus as their Cap" came manye " of that liue." Ends (p. 22), "so that in processe of " tyme desyre of . . . ere." The first leaf apparently is wanting, and the last date on p. 22 is A.M. 2535. (The author quotes Stanihurst.)

Page 23. A description of Ireland. Begins, "Ireland " conteyneth, from Knockbrandon in the South, which " is West & by North St. Michael's Mount in Corn- " walle." Ends, p. 116, with "The names of the " Irish Lords & Captaines in the four provinces of " Leynster, Mounster, Connacht, & Ulster." (This treatise was composed in 1586, see p. 81.) The descriptions are minute and interesting.

This treatise contains several divisions.

ALFRED J. HORWOOD.

" Journal et Recueil des choses les plus remarquables " en l'isle de Jersey, arrivées pendant les Guerres " Civiles sous les regnes des Rois Charles Premier et " Charles Second. Par Jean Chevalier, vingtenier de " la ville de St. Helier."[*]

The above-mentioned manuscript, regarded as authentic, and often referred to by local writers, appears to be of some value to the general historian from its containing many incidents relating to the private life of Charles, Prince of Wales, the Lords Capel and Hopton, Sir Edward Hyde, and other eminent personages during their residence in Jersey. It is all the more valuable as the production of an eye-witness, and a shrewd observer, as well as an official actor in many of the scenes which he describes; and whose style of composition, though quaint and somewhat diffuse, leads to the conclusion that the chronicler was by no means an illiterate man.

The first part of the Journal, which reminds one of well-known contemporary memoirs, commences early in the year 1643, with accounts of the proceedings of a local faction, consisting of a few clergymen, jurats, and other individuals, who from various personal motives had long been conspiring to procure the dismissal of Sir Philip De Carteret from the offices which he held as Lieutenant Governor and Bailiff of Jersey.

The leaders of this faction, far from taking any real interest in the questions at issue between the Crown and the Parliament, but intent only on obtaining more powerful support in order to carry out their own selfish designs, affected to identify themselves with the Republican party. After much perseverance, they succeeded in prevailing upon Mr. Pym and his colleagues to issue a warrant, appointing a local committee, composed of five of the discontented magistrates, vesting them with authority to seize the person of the Royalist functionary, and bring him before the House of Commons to answer the charges alleged against him.

Sir Philip, however, warned of their intention before hand, managed to evade capture by a timely retreat to Elizabeth castle, a fortification only accessible at ebb tide, by means of a causeway less than a mile in extent, between it and the town of St. Helier. His lady and their eldest son, prevented by the adverse party from accompanying him, took up a defensive position in the old castle of Mont Orgueil, on the eastern coast, which was well provided against a siege by Captain George Carteret, Admiralty agent at St. Malo; who, from thence, by the sale of prizes supplied, not only the Jersey castles but likewise a detached fortress holding out for the King, near the town of Guernsey. To this island, in which a parliamentary party had long been in the ascendant, a similar warrant was sent for the apprehension of the Royalist Governor, Sir Peter Osborne; who, foreseeing a contingency such as this, had previously secured himself in his official residence, Castle Cornet, a strong work seated upon an insulated rock within cannon range of the town. From thence, he not only defied all attempts at arrest, but often acted on the offensive by battering the habitations of the islanders, during the long blockade which the castle sustained.

The Jersey committee-men, baffled in their efforts to seize upon their governor, resorted for some time to negotiation; but finding that, although willing to appear before the King in Council, Sir Philip refused to place himself at the mercy of parliamentary agents, they ended by denouncing him as an utter malignant, a bitter foe to the liberties and religion of his country-men.

These calumnious statements so incensed the populace, many of whom were militia-men, that they were easily persuaded to adopt aggressive measures, and at once commenced the construction of a battery at the head of the causeway, for the purpose of molesting the castle and preventing the garrison from crossing over to the town.

Sir Philip endeavoured to put a stop to these proceedings by overplaying the pioneers with his culverins, but in spite of the volleys which flew over their heads, the works went on to completion, and contests ensued whenever the garrison attempted sorties. The strife continued for some months, Sir Philip alternately cannonading the town or proposing terms of accommodation. His adversaries, on the other hand, treated his proposals with silent contempt, or rejected them with scorn, and when they learnt that his second son was dying, and his own health failing, they had recourse to all manner of petty persecution. His lady, and other members of his family, were not allowed to enter the castle until the last day of his life; he was prevented from obtaining fresh provisions, fruit and other refreshment even to spring water, and he was denied the consolation of being attended in his last moments by the clergyman of his selection. Finally, Sir Philip, worn out by sickness and sorrow, expired at Elizabeth Castle on the 22nd August 1643.

The first part of the Journal closes with this event, three days after which a young parliament officer, Major Leonard Lydcott, arrived in Jersey, sent to take up as resident governor, by Lord Warwick, at the previous solicitation of the chiefs of the faction. His family, a small staff of officers and a few gunners accompanied him, but no other forces, the close-committee having been led to believe that a military commander only was required to enable the inhabitants to subdue the castles, and reduce the whole island in subjection to the parliament.

No sooner had Lydcott taken the oath of office, than the local committee discovered, to their great vexation, that he slighted their advice, and domineered over them in every way. The Crown revenues, which they had placed in sequestration, he took out of their hands, and freely confiscated for his own purposes the property of avowed or suspected royalists, numbers of whom fled to St. Malo to avoid being sent prisoners on board parliament ships constantly stationed near Castle Cornet.

After the death of Sir Philip, the command at Elizabeth Castle devolved upon the master porter, Mr. Hungerford,[*] whilst Mont Orgueil was gallantly maintained for the Royal cause by the widowed Lady De Carteret.

Lydcott, meanwhile, having reconnoitred the environs and selected positions from whence the castles might be assailed with most effect, proceeded to beleaguer them. For this purpose, he collected and armed a force of militia and volunteers, some of whom he placed in garrison at the Tower of St. Aubin to keep Elizabeth castle in check. Others he employed in digging trenches, throwing up earth works, and planting pieces of ordnance on commanding eminences. Another party he set to work in repairing and strengthening the battery which enfiladed the causeway; and when these preparations were completed, he laid siege to the two castles in due form, after the fashion of similar operations going on in different parts of England about the same period.

From the beginning of September to the middle of November hostilities were carried on with more or less activity. Volleys from culverin, demi-culverin, and saker were freely exchanged between the besiegers and the besieged to the manifest advantage of the latter, their guns being more numerous and carrying heavier metal. Daily skirmishes took place in open ground between opposing parties of musketeers; and, on dark nights, detachments issued forth from postern gates making stealthy detours to the rear of the enemy in order to capture their sentries, spike their guns, and damage their earth-works. By way of retaliation, Lydcott's artillery battered the castle walls, and his men occasionally attempted to escalade, but they were constantly repulsed and driven back in disorder to the entrenchments. Many cunning stratagems were also devised by the soldiers in Mont Orgueil to mystify the enemy so as to throw them off their guard; and not unfrequently sea-fights occurred between island boats and vessels conveying stores and reinforcements to the besieged.

Details of all these encounters are circumstantially narrated by the chronicler, even to the exact number of cannon balls expended; some of which damaged the roof of his own house in the market place. During the whole course of this petty warfare but few serious casualties seem to have occurred; nevertheless, it is evident that the besiegers were invariably discomfited.

After repeated reverses, Lydcott arrived at the conclusion that, without external aid, the castles were not likely to be subdued, and also began to realize the fact that the "Committee of Safety" had been grossly misinformed; and that he himself had been deceived by the leaders of the faction as to the disposition of the islanders, who, far from being parliamentarian or even neutral, were, for the most part, thorough malignants at heart. To add to these uncomfortable reflections, he learnt that Captain Carteret, an officer of much decision and renown, had rallied the fugitive royalists at St. Malo, and was preparing for a descent upon the island; that the chiefs of the faction had already made overtures of submission to Lady De Carteret; and that most of his personal staff had deserted him and taken service in the old castle under her command. In a very short time these and other discouraging reports received full confirmation.

On the 19th of November, Captain Carteret, with some of the exiles, reported to be more numerous and formidable than they were in reality, landed at Mont Orgueil. They were received with every demonstration of satisfaction by the people in the environs who, supported by the garrison, soon disarmed and dispersed the already disheartened assailants. Further reinforcements arriving from St. Malo, landed unexpectedly near St. Aubin's Tower, overcame the garrison, and took the commandant prisoner.

This last piece of intelligence so disconcerted Lydcott that, fearful of being captured in like manner, he embarked hastily, on the evening of the 21st, on board a cutter which had long been held in readiness in case of emergency, and fled to Guernsey accompanied by three of the committee-men, and a few more of their partisans. Others concealed themselves, and ultimately escaped in fishing boats, but the more daring of the conspirators, unfortunately for themselves, persisted in remaining in the island.

Within two days of George Carteret's arrival at Mont Orgueil his bold and well-concerted enterprise was thus far crowned with success, and there was every prospect that the whole island would speedily be rescued from the now unpopular sway of the disaffected faction and their parliamentary allies. On the 22nd of November, at the head of a detachment of regulars and militia, drums beating, colours flying, he marched into the town of St. Helier, to the great delight of the majority of the people, and the dismay of the disaffected minority. Apprehensive, nevertheless, of some disturbance among the latter, he summoned the States to meet at a distance from the town on the 24th, when he took the usual oaths, 1st, as lieutenant-governor, under Sir Thomas Jermyn, by virtue of a commission from the king; and, 2nd, as bailiff of Jersey, an office secured to him by reversion during the lifetime of his uncle and father-in-law, Sir Philip Carteret.*

His authority, civil as well as military, being thus recognised, Captain Carteret, who had taken up his headquarters at Elizabeth Castle, proceeded to re-establish order in the different departments of his government. During the month of December the male population of all ranks were assembled on certain days in their respective parishes to swear allegiance to the Crown. The oath was administered in his presence, and taken without hesitation; but those who absented themselves from the meetings without just cause, were declared to be traitors and rebels. The Dean, his son, and a few more of the political recusants, were afterwards apprehended and imprisoned, in accordance with a warrant issued by the Court at Oxford. Others, less obnoxious to the Governor, were merely kept under supervision until arrangements could be made for their being brought to trial.

When January came Captain Carteret directed his attention to reorganising the militia, victualling the castles, and projecting new forts around the coast, so as to place the island in as complete a state of defence as possible. For these purposes considerable funds were required; but, as the local exchequer had been thoroughly exhausted by Lydcott, the States proposed the levy of a general tax upon the inhabitants. Carteret, however, deemed it more expedient to raise money by way of loan from the more opulent, under promise of gradual repayment out of the Crown revenues. But, finding after a time that subscriptions came in scantily, he contrived to render the loan compulsory by other means, such as that of quartering soldiers on those who would not contribute voluntarily.

In the month of February the Earl of Marlborough, with a squadron of king's ships, having en passant summoned Guernsey to surrender, came to Jersey for the purpose of engaging Carteret to co-operate with him and Sir Peter Osborne in an attack upon the revolted island. At the prompting of the Governor the States of Jersey acceded to the proposal; but, in spite of liberal offers of pay and bounty to obtain recruits, neither soldier nor sailor could be tempted to enlist. The design, therefore, was relinquished, and the Earl took his departure in disgust, first to France, and then to England; molested, nevertheless, on his voyage by parliament cruisers.*

Captain Carteret soon after planned an attempt upon Sark, in the hope of recovering that islet on account of its revenues, due to Sir Philip's eldest son, from the Guernsey rebels. On the 25th of May four armed row boats were dispatched with orders to land at night, and endeavour to surprise the feeble garrison. But the sentries on the island no sooner descried the enemy than they fired alarm guns which soon brought shallops from Guernsey to the rescue. Some fighting took place, which ended in the total defeat of the invaders.

Early in June, Sir Peter Osborne having refused terms of capitulation from Parliament, Lord Warwick sent over a squadron of men-of-war to press the siege of Castle Cornet. Early informed of the vicinity of these ships, Captain Carteret, surmising that they might come to Jersey, made preparation for resistance; not neglecting to send succour to Castle Cornet, the key of his position. His boats, though under convoy of a well-armed pinnace, were attacked on approaching the castle by several of the enemy's shallops, un combat fort âpre, ensued, but the supplies were safely landed at their place of destination. The pinnace alluded to, when not employed as a convoy, was sent to cruise in the channel, and seldom returned without a prize. "The Governor's Galley," as she was called, was the precursor of many a craft of the same kind that by their captures replenished Carteret's treasury, and enabled him for some years to maintain Jersey, and to aid Castle Cornet in its resistance against the rebels.

It would appear that sanction to "set out letters of "marque and reprisal" in Jersey was granted by Charles I., who, in a commission under the Great Seal of the Admiralty, dated 13th December 1644, appointed "Colonel George Cartaret Vice-Admiral of Jersey, and "all the islands and maritime parts adjacent."†

During the course of the ensuing year the journal contains nothing of much interest beyond accounts of the exploits of the Admiral's cruisers; a description of the fatal accident attending the Dean and his son's escape from Mont Orgueil; and details of the judicial proceedings instituted against political offenders.

On pain of being proclaimed traitors, with confiscation of property, all persons absent from Jersey without the Governor's leave were ordered to return before the 25th of March, meanwhile active preparations were in progress for bringing delinquents, absent or present to trial. those who had been most inveterate against his uncle, determined that they should be arraigned on the charge of high treason. But, as the court over which he presided was incompetent to deal with a crime of such magnitude, an application was made to the Queen, through Lord Jermyn, sinecure Governor of Jersey, for a special commission.

About the middle of April three Doctors of Law* and a secretary were sent over from France under the questionable designation of Royal Commissioners. Immediately on their arrival a court, in imitation of the Star Chamber, was established, and the learned civilians, none of whom could speak French, sat in judgment every Saturday, without any semblance of a jury.

Copious reports are given by Chevalier of the proceedings during each of the trials which ensued. But, although curious as illustrative of peculiar customs they require no further notice than a brief summary of results. Thus, one only of the many delinquents was condemned to death and executed, several were sentenced to long imprisonment in addition to the imposition of exhorbitant fines, and others were liberated on easier terms; but those who did not surrender were ordered to be hung in effigy, and all their goods, chattels, and estates were held forfeit to the Crown. These trials, the issues of which seem to have been predetermined, lasted from the spring to the close of the year.

The intercourse which had been long kept up, with more or less activity, between Captain Carteret and the commanders of the Prince of Wales' army in the west, became more frequent and regular about this time. Messengers were passing to and fro between Jersey and Cornwall; Sir Thomas Fawshawe and other cavaliers arrived from various parts to hold conferences with the Governor of Jersey, and Sir Peter Osborne at Castle Cornet. From these circumstances, the Royalists being now hard pressed by the enemy and the Prince himself likely to be driven to seek refuge in foreign lands, it may be assumed that the members of his Highness' council began to look upon so convenient a spot as Jersey, "so well fortified, and not beyond the King's "dominions," as a desirable stepping stone to France or elsewhere.

On the 5th of March a letter dated as far back as the 31st of January was laid before the States, in which the Prince acquainted them of his having received "full "information touching the past and present state of "Jersey—how, by the blessing of God, the prudence "and zeal of Sir George Carteret, knight,† and their "faithful services, the said island had been recovered "from the inhuman rebels." The States hereupon voted an address of thanks to his Highness, and published a manifeste in which they set forth their motives for adhering to the King, and expressed their determination to preserve the island, at all hazards, in subjection to his Majesty Charles I.

In the meantime, the Prince, having been obliged to quit Pendennis, crossed over to Scilly, where he remained for some weeks, invited by a committee of both Houses, "in a loving and tender way to repair to the Parliament's quarters," whilst a fleet, under Batten, waited in the offing to enforce the invitation. Happily, a seasonable tempest dispersed the ships, and, before they could reassemble his Highness and his court, embarking on board a frigate, commanded by Captain Baldwin Wake, set sail from Scilly on the evening of the 16th April O. S.

The next day, Friday the 17th, at about an hour before sunset, Le Noir Proudaigle,—the Phœnix?—cast anchor in Jersey roadstead, and landed her valuable freight at Elizabeth Castle. The same night Lord Wentworth was conveyed to France to apprise the Queen of her son's safe arrival; and Lord Hopton went next day to take a survey of Mont Orgueil, with reference to its security in case of attack, and its convenience as a place of residence for the court. His report could scarcely have been favourable, seeing that the Prince at once established his court at Elizabeth Castle, where he continued to reside during his stay in Jersey. The Lords of the Council and chief officers of the household remained with him, together with the chaplains, physicians, and others in personal attendance.

Shortly after the Doggerbank brought over the rest of the noblemen and gentlemen. Another frigate followed with the tradesmen and their wives, many of whom acted as lavandiéres; also, the servants belonging to the suite, soldiers of the body guard, and a number of grooms, with four superb horses under their charge. Three hundred individuals, at least, composed his Highness' retinue, many of whose names, titles, and occupations are recorded by the chronicler, as well as sundry particulars concerning them. Lodgings, according to the rank and station of the last comers, were assigned to them in the houses of the gentry, merchants, and tradespeople in the town of St. Helier.

The Prince of Wales, by various acts of courtesy soon evinced his inate tact in acquiring popularity. He propitiated the disaffected party by restoring to their wives and daughters the dresses, jewels, and other valuables, sequestered in the hands of the Sheriff. He confirmed in their loyalty the local authorities and the principal gentry male and female, by allowing them to be presented and to kiss his hand in due form, when he held levées in the Great Hall of the castle. All present were charmed with his affability—car c'étoit un Prince grandement benin—and they manifested deep sympathy for a Prince barely 16 years of age, who had experienced so many vicissitudes and been exposed to so much danger. They were further gratified at witnessing the ceremonies of installation when he in due form in person confirmed Sir George Carteret's patent of knighthood, and afterwards created him a baronet. At the same court Captain Wake was knighted, preparatory to his taking the command of Castle Cornet, from which Sir Peter Osborne was about to retire.

The middle classes, too, were gratified by being occasionally admitted to gaze upon his Royal Highness when he dined in state. Chevalier, evidently one of the spectators, describes every incident however trivial; wonders at the display of gold and silver plate, the number of the courses, the variety of viands, and particularly admires the dexterity of the attendants, gentle and simple, with whose offices, as well as names, he seems to have been perfectly familiar:—quant au sujet et maintient de la table de ce Prince, il régne tel que chacun savoit son poste, et les choses y étoient mises par un si bon ordre que le tout se faisoit avec plaisir et contentement.

On Sunday, April 27th the Prince, who had not yet landed on the island, crossed over from the castle with his courtiers and body guard to attend divine service in the church of St. Helier. On disembarking he was received by a cavalcade of gentry, forming a guard of honour; whilst the militia lined the streets, to prevent his being molested by people from all parts assembled to witness so novel a spectacle as a Royal cortège. The service was performed in English by one of the Court chaplains, and, although few comparatively of the crowded congregation understood that language, all seemed well with the utmost decorum. These devotional visits were seldom repeated, owing to the inconvenience of crossing the water, when the weather proved unfavourable; at other times, the long disused church at the castle, having been refitted, served as a place of worship.

For a short time, whenever the Prince chose to cross the causeway at low water from the castle to St. Helier, his rambles were restricted to the immediate environs of the town; his council being apprehensive that crews landed from parliament ships might be lurking in the caverns around the coast in order to capture him. But when it was found that no such danger existed, his Highness, always well escorted, made frequent excursions on foot or on horseback to other parts of the island. On one of these occasions he paid a visit to Mont Orgueil, and partook of a repast provided by Colonel Philip Carteret, the young Seigneur de St. Ouen, whom he subsequently knighted at the head of the militia assembled for a general review.

Immediately after his coming to Jersey, his Highness had ordered that a pleasure boat, for sailing as well as rowing, should be procured for him; and, accordingly the Governor caused a model pinnace to be sent over from St. Malo, elegantly painted, emblazoned with the Royal arms, and fitted, in the stern sheets with soft cushions. Whenever the weather proved fine enough, the Prince amused himself for hours in steering about the bays; not, however, beyond range of the castle guns. He also took great interest in Sir George's plans for strengthening the defences, contributed 50 pistoles towards the reparation of St. Aubin's tower, and sent over to France for an experienced engineer, to superintend the construction of a strong outwork on a range of rocks adjoining Elizabeth Castle.

On the 27th of April, Lord Digby in a man-of-war, with about 100 Irish soldiers, came over from Waterford, hoping to induce the Prince to accompany him back to Ireland. Then came Lord Culpepper from Havre, with a couple of Dunkirk frigates, bringing messages from the Queen, which caused great commotion among the members of the Council. After a fortnight's stay, Digby, foiled in his design, leaving his ship and the Irish in Jersey, embarked in the Governor's galley for Normandy, accompanied by Milords Culpepper and Capel, charged with a special mission to St. Germain. The galley returned next day, May 12th, with Sir Dudley Wyatt, bearing a private letter from the Queen to her son, together with despatches for the Chancellor of the Exchequer and other lords.*

On the same day, Sir Baldwin Wake, with the two Dunkirk frigates and a store ship, set out for Castle Cornet, but was soon chased back by parliament vessels of superior force. The following evening, he again set sail with a stronger convoy, expecting to reach the castle during the night, but being becalmed for some hours, his squadron was descried on its approach to Guernsey and assailed by gun-boats from the shore, supported by those of the parliament ships in the road-stead. During the brisk engagement which ensued, many men were killed and wounded on both sides; nevertheless, Wake effected a landing at Castle Cornet with his supplies, and the convoy returned to Jersey in safety.

The anniversary of the Prince of Wales's sixteenth birthday was celebrated in Jersey with rejoicings all day long, and at night with bonfires, illuminations, and copious libations to the health and prosperity of a Prince who had deigned so to confide in the loyalty of the islanders, as to entrust his sacred person to their keeping.

Whilst this feasting was going on in Jersey, the garrison of Pendennis, closely beleaguered by the rebels, was famishing, neither officers nor soldiers having received pay for many months. Sir Thomas Hooper, who had been despatched with these sad accounts by Colonel Arundel, was sent back to Pendennis on the 4th of June, with some of the Irish soldiers, supplies of all kinds, and a round sum in pistoles, on board the Doggerbank, which vessel, driven by adverse winds into a small port in Brittany, was captured while in harbour by some of the enemy's frigates.†

As many such vessels, constantly cruising between Guernsey and the French coast, were often seen near Jersey, the Governor, in order to keep the guards at the out-posts on the alert, caused horse patrols to make the rounds at all hours of the night, a measure of precaution which resulted one morning in the discovery of a large ship and two light frigates, employed in taking soundings not far from shore in the bay of St. Ouen. In the course of the day, the suspicious vessels proceeded to reconnoitre in the vicinity of Elizabeth Castle. Thus occupied, they remained for a couple of hours, and then took their departure, without any further demonstration than a defiant display of the Parliament's flag; leaving an impression, nevertheless, on the mind of Sir George Carteret that they might return, sooner or later, with a stronger armament.

The Prince's barge, which had been sent to Cotainville on the 16th of June, returned on the 20th, with Lords Capel, Culpepper, and Digby; "et d'autres gentilshommes, lesquels étoient les sieurs Milords Wentworth, "Witherington et Jermyn, ils étoient venus pour "commencer le Prince en France avec sa mère. Son "altesse avoit reçu des mains de Milord Jermyn des "lettres de la Reine qui l'avoit envoyer pour consulter "avec les autres seigneurs, et il y eut une grande com-"lusion à ce sujet entre eux; les uns étoient d'avis "que le Prince n'allat pas hors des dominions de la "couronne d'Angleterre, et les autres d'opinion con-"traire."

The preceding and following passages from Chevalier's Journal, agree in so remarkable a manner with accounts of these transactions written by Sir Edward Hyde, but never published, that it is difficult to understand how a subaltern parochial officer could have obtained such accurate information.‡

"Depuis le Samedi que le Prince eut parlé à Milord "Jermyn, il étoit fort porté d'aller voir sa mère; ce-"pendant plusieurs de ses Lords s'opposèrent, mais ils "n'y seurent rien faire quelque remontrances qu'ils "fissent. Et voyant qu'ils ne pouvoient rien gagner "sur lui, la plupart de ses seigneurs en faisoient "de grandes lamentations, même jusqu'à repandre des "larmes très amèrement, et lui dirent qu'ils n'iroient "point avec lui en France.

"Le conseil fut tenu le Dimanche d'après midi, et le "Lundi ensuivant au chateau Elizabeth. Après le con-"seil, le Prince et ceux qui devoient partir avec lui "fretterent six bateaux pour y charger son train et le "baggage et les chevaux. Or, comme les bateaux "étoient sous voile pour partir, voila deux navires "parlementaires de Guernsey qui bouvoyaient au point "de la Corbière. C'est pourquoi ils rebroussèrent leur "route et ne repartirent que le lendemain.

"Le Jeudi 25e Juin entre les trois et quatre heures "du matin, le Prince s'embarqua dans la frégate de "Capitaine Bowden; Milord Jermyn le menoit d'un "coté par sous le bras, et Milord Digby le menoit de "l'autre. Lorsque la flotte mit à voile le vent vint à "se refraichir tout contraire, ainsi ils relacherent. "Quand se vint sur la relevée, environ les cinq heures "du soir, le vent se mit au sud-ouest et la frégate du "Prince tint route avec huit bateaux. Or, après qu'ils "eurent partis ils eurent un temps d'orage, accom-"pagné d'éclairs, tonnère, pluie et vent pêle mêle; "cependant ils arrivèrent heureusement à Cotainville à "onze heures du soir."

The exiles of most consequence, who remained for a longer or a shorter time after the Prince's departure, were Lords Capel and Hopton, the Chancellor of the Exchequer, Mr. Edgeman, his secretary, and Mr. Richard Fanshawe, with his wife and his wife's sister: "belle jeune demoiselle à la fleur de son age." There were many others of less note, including an old roysterring cavalier, Sir Henry Mainwaring,* of whose previous career, and marvellous exploits when he was a pirate, Chevalier relates so many particulars as to lead to the surmise that the two old men must have been very intimate; an intimacy which may perhaps account for much of the secret history the journalist was enabled to collect.

An event occurred shortly after which it may be worth while to mention, as it gave rise to much correspondence between Hyde and Culpepper, relating to the profits they seem to have derived from a capture designated in their letters as "the Malaga prize." Two days after the Prince's departure one of his frigates, which had been for some time cruising in the Channel, brought in a fine new English merchant-man of 120 tons, laden with wine and raisins, which had been taken on her way from Malaga to London. The eight guns she had on board were claimed as Admiral's dues, to be made use of in the new fortifications, the cargo was sold to some factors, who had come over from England, for 8,000 livres; and towards the end of the year, Culpepper drew upon Hyde for 300 pistoles, on account of his share in "the Malaga prize."†

About the middle of July a colonel, who had lost an arm in battle arrived, after much detention, from Pendennis with letters for the Prince, supposed to be still in Jersey. He was immediately forwarded to France;‡ "on dit qu'il avoit une lettre écrite sur du cambrai, "laquelle chaque lettre et syllable faisoit un mot, com-"posée d'une façon artificielle que bien peu pouvoient "la lire; laquelle s'addressoit au Prince."

Pendennis Castle having soon after capitulated, numbers of soldiers with their families, and many gentlemen sought refuge in Jersey, among the latter of whom were Sir Abraham Shipman and the Reverend Lionel Gatford. Sir Harry Killigrew also was expected, and a vessel was sent for him to St. Malo, at which place, however, he died after a short illness, so that the vessel on her return only brought over his lifeless body, to the great grief of his friends in Jersey. His remains, which had been embalmed, were buried with military honours in the church at St. Helier, and a most impressive funeral sermon was preached, "par le Reverend "Gatford, lequel etoit, en chaire, une perle de grand "prix, lequel ravissoit le cœur de ses auditeurs."

On the 26th of October Lord Capel left Jersey intending, on his way to Holland, to pay his respects to the Queen and the Prince in Paris. The real object of this visit, unknown to Chevalier, related to "articles of "association, signed by him as well as Hopton, Hyde, "and Carteret on the 19th of October, with the view of " defeating a scheme of Lord Jermyn's for selling " Jersey and the other islands to the French."*

Other events, occurring in the course of this year, relate principally to reinforcing Castle Cornet, often threatened by the enemy's squadrons; to Sir George Carteret's administration of affairs on land, and the adventures of his small but active fleet at sea; all of which are recorded with as much fidelity as if Chevalier had been appointed official registrar of the Admiralty Court in Jersey.

For some time the political exiles in London and their Guernsey allies had been agitating for a sufficient force to be sent over for the reduction of the Royalist strongholds maintained by Sir George Carteret and Sir Baldwin Wake. By order of Parliament and to satisfy the complainants, Major Russel, Parliamentary Governor of Guernsey, wrote to Wake on the 26th of January, offering favourable terms if he would capitulate; at the same time insinuating that, "Colloncl Carteratt" was well disposed to surrender the castles and Isle of Jersey. Sir Baldwin, not only rejected Russel's terms, but indignantly repudiated his unwarrantable assertion in regard to the Governor of Jersey.†

About the middle of February Lord Hopton having received news of the death of his wife, and also that his estates in England were in danger of being confiscated; prepared to quit Jersey; much to his own regret and that of the friends with whom he had associated so happily for nearly a twelvemonth. "Milord Hapeton et le " chancellier étoient de grands amis, lesquels tinrent " longtems table ouverte à ces pauvres fugitifs d'Angle- " terre, qui pour la plupart n'avoient point d'argent. " Milord étoit un homme fort grave, et d'une belle con- " tenance, lequel se porta prudemment et sobrement " pendant le tems qu'il resta à Jersey."

Lord Hopton set sail for Courtainville on the 26th of February, intending to reside at Rouen with his uncle Sir Arthur, a man well stricken in years, and very wealthy; and Sir Edward Hyde, according to previous agreement, left his lodgings in the town and took up his abode with Sir George and Lady Carteret at Elizabeth Castle.

About the middle of March a prize of great value, which proved to be a Parliament storeship destined for the supply of the army in Ireland, was brought into Jersey.‡ Her cargo consisted of provisions of various kinds, bales of cloth, wearing apparel, ammunition, and small arms of all descriptions.

The provisions came in good time to revictual the castles for the summer, the ready-made suits furnished the garrisons, for the first time, with scarlet uniforms; the muskets, pistols, and swords were served out to the militia hitherto but imperfectly armed; and the sale of the ship with the rest of her cargo yielded ample share of prize money to the officers and crew of her captor.

The capture of so important a vessel provoked the Parliament beyond measure, and disposed the two Houses to listen with favour to the importunities of the Jersey exiles in London and their allies in Guernsey, who were urgent for a speedy attack upon the Royalist castles in the two islands. Sir George, informed by his secret agents that it was intended to vote 12,000 men for the reduction of Jersey, held frequent councils of war with his officers in order to devise plans for effective defence. Full confirmation of the above report was soon after brought by his secretary, Mr. Jean Nicolle,§ on his return from Paris, whither he had been sent to obtain repayment of 1650 pistoles lent to the Prince during his stay in Jersey.

For some time the weather was too stormy for a fleet to put out to sea, but on the 6th of May, a large Parliament ship of war and her tender, hove-to before Elizabeth Castle, and hoisting a white flag, sent a herald and a trumpeter on shore. The herald, being duly blindfolded, was conducted into the presence of the Governor and his staff, to whom he delivered his despatches, and was then consigned to the care of the attendants to partake of refreshments. The despatches consisted of a letter from Major Russel, enclosing a formal summons from Lord Warwick, requiring Sir George Carteret to surrender the castles to the "King " and the Parliament." There was no hesitation in returning an answer, in which Sir George, after peremptorily rejecting the summons, reminded Lord Warwick that if he had "made himself a rebl and avowed " villayne by betraying his trust, he might have been " among the summoners and not the summoned." At four in the afternoon the herald returned on board with the answer, and the ships sailed for Guernsey without further parly.

This prelude served to render the Governor more vigilant than ever in his preparations for giving the enemy a "sour welcome." In this he was assisted by Colonel Digby, who had come over for the purpose, leaving his father, the old Earl of Bristol, at Rouen. Under their supervision the garrisons and the militia were constantly drilled, stronger guards stationed at the outposts, and a larger body of cavalry called into requisition. On the 20th of May there was a general review of the troops; after which the Governor, with much ceremony in the presence of the Chancellor and the officials inaugurated the new outwork at Elizabeth Castle, on which guns had been mounted, and called it Fort Charles, a name which it still bears.

On the 16th of June, at dawn of day, the Convertive,* a ship of 42 guns, with seven frigates, the vanguard as it was supposed of a larger fleet, was discovered steering a course for the Bay of St. Ouen. Alarm guns were at once fired, the tocsin sounded to assemble the militia, and mounted troopers were dispatched to give notice of the approach of an enemy, at head quarters. The lighter frigates meanwhile, having come closer in shore, opened their broadsides, which were warmly replied to by the island artillery. But, Sir George seeing, when he reached the scene of action, that the affair was nothing more than a feint on the part of the enemy, ordered his troops to cease firing, and to retire beyond range of the ship's guns; but, nevertheless, to remain under arms. The commander of the Convertive finding that nothing was to be gained by further demonstration, hoisted sail on his way back to Guernsey. "Vers la fin du mois, les nouvelles " arrivèrent à Jersey que les messieurs du parlement " avoient abandonnées leur entreprise et que le General " Ransbéro, qui devoit venir pour chef, fut rappellé et " son armée dissipée, et le dit Ransbéro employé à " d'autres affaires."

The Governor, however, was soon about to suffer somewhat severely for the successes of the vice-admiral's cruisers. Parliament, indignant at the taking of their storeship, remonstrated with the French Government, and in consequence an edict was issued forbidding all private persons arming at sea from sheltering in French ports. This was followed by a communication from the Prince of Wales to Sir George prohibiting for a time the granting of letters of marque,† so that when the cruisers returned, in fancied triumph, into port: "ils " trouvèrent," says Chevalier, "que leurs patâches ne " valloient presque rien, et qu'ils étoient comme autant " de meuniers qui avoient perdus leurs eaux."

Aware of the French edict, but ignorant of the Prince's prohibition, Brown Bushell and other worthies of the same stamp flocked to Jersey; but finding on their arrival that matters were equally adverse to their views they proceeded to Ostend to take service in Spanish piccaroons, vowing vengeance against the French and the parliamentarians.

Meanwhile the Jersey men-of-war, their guns landed, and their crews paid off were undergoing transformation into peaceful traders; but before this could be accomplished, news came that the vexatious prohibition had been rescinded, and the process of refitting for fresh adventures recommenced. The first scheme decided upon was an attempt to cut out a Parliament ship, of 40 guns, moored off Castle Cornet, for which purpose a well armed galley was dispatched to steal alongside the intended victim at night; but on closer inspection she was found much too formidable to be interfered with. The galley on her return encountered the Hart frigate,— one of Lord Warwick's,‡—which she decoyed, after the exchange of a few broadsides, into giving chase until she ran into a small harbour in Jersey, hoping that her adversary would follow. But the captain of the Hart, too wary to risk striking upon sunken rocks, gave up the chase.

Towards the end of August, Richard Harding arrived with reassuring messages from the King, whom he had recently quitted at Hampton Court. Three weeks after, came letters from his Majesty forwarded by the Prince of Wales to the Chancellor and the Governor: "dans "lesquelles lettres sa Majesté leur mandoit que Sir "Thomas Fairfax lui avoit fait promesse de le re-tablir "en ses royaumes et dominions paisiblement; et que "s'ils entendoient quelques nouvelles du contraire qu'ils "n'en prissent point avis."

From this period, although much seems to have been going on in the way of correspondence, nothing of public interest transpired until the 19th of December, when Sir Bryan Janson and his son, the Doctor, brought over intelligence that his Majesty was imprisoned in Carisbrooke Castle. On receiving this unexpected announcement Sir George despatched a vessel, with a confidential agent to the Isle of Wight. This vessel, which through stress of weather was obliged to put back, is doubtless the one alluded to in a letter from Hyde to the King, dated Jersey, 23rd December 1647.*

The same vessel started again on the 8th of January and made a safe passage to the Isle of Wight, where she remained a fortnight without exciting suspicion, as her crew, speaking their native dialect, passed off without question for Norman traders. Whilst they seemed solely occupied in disposing of their cargo of French linen and sides of bacon, the messenger succeeded in finding a Royalist agent,—probably Major Bosville,—who gave the countersign, and promised to deliver the messenger's dispatches into the King's own hands. That he succeeded appears to be pretty certain, as letters from his Majesty were received by Hyde on the return of the boat to Jersey.

"Had not the said messenger," adds Chevalier, "been unfortunately detained by contrary winds he would have been enabled to communicate with the King in person; but, just before he reached the Isle of Wight, so strict a watch was set upon his Majesty that, except by stratagem, it was impossible to gain access to him."

Although the journal contains no further information on this subject, the following passage from a letter of Sir Edward Hyde would lead to the surmise that much of the secret correspondence between the King and his friends, in reference to his attempt at escape from Carisbrooke, was carried on through Jersey. "If your "Majesty," says Hyde, "finds that my correspondence "with the place where you are will be endured from "this island, care will be taken for vessels frequently "from hence thither."

For some months nothing is recorded but privateering adventures, accounts of rejoicings, diversified by fast days, and the conveyance of supplies to Castle Cornet, the garrison of which was suffering from scurvy for want of fresh provisions. On the 29th of May, during the celebration of the Prince's birthday, news came of the escape of the Duke of York, and his safe arrival in Holland. "Chacun se rejouissoit des ces bonnes "nouvelles qui étoient venues par des lettres et aussi "que des provinces de Flandre d'Angleterre autres "lieux se tournoient du côté du Roy, et les Ecossais "prenoient aussi la partie de sa Majesté." About the same time the announcement also was received that a part of the fleet had revolted from the Parliament.

On the 26th of June, Sir Edward Hyde, having been summoned by the Queen to wait upon the Prince of Wales, set sail for Cotainville under a partiag salute of seven guns from Elizabeth Castle, in token of the Governor's deep regret at the departure of a friend whose society he had enjoyed for upwards of two years, and from whose counsels he had derived support under many trying circumstances. The Chancellor, during his residence at the castle, had caused a handsome house of three stories to be built at his own expense, adjoining the old church. Here he employed his leisure, in collecting materials for the history of the rebellion, and took great delight in a spot of ground which he had walled in as a garden.†

After Hyde's departure, active correspondence took place between him, Carteret, and others, relating, in the first place, to a scheme, originating with Baldwin Wake, for employing the fleet in the reduction of Guernsey; and, in the second, to a proposal from the Duke of Lorraine to land troops in Jersey for the same design. The Duke's offer was declined, owing chiefly to the remonstrances of Hyde and Carteret, who represented that the maintenance of a large body of troops, even for a short time, would impoverish the place, and that their presence would enrage the inhabitants, who hated foreigners, and perhaps detach them from their loyalty, so that the island would no longer be a safe residence for the Prince of Wales, should he be again disposed to repair thither, after resigning the command of the fleet to Prince Rupert.

Sir George Carteret, having soon after received intimation that such were his Royal Highness' intentions, made speedy preparation for his reception; but, on the 16th of January, Sir John Grenville, on his way from France to Scilly, arrived with official notice that the Prince had thought proper to defer his visit to Jersey till later in the year. A day or two after, Jasper Cornelius, a royalist emissary, came over from Southampton in disguise with the news that Prince Rupert, instead of coming to Jersey, had already set sail from Helvoet-Sluys, steering a direct course for Kinsale, determined not to engage in so doubtful a project as an attack upon Guernsey.

On the 9th of February, Colonel Pawlett and M. Moris, both wearing mourning scarfs, with black ribbon round their necks, brought over the afflicting intelligence that King Charles had been beheaded on the 30th of January. Sir George, apprehensive that a premature disclosure of the news might lead to tumults among the disaffected, did not allow it to transpire until he had taken measures of precaution against a sudden rising. In a few days the report being confirmed by letters from Caen, written by Secretary Nicholas, the public announcement was made, and caused consternation throughout the island. The loyal portion of the community expressed the deepest grief, and the malcontents were too much astounded to take advantage of the circumstance.

Reaction, not unusual in such cases, took place on the 17th of February, when, in accordance with the decision of the States, Laurens Hamptonne, the sheriff or vicomte, read notices in due form in the market square and other places, proclaiming the Prince of Wales King of England, amid the acclamations of the Governor, the officials, and the people: "Vive le Roi, Charles "Second du nom."

On the 5th of March, in the first year of his reign, Charles II. sent an address from the Hague to the Bailly and Estates of Jersey, recommending them to build a pier at St. Aubin, which would prove a great benefit to the trade of the island; and, promising to contribute 500 pistoles for their encouragement in this good work, he authorized them to levy a duty upon wine for the same purpose. His Majesty also sanctioned the raising of a loan to enable the Governor to supply the magazines and maintain the castles, "as his Majesty, "for his convenience, might choose to stay some time "in a place where he had before resided with singular "contentment."

The people, delighted at the prospect of being honoured by the actual presence of a King, subscribed readily to the loan, and the Governor lost no time in forwarding the construction of the new pier. "Sir "George, aussi lit faire une pêcherie proche le Chateau "Elizabeth en la propre place où, il y avoit plus de "deux cent ans passés, Messire Louis Hamptonne en "avoit fait une. Ledit Messire Hamptonne étoit "Curé de la Paroisse de St. Laurens et fit faire à ses "propres frais une des Chapelles de l'Eglise de la dite "paroisse et plusieurs autres choses à ses coûtages; "car c'etoit une homme grandement porté pour le "bien publie."

On the 2nd of July, Sir George Carteret, having been commanded to wait upon the King at St. Germain, took his departure by way of Cotainville, accompanied by several gentlemen and their servants.* After an attendance of some weeks at the Court, he was directed to proceed to St. Malo, where two Dutch men-of-war had been sent to convey the King to Jersey. His Majesty, however, altering his mind as to this route, in order to avoid the danger of being encountered by enemy's ships on that part of the coast, Sir George was ordered to take the two frigates on to Jersey, and send them from thence to Cotainville. He got back to Jersey on the 8th of September, and in a few days received an express announcing that the King had arrived at Contances, and was entertained at the palace of the bishop (Claude Auvry) until the arrival of the frigates. Finding on the 16th that the weather was unfavourable for sailing vessels, Sir George dispatched his galley, the "Princes' pinnace" and other row boats to Cotainville.

On the 17th of September (old style), about four o'clock in the afternoon, Charles II., his brother the Duke of York, and other illustrious personages, landed, after a fine passage, at Elizabeth Castle. The rest of the suite, with domestics, horses, coaches, and sumpter waggons followed in a day or two. But scarcely had the last boat come into port than several Parliament ships made their appearance. "Ils vencient pour "essayer de prendre le Roy, mais Dieu preserva Sa "Majesté de tomber entre leurs mains." Had the King persisted in crossing from St. Malo, as originally intended, he would have run great risk of being captured.

The King, his royal brother, and the nobility in personal attendance, together with their servants, were, as before, accommodated at Elizabeth Castle, to which many new dwellings had been added. Others of the suite were lodged at St. Helier, which became so crowded that persons who afterwards arrived were forced to take up their abode in the town of St. Aubin.

There was at first much difficulty in obtaining a sufficient supply of food for upwards of 300 extra consumers, and, more still, in providing forage for the horses; but the Governor threw open the castle granaries, and, by taking off import duties, soon succeeded in procuring ample supplies of all kinds from France. In order to meet current expenses, he ordered that a tax should be levied, and proposed that a portion of the money collected should be presented to the King. "A cet effet, Messieurs les États sur la proposition du "Sieur Gouverneur, ont trouvée qu'il sera levé de sur "chacun des habitans, suivant leurs moyens, un rât de "vingt sous tournois par chacun quartier de froment "de rente . . . lequel argent sera, avec toute humilité "presenté à sa Majesté en témoignage de leurs bonne "affection et obeissance." In a short time about 5,000 écus were collected, a portion of which sum was graciously accepted by his Majesty.

It rained heavily on Sunday, the 23rd of September, nevertheless the King, the Duke, and the courtiers crossed over from the castle in barges: "pour dire "leurs prieres dans le Temple de St. Helier;" the aisles of which were strewn with rushes, and all parts of the edifice decorated with flowers and green boughs. The service was performed by the Reverend Dr. Byam, who, at the conclusion of the sermon* announced that it was his Majesty's gracious intention to repair to the Town Church every fortnight, as the castle chapel could not accommodate his suite, all of whom he required to attend Divine service.

On this and other occasions, Chevalier seems to have been an attentive observer of the Royal brothers, of whose features, persons, dresses, and deportment he gives a minute description, which bears every evidence of truthfulness. He also gives a catalogue raisonné of the members of the retinue, from "Mylord Kiper, Garde "du grand sçeau," to his Majesty's tailor, whose wife, although clothed in silk attire and other rich stuffs, resembled a captain of dragoons rather than a female.

The home department being entirely administered by Sir George Carteret, the King had leisure to amuse himself in his circumscribed dominions with his brother, Lord Wilmot, Tom Elliott, Bap May, and other gay companions at that time in Jersey. When the weather was favourable they sailed about in the yacht, landing occasionally to watch the progress of the works at St. Aubin, or to saunter in the old castle of Mont Orgueil. Sometimes they rambled about the country with their dogs and guns in quest of wild fowl; at others they made excursions on horseback, paying visits to the "small gentry" of the isle, at whose houses the King often condescended to remain for a day or two, accepting their hospitality with gracious good humour.

His Majesty took great interest in military affairs, and in person reviewed the insular army, amounting to not less than 5,000 men. An imposing spectacle, as Chevalier's estimation, to see the whole of the militia brigaded on the sands of St. Aubin's bay; more particularly when the King with his brilliant staff rode along the lines. "Et comme le Roi passoit devant les "soldats ils levoient leurs chapeaux en haut, criant "'Vive le Roi—sauve le Roi—Dieu le mette sur son "trone!' Tellement aussi des cris de joie étoient faits "par le peuple comme sa Majesté passoit devant eux."

In the month of November his Majesty graciously condescended to stand sponsor to Lady Carteret's infant daughter. The baptismal ceremony took place in the chapel of the castle, and Charles gave the name of Caroline to the child;* the female sponsors being Lady Cornwallis and Madam Wyndham, the King's nurse, who had recently come to join him in Jersey.

After the ceremony there was no doubt a banquet, as entertainments of this kind were often given at Elizabeth Castle: the King's and the Duke's dwarfs being called in to amuse the company, "avec leurs petite discours "badins." The former of these dwarfs was called Jean de Lancre, a mischievous little jester, much encouraged by his Royal master in playing practical jokes. M. Bequers, the Duke's dwarf, was of a more quiet humour; but the poor little fellow died of small-pox soon after his arrival in Jersey.

Charles' time, however, does not appear to have been exclusively devoted to his pastimes; on the contrary, private as well as public business frequently interfered. Money, for instance, was wanted for domestic purposes, and had to be raised by the sale of wheat rents, which, from various causes, had escheated to the Crown. His followers also troubled him, as they had done at the Hague, by their constant brawls, ending now and then in a fatal duel, which could only be put a stop to by his proclaiming that all parties convicted of engaging in hostile encounters should be condemned to death and executed, without appeal to Royal clemency. He was not unfrequently compelled to perform the distasteful ceremony of "touching for the evil," the islanders being determined not to forego the opportunity afforded by the actual presence of Royalty. He was required also to give audience to many envoys sent over by foreign potentates, the maintenance of whom and their large retinues involved him in considerable expense.

As the year advanced it became his duty to hold frequent councils, and assist at tedious debates in reference to his acceptance of pressing invitations to go to Ireland. Then came constant despatches from the Scotch Commissioners which required earnest consideration; and, finally, when the Commissioners made their appearance every spare moment was occupied in conferences with them, and consultations with his ministers.

"Le Jeudi, sixième jour de Decembre, arrivèrent en Jersey Milord Liberthon, commissaire du Parlement d'Ecosse, et plusieurs gentilshommes envoyés par le clergé, lesquels vinrent apporter des lettres au Roi, et pour traiter de la paix. . . . Lui promettant que s'il acquiesçoit aux articles à lui envoyez, qu'il pouvoit se rendre en Ecosse, et qu'ils le couronneroient Roi de ce Royaume; et lui promettant aussi toute aide pour le recouvrement de son royaume d'Angleterre.

"La cour seyoit tous les jours, mais les opinions étoient divisés, les uns étant d'avis que le Roi allât en Irelande, et les autres d'opinion qu'il allât en Ecosse.

"Enfin, le 29e de Decembre la conclusion fut arrêtée que le Roi iroit traiter avec les Ecossais à une ville appellée Breda."

1650.

During the month of January, numbers of persons were coming and going on various errands. A Royal messenger, wearing a silver badge of office over a black doublet, brought over letters from the Queen to her son, and returned to France soon after with replies.

The Cornelia, a small frigate commanded by Captain Anthonio,† arrived from Waterford with dispatches from Milords Ormond and Inchquin; bringing over, likewise, many ladies of quality forced to leave Ireland in consequence of the capture of several towns by the rebel army. On the same day the Scotch Commissioners and Presbyterian deputies sailed for Normandy; the Laird of Liberton being on his way to Calais where a frigate was in waiting to take him to Scotland previous to his setting out to confer with the King at Breda. They were no sooner gone than the Queen of Portugal's confessor arrived, Father Daly, otherwise Domingo de Rosorio, sent over on a secret and important mission to Charles II. Then came the brilliant Duke of Buckingham, whose handsome person and rich attire seem to have made a strong impression on the journalist. The Duke was sent over by the Queen to hasten her son's departure from Jersey, and to induce him to appoint some place of meeting with her on his journey to Holland. The King speedily dispatched Lord Percy to acquaint the Queen that, in compliance with her command, it was his intention to quit Jersey very shortly; and in a day or two the Royal carriages, horses, and heavy baggage were sent to Normandy.

By his Majesty's express command, a solemn fast was kept throughout the island on the 30th of January, in pious commemoration of his Royal father's cruel execution. Services, appropriate to the occasion, were performed in all the parish churches; "et dans le temple " de St. Helier, la chaire, le pupitre et la table étoient " couverts de noir."

On the 11th of February, according to proclamation, Charles II. held a farewell levée in the great hall of Elizabeth Castle, at which were present the Duke of York, the members of the Council, and all the nobility. The Governor, the members of the states, the seigneurs of fiefs, franc-tenants, and others holding directly from the Crown were also in attendance. Sir George Carteret did homage for his fiefs in Jersey, and also for certain islands near Virginia recently granted to him by the King in perpetual inheritance. Seigneurs of other fiefs did homage in like manner; and heads of other houses acknowledged service to their sovereign Lord.

His Majesty then announced his intention to quit Jersey in a few days, assuring his trusty and well-beloved subjects of the high sense he entertained of their loyal devotion, exhorting them to continue firm in their allegiance, and promising to "fix some signal " mark of favour on the island as soon as it pleased " God to enable him to do so." Before the Court broke up the authorities and gentry were permitted to kiss the Royal hand, and finally His Majesty graciously bid them "heartily farewell."

On Wednesday, February the 13th,—old style,—Charles II., having previously deputed the Duke of Buckingham to inform the Queen mother that he would meet her at Rouen, embarked on board a frigate in waiting, accompanied by the Duke and the Governor. On the deck of the vessel the Royal brothers parted, with every sign of mutual affection, even to the shedding of tears. The Duke and Sir George returned sorrowfully to the Castle, and the frigate with a light south-westerly breeze pursued her course towards Cotainville, where his Majesty landed at 3 o'clock the same afternoon, and was received with welcome by the Bishop of Coutance.

The islanders, although mortified at His Majesty's not remaining longer, comforted themselves with the reflection that a King had actually reigned in Jersey for nearly five months: "Cette pauvre petite isle loyale " mérite d'être à jamais en mémoire et renommée de " toutes nations, laquelle a eu l'honneur de servir d'asyle " à son Prince pour tant de mois."

The Duke of York, who remained behind until the beginning of September, had been appointed Governor of Jersey, and "Superintendent of the rest of those " islands," under the expectation that the capture of Guernsey would before long be attempted. But, when it was ascertained that Prince Rupert, with the fleet, had proceeded to Portugal, without the slightest intention of touching at Jersey, the Duke, by the King's command returned to France.

In concluding this epitome of the contents of Chevalier's "Journal," it may be proper to mention that satisfactory evidence of the author's accuracy is derivable from many sources. 1st. His transcripts from the first volume of the proceedings of the Jersey States, a book still in existence, are found to be scrupulously exact, and therefore it may be inferred that his copies from the second volume, which is lost, are equally to be relied on. 2nd. His statements are corroborated by passages in Whitelock's Memorials, Prynn's "Lyar cou- " founded," the second volume of the Clarendon State Papers, Carte's collection of letters and his Life of Ormond, the correspondence appended to Evelyn's Diary, and family papers belonging to Sir George Osborne, Baronet, of Chicksand's Priory. Lastly, many of the public events adverted to in the Jersey Chronicle are so closely interwoven with those referred to in letters from Sir Edward Hyde and his contemporaries, that the one source of information affords a remarkable key to the interpretation of the other. The letters alluded to are preserved in the Bodleian collection of manuscripts, but were not made use of by the editors of the Clarendon State Papers.

A few days after receiving my formal appointment, on 1st November 1870, as an Inspector for Scotland, I had an opportunity of bringing the objects of the Commission under the notice of the Duke of Montrose. His Grace was pleased at once to authorize me to make a Report on such of his muniments as might be considered of historical interest.

Upwards of twenty years ago I made a careful examination of all the documents deposited in the Muniment Room at Buchanan, in reference to the old Dukedom of Montrose, which was then claimed by the late Earl of Crawford and Balcarres; and having afterwards frequently examined the papers for other purposes, I have been long familiar with their contents.

The Original Papers being chiefly in my own custody, I am enabled to report on them in greater detail than I could have done had they been all at Buchanan; and an exhaustive report on these documents will, I humbly think, be more conducive to the objects proposed by the Commission than a more general or merely formal one would be.

The "Gallant Grahams" are an eminently historical house. From the story of their lives, a great part of the history of their country could be written. The extensive lands which they once held in many counties of Scotland, have passed into other hands; but many ancient documents remain to show the patriotic services of the race.

The muniments at Buchanan may be classified under three separate divisions. The first relates to the main line of the ancient family of Graham, successively Lords Graham, and Earls, Marquises, and Dukes of Montrose.

The second division relates to that branch of the family of Graham who held the title and Earldom of Menteith from 1424 to 1694, in which year William the last Earl of Menteith died.

The third and last division consists of those documents of the Earls of Lennox which came into the possession of the first Duke of Montrose when he purchased from the Duke of Lennox the Earldom and Regality of Lennox.

In this report I must confine myself to a portion of the first class of documents, being those from David de Graham in the time of King William the Lion (1175) down to the conclusion of the career of the first Marquis of Montrose (1650).

The Historical Manuscripts amongst the Montrose Muniments subsequent to that time, will form the subject of another Report.

I.—Ancient Muniments of the Family of Montrose from David de Graham in the time of King William the Lion, A.D. 1175, to John fourth Earl of Montrose, Great Commissioner in Scotland, 1626, Father of the first Marquis of Montrose.

1. Charter by King William the Lion (engrossed in Charter of Confirmation by King Robert the Second) to David of Graham, senior ("Pater"), Knight, of the lands of Kynnabre, Charlton and Borrowfield in the shire of Forfar, and of the fishing of the Water of Northesk wherever the water runs, with the usual places for the drawing and drying of nets, to be held by him and his heirs in free barony for the service of a bowman in the King's army, and a suit of Court at the King's head Court of Forfar. The Charter, which is without date, was granted at Perth, probably about the year 1175. The witnesses are Mathew Bishop of Aberdeen, William of Bidun, Chancellor, Earl Duncan (of Fife), Justiciar, Malcolm Earl of Athole, Gilbebryde Earl of Angus, William of Beskele [Walter of Berkeley], Chamberlain, Hugh Giffer, Robert of Boseville. The Confirmation is dated at the Castle of Rothesay, 28th July, in the nineteenth year of the King's reign [1389].

2. Charter by King William the Lion to Malise son of Fereth, Earl of Strathern, of the lands of Mothil, Tulliedel, Oggovelie, Barderal, Kinkarden Orvtavenaden and Rossie, to be held by him and his heirs, of Earl Gilbert his brother, and his heirs, in feu and heritage for the service of one Knight. The Charter was granted at Perth, without date, but probably at the same time (1175) as the immediately preceding Charter. The seal has been detached, and part of the testing clause is worn away; but from a copy of the Charter made about the middle of last century, the names of the witnesses are ascertained to be the same as those in No. 1.

3. Charter by King William the Lion to Radulph of Graham, of the lands of Cousland, Penthand, and Gogger [in the county of Edinburgh], to be held by him and his heirs in feu and heritage for the service of a Knight and a half. The Charter also provides that the mother of the said Radulph be included in the donation to him. The Charter, which is without date, was granted at Lindisdegore, probably about the year 1180. The witnesses are Richard Cumin, Robert Avenel, Alan son of Walter son of Alan, Walter of Berkeley, Robert his brother, Osbert Olifard, Simon the Porter, Henry of Mundeuille, Richard the Clerk. The Great Seal in green wax is appended with silk, and both are in good preservation.

4. Charter by King Alexander the Second, confirming a grant by Patrick, Earl of Dunbar, to David of Graham, for his homage and service, of the whole waste lands of Dundaff and Strathcarron, which was the King's forest, in excambion for the land of Gretquerquer in Galloway, which the Earl by his Charter had formerly conferred on David Graham, to be held by him and his heirs of the said Earl Patrick and his heirs in feu and heritage. The witnesses are Gaulfrid Bishop of Dunkeld, Walter the son of Alan, Steward and Justiciar of Scotland, Walter Cumyn, Earl of Menteteth, Walter Olifard, Justiciar of Lothian, Alan the porter, Walter Byset, Roger Avenel, John of Hay. Dated at Scone, 23 October, in the 23rd of the King's reign [1237].

5. Duplicate of the immediately preceding Charter.

6. Charter by Henry of Graham, son of Sir Henry of Graham, to Sir David of Graham, his cousin ("congnato meo"), of the town of Clifton [in the shire of Edinburgh], to be held by him and his heirs for the service of one bowman, and for as much assistance to the King's army as pertains to two carrucates of land in Lothian. The Charter is undated, but appears to have been granted about the year 1230. The witnesses are Sir David of Lindesay, Justiciar of Lothian, Sir William of Lindesay, Sir Thomas, son of Randolph, Sir John de Wallibus, Sheriff of Edinburgh, Sir John Cumyn, Sir Walter of Rothenay, Sir Alexander Huwyet, Sir Richard of Lindesay, Sir Alexander of Stratoun, Sir Henry Hakette, Sir Philip le Brune, Gamell, Clerk to the King, Sampson, Clerk to Sir W. of Lyndesay, David of Mauhan, Clerk to the Justiciar of Lothian. Part of the seal of the granter only remains. It has been a single escalop.

7. Charter by Adam of Powlewrth, son of Adam of Powlewrth, to David of Graham, his cousin ("congnato meo"), of a tenement which his brother Patrick had given him in Dunipace, in excambion for four merks of Wederley, to be held by him and his heirs for payment yearly of half a stone of wax. This Charter is without date, but it was probably granted about the year 1230. The witnesses are Sir John of Striuclin, sheriff of Striuclin, Sir William of Erthe, Sir John of Lamberton, Sir Gilbert of Powlewrth, Sir Malcolm Thane of Kalentir, Stephen of Blauntire, Henry Boggeman, and others.

8. Charter by Malis, Earl of Strathern, to Annabella his sister, for her marriage, of the land of Kynkardyn in Kather; to be held by her and the heirs of her body for performance of the King's forinsic service pertaining to that land. Not dated, but granted probably about the year 1250. Witnesses, Alexander Comyn, Earl of Buchan, Justiciar of Scotland, Sir Freskyne of Moray, Sir John of Dundemor, Sir Reginald of Cheyne, Sir Robert of Walhopp, Sir Malcolm of Moray, Sir W. of Ramesey, Sir John of Wemes, Knights, John of Kindeloch, &c.

9. Charter by Malise, Earl of Strathern, to Sir David of Graham, of the lands of Kynecardin, Conie, Clune, Foscayl, Perny, and Bardrals; to be held of the granter and his heirs in feu and heritage for payment yearly of one penny in name of blench farm. Not dated, but granted probably about the year 1260. The witnesses are Robert Bishop of Dunblane, Sir Stephen of Moray, Sir Nicolas, Rector of Crieff, Duncan the son of Fargus, Malcolm of Glendochyr.

10. Duplicate of the immediately preceding Charter.

11. Charter by King Alexander the Third, confirming the grant which the said Earl Malise had made to the said Sir David of Graham of the lands in the immediately preceding Charter. Dated at Selkirk, 28 June, 22nd of the King's reign [1271]. The witnesses are, John Cumyn the son, Symon Fraser, William of Abernythen, Reginald le Chen, the son, William Byseth.

12. Charter by King Alexander the Third confirming the donation made by the said Earl Malise to the said Sir David of Graham of the said lands of Kyncardin and others in Strathern, to be held by the said David and his heirs; reserving to the King and his successors their forinsic service, and if the tenandry of these lands should fall to the King, by rendering three suits at the three head pleas to be held at Perth annually. Dated at Scone, 13 November, 37th year of the King's reign, [1285]. The witnesses are Alexander Cumyn, Earl of Buchan, Constable and Justiciar of Scotland, Douenald, Earl of Mar, Gilbert of Umfranille, Earl of Angus, James the Steward of Scotland, John Cumyn, William of Moray, Reginald le Chen, the father, Patrick of Berkeley, Knights.

13. Charter by King Alexander the Third confirming the donation which Malise, Earl of Strathern made to Patrick of Graham, Knight, of the lands of Fossehall in Strathern, to be held by the said Patrick of the said Earl in terms of the Earl's Charter to him, saving the King's service. Dated at Scone 13th November, the 37th year of the King's reign [1285]. Witnesses the same as in the immediately preceding Charter.

14. Charter by Alexander of Dunbon, Knight, to Sir Patrick of Graham, of three quarters of a carrucate of land of Akencloy Nether, which in Scotch is called Arachor, namely, those three quarters called Clouchbar, Baranechan, and Barnaferkylyn, to be held by the said Sir Patrick and his heirs in feu by rendering to the superiors the services used and wont, and to the granter one penny in name of feu farm. Not dated, but granted probably about the year 1285. The witnesses are, Sir Fergus of Ardrossan, Sir William Galbrath, Sir Robert of Kylkone, Sir Robert, Treasurer of Glasgow, Mr. Robert of Lunark, Fergus McKennedy, &c.

15. Charter by William Galbraith to Sir Patrick of Graham, Knight, and his heirs, remitting to him 24 merks payable annually from the lands of Kincade, and granting to him the mill of Kincade. Not dated, but granted probably about the year 1285. Witnesses, Hugh of Dalyel, Sheriff of Lanark, Arthur Galbraith, John le Blunte, &c.

16. Charter (in duplicate) by Thomas of Munimuske to Sir Patrick of Graham, of the lands of Cuyle in the Earldom of Strathern, to be held by the said Patrick and his heirs in feu by rendering forinsic service to the Earl of Strathern as much as pertains to the said lands. Not dated, but granted probably about the year 1285. The witnesses are, John Abbot of Cambuskeunet, Hugh Abbot of Inchaffray, Sir William of Moray, son of Sir Malcolm of Moray, Alan of Kynlue, Malcolm of Dromaie, Monanche Macalpin, &c.

17. Warrant by King Robert the Bruce to the Abbot of Arbroath, his Chancellor, for expeding a Charter under the Great Seal to David of Grame, elder, Knight, of the lands of old Munross in the shire of Forfar, to be held for the Scottish service pertaining to half a davach of land. Dated at Scone 5 March, 20th year of the King's reign [1325].

86. Whythall, 22nd May 1641. His Majesty intimates his intention to attend in his next session of Parliament, and to satisfy his people as to religion and liberties, and expects the concurrence of Montrose. Holograph, addressed "For Montrose."

87. Windsor, 27th January 1642. Acknowledging Montrose's sufferings for the King, and the generosity which has induced him to hazard so much for the King's service. Holograph.

88. York, 7th May 1642. His Majesty knows that he needs no arguments to induce Montrose to his service. Duty and loyalty are sufficient for a man of so much honor. Montrose is assured that the King would not wish him to share his hard fortune if he were not to be a plentiful partaker of his good fortune. Partly holograph.

89. Nottingham, 27th August [1642]. Assuring Montrose that "you are one whom I have found most faithful, and in whom I repose greatest trust."

This letter was written two days after the Royal Standard was raised at Nottingham.

4. Eight Letters from King Charles the First to James, Marquis of Montrose, 1645-1647.

90. Ragland, 9th September 1645. Expressing the King's esteem for the real, generous, and useful obligations put upon him by Montrose. The King will not so injure words as to put upon them what they are not capable of, and it is no small part of his misfortune that this is yet "all my soug to you." Holograph.

91. Newarke, 3rd November 1645. Expressing the King's affliction for his inability to send assistance to Montrose, and his kindness "for the eminent fidelity "and generosity you have showed in my service," and assuring him that his less prosperous fortune, so far from lessening the King's estimation of him, will rather cause his affection to "kythe the cleerlier" to him. Holograph.

92. Newcastle, 21st January 164$\frac{6}{7}$. The King congratulates Montrose on coming to the Low Countries, and hoping that he has arrived at Paris. Desires Montrose to dispose of himself as "my wife" (the Queen) shall advise, "knowing that she truly esteems your "worth, for she is mine, and I am your most assured, "real, faithfull, constant frend." Holograph.

93. Newcastle, 19th May 1646. The King desires Montrose to disband his forces and go into France. Holograph.

94. Newcastle, 15th Juno 1646. The King expresses his admiration of Montrose for laying down his arms at the royal command. Hopes that Montrose will return home with the greater glory; and in the meantime to have as honorable employments as the King can put upon him. Renewing former directions to lay down his arms. Holograph.

95. Newcastle, 16th July 1646. The King states that it is the most sensible part of his many misfortunes to see his friends in distress, and not be able to help them; adding, "of this kind you are the cheefe," and desiring Montrose to accept Middleton's conditions, otherwise "you must either conquer all Scotland or be inevitably "ruined." If Montrose takes another course than the King advises, he cannot expect his Majesty's approval "untill I shall be able (which God knowes how soone that "will be) to stand upon my owen feete." Holograph.

96. Newcastle, 21st August 1646. The King repeats his regrets that he can only return Montrose at present "verball repairment;" but assures him that the world shall yet see the real expression of the King's friendship for him. Holograph.

97. Newcastle, 19th June 1647. The King refers to his present condition as unsuitable for corresponding with Montrose, to whom he cannot write freely without a cypher. Desires Montrose to take directions from "my wife" (the Qneen), what he is to do, and to be confident that "no time, place, or condition shall make "me other than your most assured, reall, faithfull, "constant frend." "I thanke yon for the sword ye "sent me." Holograph.

5. Nine Letters from Queen Henrietta Maria to James, Marquis of Montrose. All these Letters are in French, 1643-1649.

98. York, 31st May [1643]. This letter has been much destroyed. Only several lines, not all connected, now remain, along with the signature and place and date. While the letter was entire, it was printed in the Appendix to a Translation of Dr. Wishart's commentary published in 1720; and from that work Mr. Mark Napier has printed the letter entire in his Memorials of Montrose, Vol. II., p. 77. Her Majesty urges Montrose to take immediate measures on behalf of the King.

99. Paris, 5th February [1647]. The Queen is glad to have this opportunity of writing to him until she could provide him with more ample despatches with regard to the proposition made to her by Lord Crawford on the part of Montrose and of several good servants of the King in the Highlands of Scotland, of which she approved extremely. This letter was only to say to him in general what he should be more particularly informed of by herself in the following week. Addressed "A mon cousin le Marquis de Montrose." Holograph.

100. Paris, 12th February [1647]. Had received his letters, one by the way of the Sound, and the other by Major Carr, and was extremely delighted to learn the state in which he was, the rebels having spread a report that he had been defeated. Wished she could send him as good news of England. Had commanded Jermin to write to him more fully, and also the bearer to tell him what she could not commit to writing. Concludes with assuring him that she had a deep sense of the faithful and great services which he had rendered to the King. Addressed "A mon cousin le Marquis de Montrosse." Holograph.

101. Duplicate of the preceding letter, written in a different hand, but the signature is holograph of the Queen. At the head of the letter is written in holograph "Duplicat de ma lettre par Maior Carr."

102. Paris, 15th March [1647]. As soon as she was apprised of his arrival in Holland, she was anxious to write to him, to assure him of her continued appreciation of the services which he had rendered to the King. She did not doubt the continuance of these services, according to his ability. His actions had afforded too manifest proofs of this to leave any room for doubt. She hoped he would believe that there was nothing within her power which she would not do to testify her gratitude. Addressed "A mon cousin le Marquis de "Montrosse." Holograph.

103. Paris, 10th March 1649. Having received his letter by Pooley, and seen by it the assurances of the continuance of the Marquess's affection for the service of the King, her son, as he had always shown for that of the late King, her husband, whose murder ought to arouse in all his servants the passion of seeking all means to avenge a death so abominable, she doubted not that he would be well pleased to find opportunities, and that for that effect he would do all that lay in his power, and conjured him to unite with all those of his nation who regarded that death with just indignation, and to forget all past differences. Addressed "A mon cousin le Marquis de Montrosse." Holograph.

This letter is sealed with black wax, and fine black silk, being written a few weeks after the execution of King Charles the First.

104. Paris, 22nd April 1649. Had received his letter. Had never doubted that he would always do what he could to promote the service of the King. What he had done in the past was a sufficient guarantee for the future. She wished that it were in her power to prove her gratitude, and would have him to believe that when opportunity offered the proof would be given rather by deeds than by words. Addressed "A mon cousin le "Marquess de Montrosse." Holograph.

105. Saint Germain, 22nd July 1649. Had received two of his letters at the same time, one by Lord Andover of an old date, the other by Ayton. In both she found proofs of the continuance of his affection for her; which she accepts with much satisfaction, having an esteem for him which she would always retain, whatever fortune might happen to her. Addressed "A mon cousin le "Marquis de Montrose." Holograph.

106. Paris, 1st December 1649. Had received his letter dated from Denmark. Was exceedingly well pleased to learn that he was in a condition to serve the King, her son. Would have him to believe that there was no person who approved more of the part he acted than herself, and who wished him more of good fortune and prosperity. Had too deep a sense of gratitude for the services which he had rendered to the late King, her husband, ever to be wanting in what she had said to him, which she conjured him to believe. Addressed "A mon cousin le Marquis de Montrosse." Holograph.

6. Ten Letters from Elizabeth, Queen of Bohemia, Sister of King Charles the First, to James Marquis of Montrose, 1649, 1650.

These letters form a very interesting collection.

Of the writer Mr. Napier says that she was the favourite sister of King Charles the First, the lively, witty, but unfortunate Queen of Bohemia; the sane whose amiable qualities and beauty procured for her the romantic title of Queen of Hearts.

Digitized by Google

As to the letters themselves, Mr. Napier explains that in a volume of "Literary Relics" published by George Monck Berkeley, Esq., in 1792, they were rudely printed, without any illustration.

Mr. Berkeley states in his preface that the letters were copied from the originals which were recently purchased from the widow of a respectable clergyman by the Marquis of Graham.

Thus it appears that these letters had been acquired by the father of the present Duke of Montrose, and it was thought that they would be found still carefully preserved among the Archives in the Charter Room at Buchanan. No such papers, however, were known to exist there, and after searches made at his request, it was reported to Mr. Napier that those particular documents no longer existed there.

One of the reports of searches thus referred to is dated 1st December 1849, and was made by a gentleman who was instructed by the late Very Reverend Principal Macfarlan of Glasgow, Vice-President of the Maitland Club. He reports, in regard to the letters of the Queen of Bohemia, that, after the most thorough search, he is convinced that they are not in the Charter Room at Buchanan.

In the year following this report, having occasion myself to examine the Muniments at Buchanan in reference to the Montrose Peerage Case, as already mentioned, the ten letters of the Queen of Bohemia were discovered by me, and communicated to Mr. Napier on the eve of his finishing the Memorials of Montrose for the Maitland Club. In an addition to his Preface he explains that after it had gone to Press, the distribution of the Volume was postponed by a circumstance which may be considered both fortunate and provoking. He then explains the discovery of the letters at Buchanan, where they had dropt out of sight after their acquisition by the family at a period comparatively recent.

The letters are all holograph of the Queen, whose hand is rather difficult to decypher; and in several instances the transcriber of them for Mr. Berkeley has been unable to read particular words, which are left blank in his print, and also in Mr. Napier's reprint of them before the discovery of the originals.

The Queen of Bohemia was the Princess Elizabeth, eldest daughter of King James the First of England. She married in 1613 Frederick Elector Palatine and King of Bohemia, and died at London in 1662. Her youngest daughter, the Princess Sophia, married Ernest Augustus Duke of Brunswick and Hanover, and was mother of King George the First.

107. The Hagh, 21st June [1649]. Had desired Sir Edward Herbert to let the Marquis know how by great chance she had found that the Prince of Orange would again extremely press the King to grant the Commissioners' desires, and so ruin him through the Marquis's sides. In a P.S. the Queen adds, "I give you manie "thanks for your picture. I have hung it in my "cabinet to fright away the bretheren."

108. The Hagh, 3d July [1649]. Hopes that the news she had sent by Broughton would help to persuade the King to make haste to go for Ireland, for one Inglesbie, a Captain of Cromwell's regiment, and his brother, told him that Archibald Cromwell had received news that his ships before Kinsale, to the number of nine, were taken. That Inglesbie further reports that they are all up in Scotland; that the English rebel Parliament can get no soldiers, but it is thought they will send their army to Scotland to help the brethren there. Adds, "I wish Jamie Grame amongst them with all his "followers."

109. From Rhene, $\frac{1}{11}$ August [1649]. The bearer had desired her to recommend him to the Marquis that he might be a gentleman of the company of the Marquis's guards. His name was Bushell, and he had served the King, her dear brother, as captain. His uncle had served her long as master of her horse, and his cousin german had been her page and was killed in these wars in which he had served with Rupert. She adds, in regard to the way that they pass their time where she is, that it is all spent in walking abroad, and shooting, which she has now "renewed" herself in.

110. Rene, $\frac{4}{14}$ of August [1649]. Prays God to keep the King in his constancy to the Marquis and his other true friends and servants. While the Marquis staid in that country it would be a great charity in him to let her know the news he received, for the place where she was at that time was very barron of all news. She adds that she has nothing to do but to walk and shoot, and that she has become a good archer, and can shoot with Lord Kinnoul, and begs the Marquis to come and help them to shoot. Addressed "For yourself."

111. Rhen, 2nd September, O.S. [1649]. Recommends to the favour of the Marquis a gentleman called Burton, who desired to attend him into Scotland, and on coming there to have some charge. He had money in his purse and desired nothing but employment, having served the King, her brother. There was no news, only the King was still at St. Germains. In a P.S. the Queen adds that as her letters may be taken, she will not subscribe her name in full, but only in cypher, E.

112. The Hagh, 2nd October [1649]. Was very glad to see by his letter of the $\frac{14}{4}$ of last month, that he had safely arrived at Hamburgh. Gives him many thanks for his favours to Major Brieton at her request. The business of Scotland was not so bad as had been reported, but too ill for the King's affairs. The affairs of England were kept so in a cloud, that she heard nothing of certainty, which she hoped was a good sign that the King's affairs there went better than his enemies would have it to be known. Lord Jermyn is coming, according to some, to take order about the jewels, but according to others, to meet with the Duke of Hamilton, Lauderdale, &c., to have new commissions sent to the King from godlie brethren "to cross wicked Jamie Graham's pro-"ceedings." "But this will lead to nothing, as the King is constant to his principles. The Duke of York is with him. They say Rupert is at sea."

113. The Hagh, $\frac{5}{13}$ October [1649]. The good Lord Brainford was come, and had left the King and the Duke of York very well at Jersey. He assured her that he was constant to his principles. Good old Brainford is very constant to you. Young Boswell had written to Sir William Boswell from Edinburgh saying that those who governed there made show of wishing to have their King; but yet he saw no disposition in them to lessen their conditions to him.

114. The Hagh, $\frac{19}{29}$ November [1649]. Had received yesterday a letter from Paris that Rupert was gone out of Kinsale, and had passed by St. Malo, three weeks ago, with six good ships. Without question the King would go with Rupert's ships. But whither, God knows, for I cannot assure you, since many letters say all goes ill in Ireland. Cromwell's money prevails much there, for Wexford was betrayed to him.

115. The Hagh, 9th December [1649]. Had received the Marquis's of the fourth of November, this last week, and the next day, by Sir William Fleming, one from the King of the same date from Jersey; who assured her he was not changed in his affections nor designs which he would show to the world very suddenly. "Robert "Dialda" (her son Prince Rupert) is about "Sillie" with seven good ships. She doubted not but the Marquis had seen by that time the proclamation against Morton and Kinnoull, and all the adherents of "that detestable "bloodie murtherer and excommunicated traitour, "James Gream." The Turks never called the Christians so. In a P.S. the Queen adds, "Ouldo Brainford "says he is now too ouldo to be a knave, having been "honest ever."

116. The Hagh, 7th January [1650]. Had heard that Count Henry of Nassau had come hither from Denmark, and did much lessen the Marquis's proceedings there, saying that the Marquis had no men nor ships nor free quarters in Denmark nor Holstein, nor at Hamburgh any, but only some few officers. She hoped he did it out of policy, to do the Marquis's business, that the Scots might be surprised by him. Concludes by praying God to send him safety in Scotland.

7. Nine Letters from King Charles the Second, one as Prince of Wales, of which seven are to James, the first Marquis of Montrose, and two to his son, the second Marquis, 1649–1653.

117. From Charles, Prince of Wales. Hague, 20th January [1649]. Thanks him for the continuance of his affection; had appointed the Chancellor of the Exchequer [Hyde] to meet him in any place he should appoint. There must be great secrecy in this business. Addressed "For my Lord Marquis of Montrose." Holograph. Small seal in wax, with the feather of the Prince of Wales.

113. From King Charles the Second. Breda, 22nd June 1649. The necessity of the King's affairs has obliged him to renew the former trusts and Commissions concerning the Kingdom of Scotland, and his Majesty will not determine anything without having the Marquis's advice thereupon. Address wanting. Holograph.

119. No date, circa January 1650. The King sends Montrose a copy of an address which had been lately made to His Majesty from Scotland desiring that His Majesty would acknowledge their Parliament, and particularly the two last sessions of it, and proposing a full agreement. Sends a copy of His Majesty's answer thereto, appointing a speedy time and place for their Commissioners to attend His Majesty. The Marquis was not to apprehend that His Majesty intended by anything contained in these letters, or by the treaty, His Majesty expected to give the least impediment to Montrose's proceedings, which the King thinks have moved the address to him, and the vigorous conduct of the Marquis will be a good means of insuring moderation. Addressed "To our right trusty and right entirely "beloved cousin James, Marquis of Montrose." Superscribed by the King. Copies of the address of the Parliament and of the King's answer, are annexed to the letter. The former is signed in name and by command of the Parliament of Scotland, by "Londonn, "cancellarius," and is dated Edinburgh, 7th August 1649. The King's answer is dated Jersey, $\frac{23}{13}$ January 1650 1649.

120. St. Germain, 5th September 1649. The King sends Montrose a relation of Sir John Cochrane's proceedings with the town of Humborongh. Authorises the Marquis to employ himself in such ways as he should think fit to compose the differences between His Majesty and that town. The Marquis was to represent to them, but without any threats, that if they received as they had resolved to do, a public minister from the "bloody "rebels in England," His Majesty would be at liberty to take such resolution as should be fit for his honour and interest. Montrose is desired to press the senate for the loan of a considerable sum. Subscribed by the King.

121. St. Germain, 19th September 1649. The King entreats Montrose to go on vigorously in the prosecution of those trusts committed to him by His Majesty, and not to be startled with any reports he may have heard, as if His Majesty were otherwise inclined to the Presbyterians than when His Majesty left him. Address "For "the Marquis of Montrose."

122. Jersey, 12th January 1649 [1650]. His Majesty considering that since the late rebellion many of the Companions of the Order of Saint George, called the Garter, are dead, and that others have deserted the King, and are no more worthy to be esteemed companions of so noble an order, and finding it necessary to elect others in their places, and duly weighing the eminence of the Marquis's birth and family, and above all the great and most extraordinary set which was performed by him as Lieutenant and Lieutenant General of His Majesty's Kingdom of Scotland, in the service of King Charles the First, and the greatness of his present undertakings for His Majesty, elected him to be fellow and companion of the most noble order of St. George called the Garter, and sends him the George and riband, part of the ensigns thereof, by Henry May, Esq. (in regard Sir Edward Walker, Knight, Garter, Principal King of Arms, the proper officer, is otherwise employed in the service of the King). The King thereby authorised Montrose to wear the George and riband, and because it was not then possible to have all other additions and ceremonies incident to the same fully perfected, the King authorised Montrose to use and wear the garter or riband on the left leg, the glory or star of silver with Saint George's cross embroidered within a garter on his cloak and upper garments, and also the great collar of the order, on such days as are accustomed; to use the garter about his arms, in as ample a manner as if he had been installed in the Castle of Windsor, where, when it shall please God to restore the King to the possession thereof, Montrose shall be formally invested, and receive the habit and all other the ornaments of the order.

The George and riband thus sent to Montrose were in his possession in his last battle. When the battle was lost, he was obliged to drop the insignia of the garter in the attempt to save his life. The decoration was found by his enemies hidden under a tree. It was afterwards restored to the family, and is still in the possession of his descendant and representative the present Duke. Part of the blue riband is put up separately, and appears to have been detached at an earlier period, and preserved along with the King's nomination of Montrose as a Knight of the Garter. Superscribed by the King. Addressed "To our "right truly and entirely beloved cosen, James Marquis "of Montrose."

123. Jersey. $\frac{22}{12}$ January 1649 [50]. The King assures Montrose that he will never fail in the effects of that friendship which he had promised to him, and conjures him not to take alarm at any reports or messages from others, but to depend upon His Majesty's kindness, and to proceed in his business with his usual courage and alacrity.

124. King Charles II. to James, second Marquis of Montrose, 8th June 1650. The King alludes to the death of his father, the first Marquis, and assures the young Marquis that he should have the same care for him as if his father were still living and as able to serve him as ever. Addressed "For the Marques of Montrose." Holograph.

125. Chantilly, November 12th, 1653. The King reminds him of what his father would have done for His Majesty had he been living. Cannot doubt of the affection of the young Marquis to him, and is sure he need not call upon him to engage with those who were now in arms for His Majesty. Addressed "For the Marquis of "Montrose." Holograph.

8. Six Commissions by King Charles the First to James, Marquis of Montrose, original Royal Warrant for his creation as Marquis, and a Royal Proclamation calling a Parliament, 1643-1645.

126. Dated at Oxford, 1st February 1643, appointing James, Earl of Montrose to be Lieutenant General under His Majesty's nephew, Prince Maurice, His Majesty's Lieutenant Governor and Captain General of all His Majesty's forces of horse, foot, dragoons, archers, etc. in the Kingdom of Scotland. Superscribed by His Majesty.

127. Dated at Oxford, 13th February 1643, appointing "James Marquess of Montrose" to be His Majesty's Lieutenant Governor of His Majesty's kingdom of Scotland, and Captain General of and over all His Majesty's forces levied in the kingdom of Scotland, or that shall be brought out of the kingdom of England or any other of His Majesty's dominions. Superscribed by the King.

In this commission Montrose is styled Marquis, although he was not formally created into that dignity until the 6th of May 1644, which is the date of the warrant by King Charles the First for the patent.

128. Dated at Oxford, 4th May 1645, to be His Majesty's Lieutenant Governor, and Captain General of all the forces within the kingdom of Scotland. The docquet subjoined by Sir Robert Spottiswoode as Secretary of State for Scotland, states that this commission authorises Montrose "by force of arms to repress and subdue the "rebelles of that nation, both at home and in the part "of England and elsewhere, where they are in armes "against your Majestie, with power likewayes to him "to conferre the honour of knighthood upon well deserv- "ing persons."

"Ro. Spottiswoode."

129. Dated at Hereford, 25th June 1645, appointing James Marquis of Montrose, to be Lieutenant Governor and General of all His Majesty's forces in Scotland.

130. Proclamation by King Charles the First for calling a Parliament. Neither the time nor the place of meeting is given. Superscribed by the King. Undated. The proclamation bears to be "given under our royal hand and signet at" (blank). The docquet by Sir Robert Spottiswoode is also blank as to the time and place of meeting of the Parliament.

131. Commission by King Charles the First to James, Marquis of Montrose, to be Commissioner in the next Parliament; giving him power to appoint a Vice Chancellor, in case of the Chancellor's absence, and other officers during the sitting of the Parliament, in case they that are now in place do absent themselves. This commission, like the proclamation, is blank as to the time of meeting, and also in the date. It is countersigned by Sir Robert Spottiswoode.

132. Original warrant, under the sign manual of King Charles the First, countersigned by Sir Robert Spottiswoode, at Oxford, 6th May 1644, for a patent under the great seal, creating James, Earl of Montrose, a Marquess of Scotland to be called Marquess of Montrose. The name of the new dignity had been at first left blank, and had been subsequently inserted in the warrant. This warrant narrates the ancient standing and reputation of the house of Montrose, derived for many ages from father to son, by an uninterrupted course of loyalty towards

His Majesty's royal predecessors, and withal taking special notice of the eminent zeal and affection to the royal service of James, now Earl of Montruse, Lieutenant General of all his Majesty's forces in Scotland, witnessed by many singular acts of fidelity these years past, during which his Majesty's royal power and right have been so much drawn in question; for the maintenance whereof, and nothing else, he did suffer both in his person and estate; but most of all expressed of late in his voluntary undertaking at the eminent danger of his life, estate, and posterity, the defence of His Majesty's royal person, crown, and dignity against a concurrent and prevalent faction of both kingdoms labouring to overthrow the same: By which his exceeding great testimony of duty towards His Majesty, and love withal to his native country, he had vindicated it from the aspersion of disloyalty which otherwise it might have lyen under, if he, and others by his example, had not hazarded to put themselves in the gap against this unnatural rebellion.

The patent thus authorised never passed the great seal. The title, however, was always accorded to the grantee during the six years which he survived the date of the warrant. After his death the title of Marquis descended to his son, and was enjoyed by him for ten years, when upon the restoration of King Charles the Second, a patent of the title was granted which bears date 12th October 1660.

9. Four Commissions from King Charles the Second to James, Marquis of Montrose, 1649.

133. Dated at the Hague, 4th March 1649. Appointing James Marquis of Montrose, to be His Majesty's Lieutenant Governor and Captain General of all His Majesty's forces raised in Scotland, and of and over all others brought thither out of the kingdom of England and Ireland, etc., and with power of conferring the title, degree, and honour of knighthood upon such persons, either natives or others, as he thinks proper. Superscribed by the King.

134. Dated at the Hague, 23rd April 1649, investing James Marquis of Montrose, with full power and authority to negotiate in His Majesty's name with the Emperor of the Romans and with all other Kings, Princes, Generals, Free States, and Commanders of armies. Subscribed by the King.

135. Dated at the Hague, 29th May 1649. Granting to James, Marquis of Montrose, full power to hold and exercise, during his Majesty's pleasure, the place, power, and jurisdiction of Admiral of the kingdom of Scotland. Superscribed by the King.

136. Dated at Brussells, 6th July 1649. Granting to James Marquis of Montrose, full power and authority of negotiating in the King's name with the Emperor, and with other Kings, Princes, etc. Subscribed by the King.

10. Three Letters from James Duke of York, to James first Marquis of Montrose, 1648–1650.

137. Hague, September 11th, 1648. Thanking the Marquis for his friendship and service, which he values very much. Extremely glad to hear his merits are so well understood abroad as to have procured him such honours from the Emperor, now that there is no possibility of rewarding them at home. Whenever there shall be, Montrose must not doubt of receiving it from the King. The letter concludes, "I rest your very affectionate "friend." "Yorke." Holograph. Envelope wanting, addressed at the commencement "My Lord Marquis of "Montrose."

138. St. Germains, July 23, 1649. Again thanking the Marquis for his kind expressions towards the Duke in a letter from Brussels, and glad that the King his brother has found an occasion of employing the Marquis, being confident that he has a heart full of zeal and affection to his service, &c. The letter concludes, "Your very "affectionate friend."

"JAMES."

[P.S.] "My Lord, you must be kind to Harry May "for my sake." Holograph.

It was Harry May who brought the garter from King Charles the Second then at Jersey, to the Marquis of Montrose, in January 1649-50.

139. Jersey, January $\frac{16}{26}$. 1650. Letter with Harry May, who brought the garter from the King to Montrose, and will give him a very good account of all the news and business of the King. The letter concludes, "I "ever am your Lordship's most affectionat friend,"

"JAMES."

Holograph.

11. Six Letters from Prince Rupert to James Marquis of Montrose, 1648–9.

140. Hague, 20th September [1648]. The Prince assures Montrose that he had found a civility he was so glad of that he would, by the best service in his power, gain the continuance of it. The noble kindness he saw his Lordship still preserved for the King, made him much to covet that he and his Lordship might be happy to serve him together. Addressed "For the Earl of Mont- "rose. Those."

The Prince had forgotten that Montrose was then a Marquis. The letters of the Prince are all holograph, and are distinguished by a very particular dash. His signatures are all large and very flourishing.

141. Hague, 13th October [1648]. Had received a second testimony of his Lordship's kindness to him, which was most welcome. Addressed "For my Lord Marquis of "Montrose."

142. From aboard the Admiral, 17th November 1648. Was sorry that his present employment (as managing the fleet) would not give him leave to stir from it, else he should have been extremely willing to have met with his Lordship somewhere and conferred with him about his Majesty's affairs. The bearer could more fully tell his Lordship how ready the Prince would be to join with him in anything which might advance that service in which his Lordship showed so much reality and forwardnesse. Address wanting.

143. Sunday night, 6th December [1648]. Had received his Lordship's of the 3rd December. Should be glad to undertake any service with him which he should be pleased to propose. For this reason, and having both the same ends, the King's service, he must wish infinitely to see and confer with his Lordship about it. Complains of "this heavy tie" upon him, which was the reorganising of his mutinous fleet, otherwise he might have come to his Lordship. But he adds, "whilst I am severing "the goates from the sheepe, I dare not absent myself "without hazard." Addressed "For the Lord Marquis of Montrosse."

144. Wednesday night [December 1648]. The Prince would, with all possible care, contribute to that means which might with most convenience bring him the good fortune of conferring with his Lordship, retaining a very great esteem of the favour his Lordship had exprest towards him, and should not by any want of care fail to prevent my ill use that might be made of the knowledge of it by such as were ready for such offices, and he suspected, as his Lordship did, there were some such to be taken heed of. Address wanting.

145. Kingsale [Ireland], 1st April 1649. Had received three letters from his Lordship in one day, among which there was one sent him by Major General Moura, of base business though he knew not yet, whenever the General should please to let him know the assistance he might give it should be sent forward as much as it might. Had found on all occasions that his Lordship's kindness to him was the same he professed, and was very sorry that as yet there was no opportunity for him to give a real testimony of his, which he intended upon all occasions to do. Address wanting.

12. Two Letters from William, Prince of Orange, husband of the Princess Mary, eldest daughter of King Charles the First, to James, Marquis of Montrose, 1648.

146. The Hague, 17th February 1648. The Prince had received the last letter of the Marquis, by which it had pleased the Marquis to do him the honour of asking his advice whether he might not engage in the service of France. It seemed to him that, as the affairs of the King of England were in the meantime in so bad posture that the Marquis was not in a condition to be able to serve him, he might serve in France until opportunities presented themselves of his being able to render service to the King and his country.

147. The Hague, 8th October 1648. The Prince would have him to assure himself that he had been always glad to testify to him the esteem which he had for his person, and thanked him for the advice which he had given him.

13. Depositions of Witnesses as to the Military Expeditions of James, Earl of Montrose, in the North of England, and at the Battle of Tippermuir in Perthshire, &c., 1644, 1645.

148. Deposition of Captain John McCulloch before the committee of the Estates of Parliament on 8th June 1644, ratifying his former deposition on the 28th of May last, and declaring that besides the persons mentioned in his former deposition whom he saw at the Castle of Morpeth with the Earl of Montrose and his complices, he also saw there John Maxwell of Logan, and Lieutenant Brown of the House of Carsluth in Galloway. Also annexed thereto, two depositions of Major John Erskine, on 10th June 1644, who deponed that he saw the Earl of Carnwath at the skirmish of Hiltoun, beside Sunderland, in the month of March last, both upon the Sunday and Monday; and that the Earl of Moutrose was called by all the officers and all that followed him, Lord Lieutenant General of the northern expedition, and that he behaved himself in that quality; Major Erskine also deponed that one Mistres Persone, who was a daughter of the Earl of Carnwath, had charge of a troup and had a commission from the Earl of Newcastle for levying that troup.

149. Copy of the preceding depositions.

150. Depositions of Major James Leslie that when Montrose invaded the kingdom at Dumfries, he came with troops of horse and displayed cornets and trumpets; that he brought with him some companies of Scots of the English nation with displayed colours; that the Earls Crawford and Nithsdale, the Lords Aboyne and Ogilvy came into Scotland from England in arms with him; and that the Lord Herries joined with him betwixt the borderside and Dumfries; Major Leslie also mentions that Mrs. Peirson always rode at the head of a troop. Edinburgh, 27th and 31st May, and 17th June 1644.

151. Copy of the preceding depositions of Major Leslie.

152. Depositions of Major James Leslie, and of Thomas Lord Kirkcudbright, with regard to the particular time of the fight at Bowdoun hill [or Hilton, on the north side of the river Weir, two miles and a half from Sunderland], the former deponing that he knew not certainly the precise day of the fight, and the latter that it took place on the 24th and 25th days of March last.—22nd July 1644.

153. Depositions of Colonel James Hay, deponing that when Montrose was with the Irish rebels, upon the Monday after the taking of the town of St. Johnstoun, the deponent came to that town with Montrose, and was coming and going to him and from him several times before he came off; and deponing as to numerous persons, his adherents, whom he saw with him at the different places specified. 21st and 23rd January 1645.

154. Depositions of Mr. Patrick Maxwell, sheriff clerk of Perth, anent those whom he saw with the Earl of Montrose and in company with the Irish rebels, and anent the Earl's carriage with the Irish rebels; that on the day of fight at Tibbermure he went out by the fields on foot to see the event of the conflict, but being beside the baggage of the Estates' forces he had not a full view of the Irish rebels; that on the day after, about eleven o'clock, he saw the Earl of Montrose in the town of Perth, and that there came in with him about 300 men; that the Earl of Montrose behaved himself while he was in the town as Lieutenant General of the army. He depones also as to several persons whom he saw with Montrose. 27th July 1645.

155. Depositions of Sir John Graham of Braco, anent those whom he saw with the Earl of Montrose and in company with the Irish rebels; deponing that he came to St. Johnstoun upon Tuesday after the conflict at Tibbermure with the Earl of Montrose's two sons, and that upon the Thursday thereafter he went out of St. Johnstone with the Earl's two sons, and followed the Earl, who had left St. Johnstone upon the Wednesday before, and came to the Earl before the Earl and the Irish rebels came to Dundee Law, and that the Earl of Montrose, all the time the deponent was with him, behaved himself as Chief Commander of the Irish rebels, and that he saw the persons named in the rebels' army. 27th January 1645.

156. Depositions of John Grahame of Orchill, anent those whom he saw with the Earl of Montrose and the Irish rebels, and anent the said Earl's carriage with the rebels. His depositions are similar to those of the preceding witness. 28th January 1645.

157. Depositions of Mr. Gilbert Stewart, son to the Commissary of Dunkeld, anent those whom he saw with the Earl of Montrose in the rebels' army the several times he was with the Earl before he came off from him, and anent the said Earl's carriage in the said army, deponing that he went to the Earl of Montrose upon the Tuesday after the fight at Tibbermure and remained with him in his army till he came off by the Marquis of Argyll's warrant, and that he saw in the rebels' army the numerous persons named in the depositions. 28th January 1645.

158. Depositions of David Master of Madertie, anent those whom he saw with the Earl of Montrose and in company with the Irish rebels, and anent the Earl of Montrose's carriage, and those who were with him or his accomplices, deponing that upon the Wednesday and Thursday before the conflict at Perth he was with Sir John Drummond at the bridge of Halymylne, and upon the Saturday thereafter was sent by Sir John Drummond to get orders from the Lord Drummond for his marching, the said Sir John and the deponent being there in arms for the country; that soon after he had returned to Sir John Drummond, not having found Lord Drummond, Sir John and his men were invironed by about three or four hundred men whom Montrose had sent before that time to the hill of Buchantie, beside the bridge of Hallie-mylne, and that he saw the persons named with Montrose in the rebels' army. 30th January 1645.

159. Depositions by Mr. William Forret [some time tutor to Montrose], anent those whom he saw with the Earl of Montrose, &c.: that the first time he came to the Earl who was in company with the rebels within the town of Perth, was upon the Monday at night before the fight at Tibbermuir, having been sent for there by the Earl, and that he stayed in the town of Perth with the Earl till the latter departed out of the town, that he went along with him to Aberdeen, and came up from thence through the Highlands by Badenoch and Athole, that the Earl's commission as Lieutenant General of the kingdom of Scotland for his Majesty was published at Aberdeen, and that the deponent heard it published, and that he saw the persons named with the Earl at the different places specified. 30th January 1645.

160. Depositions of Robert Arnot of Benchellis, provost of Perth, anent the Earl of Montrose's carriage and the carriage of those whom he saw with the Earl and the Irish rebels, that after the Earl of Montrose had summoned the town of Perth to surrender upon the Sunday, the day of the fight at Tibbermure, after the fight, in the evening, the Earl and six hundred of his soldiers or thereby entered the town that night and remained in it three or four days, that the Earl of Montrose at his entry into the town took the keys of the port from the magistrates, at which port he entered, viz. the Highgate Port. 31st January 1645.

161. Depositions of Patrick Hay of Pitfour, as to what time he went to the Earl of Montrose and what was the carriage of certain persons therein specified, and at what time he came off, that he went into the town of Perth upon the Tuesday after the conflict at Tibbermure to Montrose and came off with Lord Kinnoul. 10th February 1645.

162. Depositions of John Moresone in Dunkeld, to the effect that being an indweller in Dunkeld, he saw the persons after mentioned in battle array, and in ranks marching out of the town of Dunkeld in the rebels' army two days or thereby, before the burning of Ardblair, viz. Alexander Reid in Logyraitt, John Robertstone of Tennandrie, and many others named. 22nd February 1645.

14. Process and Decreet of Forfeiture against Colonel Nathaniel Gordon, an active adherent of Montrose, 1645.

Colonel Gordon joined Montrose in his principal battles, and bore therein a distinguished part. He was taken prisoner after the battle of Philiphaugh. The following papers show the steps of procedure in his trial. Along with Sir Robert Spottiswoode, and others, Colonel Gordon was beheaded at St. Andrews on the 20th of January 1646.

163. "Dittay" against Nathaniel Gordou, son to the late John Gordon of Ardlogy, before the Committee of Estates of Parliament, for having taken upon hand to rise in arms and to concur with, fortify, assist, and supply James Graham, the avowed enemy of this kingdom, leader of that rebellious army which lately this year bygone has infested this kingdom and troubled the peace thereof, and for having been in arms with the said declared traitor James Graham and his rebellious army, during all the time of their raging up and down this kingdom, and at all the fields and conflicts fought therein heretofore betwixt the troops of the Estates of this kingdom and the said rebellious army, at the least at one or other of them, and in special at the conflict of Kilsyth which was upon the 15th of August 1645, since which time he had continued in arms with the said James Graham and his rebellious army, and was actually with him thereafter in his progress through the country in subduing the same. To the "dittay" is annexed an Act of the Committee of Estates dated Glasgow 30th October 1645, ordaining it to be transmitted to the above Nathaniel Gordon, and delivered to him where he is presently at the Castle of Edinburgh, and ordaining him to be ready to answer to it at St. Andrews upon the 13th of November next, 1645.

On the back of this dittay there are many references, probably made by Nathaniel Gordon, to texts in the Old and New Testaments.

164. Answer for Nathaniel Gordon, wherein, since his case was coincident with that of other prisoners who were taken upon quarter in the fields, he claimed the benefit of the same, according to the laws of war and of nations, and adhered to the supplication given in for James Ogilvy, William Murray, and other prisoners. Produced by Gordon himself 9th December 1645.

165. Replies to the defences given in by Nathaniel Gordon against his "dittay," with an Act of the Prolocutors of the Estates, dated 22nd December 1645, ordaining him to give in his duply to this against Thursday next.

166. Deposition by Nathaniel Gordon, in which, being interrogated if he was with James Graham's army at the battle of Aberdeen, and to whom he gave quarter there, he declared that he was at that battle with James Graham's army, and gave quarter to Captain Nathaniel Moncreiff, Ensign Brown, and one Lieutenant Dunbar; declared that he was with the said James Graham's army at the battles of Aulderne, Alford, and Kilsyth, at all which he gave quarter to the persons named, and that he was also at the battle of Philiphaugh. St. Andrews, 29th December 1645.

167. Defences given in by Nathaniel Gordon 13th December 1645. Read and remitted to the several bodies 5th January 1646.

168. Duply for Nathaniel Gordon, in which he only adheres to the duplies given in by Sir Robert Spottiswoode in defence of quarter, and condescends on the names of those who took him. 29th December 1645. Read and remitted to the several bodies, 5th January 1646.

169. Answer to the reply made in the defence given in by Nathaniel Gordon against his dittay, in which, while referring to his former defence that being a prisoner upon quarter he was not bound to answer any dittay, and having been referred to the replies given in to Sir Robert Spottiswoode anent quarter, he adheres to Sir Robert's defences. With deliverance annexed, dated 10th January 1646, by the Estates of Parliament repelling the defences.

170. Report from the Commissioners of Parliament appointed for the process against Nathaniel Gordon to the Parliament, finding the "dittay" founded upon an Act of Parliament made in June 1644, anent the taking up of arms against the kingdom relevant to infer the conclusion contained in the said Act, repelling the defence founded upon quarter, and finding that part of the dittay bearing that said Nathaniel Gordon had taken up arms against the kingdom at the battles of Aberdeen, Aulderne, Alford, Kilsyth, and Philiphaugh, sufficiently proven to infer the punishment of treason. Read in audience of Parliament 3rd January 1646, and remitted to the several bodies. Annexed is an Act of Parliament dated 16th January same year, approving of the foresaid report with the interlocutor of Parliament on the 10th instant repelling the defences, reply, and duply, founded upon quarter, finding and declaring that the said Nathaniel Gordon had incurred the pain of forfeiture of his life, lands, and goods; declaring him a traitor to the Estates of the kingdom, and ordaining him to be executed to death by striking his head from his shoulders at the market cross of St. Andrews, upon Tuesday next, being the twentieth day of this instant. Signed by the Earl of Crawford and Lindsay as President.

15. Petitions of the General Assembly and Synods of the Church of Scotland to the Parliament, against the adherents of Montrose who were prisoners at St. Andrews, 1645.

171. Petition of the Synod of Merse and Teviotdale, convened at Jedburgh 24th October 1645, to the Parliament, wherein they express their earnest desire to strengthen the hands of the Parliament in purging the land from bloodguiltiness; reminding them that the desires of justice against delinquents were not the scattered and inconsiderate wishes of one or two blinded with prejudice or transported with passion, but the common and deliberate motions of the assemblies of the Lord's Servants after they had supplicated Himself for direction. Signed by Mr. James Guthrie, moderator, at the command of the Synod. Read in audience of the Parliament, 5th December 1645.

Mr. James Guthrie was minister of Stirling. At the Restoration he was executed on charges of rebellion.

172. Remonstrance of the commission of the General Assembly to the Parliament, reminding them how often the Commission had expressed their earnest desires to them for justice to be executed against those from whose treacherous designs and bloody practices had issued that flood of calamities which had overflowed the face of the land, threatening all the inhabitants thereof with ruin, and swallowing many thousands in destruction; and how displeasing unto the Supreme Judge of the world, how dangerous unto themselves, how grievous unto the hearts of the Lord's people, and how advantageous unto the enemy their former delays had been. Without date. Read in audience of the Parliament, 5th December 1645.

173. Petition of the Provincial Assembly of Fife, convened at Kirkaldy in October 1645, to the Parliament, humbly and earnestly supplicating that, as they had heard the Parliament's zealous purpose of executing justice upon those bloody men whom God had put in their hands, so just and laudable a resolution might speedily be put in execution. Read in audience of the Parliament, 5th December 1645.

174. Petition of the Synod of Galloway to the Parliament, craving most earnestly "that which your late "oath of covenant and Parliament, your place and the "bleeding condition of your native country do require, "that the sword of justice may be impartially drawn "against those persons now in bonds who have lifted up "their hands against the Lord, the sworn covenant, and "this afflicted Kirk." Undated. Read in audience of the Parliament 5th December 1645.

175. Answer of the Estates of Parliament to the remonstrance of the Commission of the General Assembly certifying them of the Estates' faithful and best endeavours for executing justice upon delinquents impartially and speedily. Read in audience of Parliament and remitted to the several bodies 26th December 1645; and read in audience of the Parliament, and approven, 2nd January 1646.

16. Commissions from Counties, Correspondence and Miscellaneous Papers of the first Marquis of Montrose.

176. Discharge by the Moderator and Masters of the College of Glasgow for four hundred merks given by the Earl of Montrose for the help of the fabric and library of the College. 10th November 1634. Signed by John Strang, principal, and five professors.

177. Commission from noblemen, gentlemen, burgesses, and others, in the shire of Perth, appointing James Earl of Montrose to be colonel in the shire, in the war required for the maintenance of the purity of religion, and of the laws and liberties of the kingdom, which the Earl was willing to accept. Perth, 2nd May 1639. This commission is signed by the Earls of Atholl and Kingborn, Lord Stormont, David Master of Madertie, and many of the landed gentry of Perthshire.

178. A similar commission to James Earl of Montrose to be colonel of the forces in the shire of Forfar, which also the Earl was willing to accept, is dated at Forfar 7th May 1639.

This commission is signed by the Earl of Kinghorn, Lords Carnegie, Coupar, Lyone, and many of the landed gentry of Forfarshire.

179. Resolution of the Committee of Estates finding that they were necessitated to go into England with the present army, horse and foot, in a defensive war, and ordaining an act to be passed hereupon for a warrant to the General, his excellence, and other general officers, commanders, soldiers and others anent the premises. At Dune 3rd, and at Edinburgh 6th August 1640.

This resolution is subscribed by the Earls of Rothes, Montrose, Loudon, Wigton, Dunfermline, Lords Balmerino, Lindsay, Burghly, Napier, Loüre, General Alexander Leslie, afterwards Earl of Leven, and many others. Holograph signatures of members of the Committee of Estates.

180. Mutual bond of friendship and assistance between William Earl Marischall and James Earl of Montrose; Dunnottar, 6th December 1640.

The bond is holograph of the Earl Marischall, and is subscribed by both Earls.

181. Notes of the proceedings of the Estates of Parliament 6th and 7th October, and 4th and 5th November 1641.

182. Order by James Earl of Montrose, ordaining all true subjects that were able for His Majesty's service, between sixty and sixteen, to repair to his army with their best arms, conform to the commission given by his Majesty to raise his forces within the kingdom of Scotland, 9th September 1644. Subscribed by Montrose.

183. Copy of the bond subscribed by the Earls of Montrose, Marischall, Mar, Wigton, and others produced before the Committee of Estates at Edinburgh, 21st January 1645, the principal whereof was produced the next day and ordained to be burned, and copy deposition of Mr. Robert Murray, minister at Methven before the Committee of Estates anent the Earl of Montrose, which was devised by him after the destroying of the foresaid bond.

184. A bond of union amongst all His Majesty's faithful and loyal subjects, as also of mutual assistance and defence. 30th January 1645.

This bond is subscribed at Killiwheimen, now Fort Augustus, soon after the battle of Inverlochy. The first signature is that of Montrose, and the second that of the Earl of Seaforth. The third signature is that of Lord Graham, eldest son of the Marquis, then a youth of fifteen years of age, who accompanied his father in this winter campaign, during which he became suddenly indisposed at the Bog, now Gordon Castle, where he died after a few days' illness. He was buried in the parish church of Bellie. His untimely death was a source of great grief to his father.

185. Letter by the Earls of Loudon, Lauderdale, and others to the Marquis of Argyll, the Lord Balmerino, and Lord Warriston, informing them that on that day the ordinance for the security of those who should advance the 200,000l. had passed both houses. 14th November 1646. Indorsed "25th November 1646. Read in audience of Parliament."

186. Letter by the same to the same, informing them that they were expecting His Majesty's answer to the propositions of peace, but were sorry to hear that he did still stick so much upon the matters of religion. Worcester House 17th November 1646. Indorsed "25th November 1646. Read in audience of Parliament."

187. Letter by the Earls of Loudoun, Lauderdale, and others to the lords and the commissioners of shires and burghs assembled in Parliament, informing them that they had so far proceeded in the treaty for payment of the money, reddition of the garrisons, and return of the army, as that all conditions were very nearly agreed upon, and ready to be drawn up in articles. Worcester House, 15th December 1646. Indorsed "23rd December 1646. Read in audience of the Parliament and remitted to the severall bodies."

188. A pass by James, Marquis of Montrose, Lieutenant General and Governour of Scotland, in favour of Patrick Guthrie, who in this singular war had served the Marquis and the King with fidelity, and had strenuously performed all things which were required of him, but was about to travel in foreign parts. Addressed to all whose concern it was to see these presents, especially to emperors, kings, generals of armies, &c. Montrose, 27th September 1646.

189. Letter by the Earl of Loudoun, chancellor, dated 15th September 1648, for the right honorable the lards of Wauchtoun and Ormistoun to be communicated by them to the committee and gentlemen of the sheriffdom of East Lothian, for raising four hundred horse and three hundred foot, for preventing the intestine combustion, and preserving the union of the kingdoms of Scotland and England, threatened from the remainder of the army, of the late unhappy engagement, now returned.

190. Montrose's key to ciphers, 1648. Some of the assumed names in place of the real names are rather amusing. Montrose himself is "Venture faire." Hamilton is "Captain Luckiesse." Lanerick, "Peter a Packs " (Judge)." Argyle, "Ruling Elder and Merchant of " Middlebargh." Tullender, "Almanack." Lindsey, "Judas." Assembly, "Good wife that wears the "breeches." Synod, "Apes or Munkies." Roxbrough, "Fox."

191. Letter from Colonel Sir John Cochrane (brother of William, first Earl of Dundonald) [address wanting], probably to Montrose, from the person addressed being styled your Excellency in the letter, dated Dantzick, 3d December 1649, New Style, informing him that he had made his propositions to the Duke of Courland, whom he found very constant in his affection, but most miserably covetous, so that he got an absolute denial to his first propositions, yet he earnestly urged for a better answer; got the Duchess and most of the Duke's Council upon his side, and partly by threats, and partly by fair words, he wrested out of him a more favourable answer, to wit, six war ships, one of six-and-thirty guns, another of two-and-thirty, one of four-and-twenty, one of twenty, and two of fourteen guns, with three months' provision for every one of them.

192. Declaration of his Excellency James, Marquis of Montrose, to encourage all who are to engage in this present service of His Majesty against a horrid and infamous faction of rebels within the kingdom of Scotland. 1649. Printed duodecimo, 19 pp., with title-page.

193. A pass, superscribed by Queen Henrietta Maria, in favour of le Sieur Guthrie, a Scotch gentleman, who had long served the late King, her very honoured husband, in his armies under the command of the Marquis of Montrose, and had given proofs of his courage and good conduct, and who now intended to travel into Italy. Addressed to all Lieutenants, Generals, and Governors of provinces and towns, all Captains of castles and fortresses, all guards of ports and passages, and all others having power by land or by sea; and praying those in authority not only to allow him to pass and repass freely and surely with his servant, hordes, and baggage, but also to grant him all assistance and favour. Paris, 4th March 1649.

194. Letter from Lord Jermyn, dated Paris, 3rd December, year wanting [1649], to Montrose; chiefly complimentary.

195. Letter from Lord Jermyn to the Marquis of Montrose, dated Paris, 9th February 1650, repeating to him the assurances of the interest he took in all that concerned his affairs, not only in relation to our public concernments, but in that of his particular respects to the Marquis himself; he intreated him to believe that no man living could more wish him all sorts of happiness and success.

196. Commission subscribed by James, Marquis of Montrose, Lieutenant-General, Captain-General, and Lord High Admiral, to His Majesty within the kingdom of Scotland, to Captain James Maitland, to a troop of horse, to serve under Colonel Gray's regiment of horse. Kirkewall, 26th March 1650.

197. Paper marked on the back "copy of the oath " signed by the Englishmen, the 27th of March, at Kirk- " wall, 1650." The paper is a solemn acknowledgment of King Charles the Second to be the true and undoubted King of Great Britain, France, and Ireland, and over all persons and in all causes as well ecclesiastical as civil. Small folio.

198. Commission subscribed by James Marquis of Montrose, by virtue of the power granted to him by his Majesty of the Admiralty of the kingdom of Scotland, to Captain Robert Hall to be captain of the good frigate or vessel of war called the Herdsman in Gothenberg. Kirkwall in Orkney, 5th April 1650.

199. Order for General Major Sir John Hurry to take a part of the company of guard, with four companies of life regiment, commanded by Lieutenant-Colonel George Drummond, together with other four companies of Lieutenant-Colonel Henry Stewart's squadron, and immediately to embast himself with what arms and ammunition doth belong, and set sail with the evening tide for the coast of Caithness. Given from shipboard, near the Island of Flotta, 9th April 1650.

200. Warrant subscribed by James Marquis of Montrose, as Governor-General and Lord High Admiral in Scotland, to Captain Robert Hall, in consideration of his many sufferings and losses for his fidelity and loyalty to his Majesty in His Majesty's service, authorising him to dispone of so much of the first vessel whatsoever it should please God to deliver into his hands as prize as would completely make up to him all his real losses in his Majesty's service. Thurston, 13th April 1650.

201. Letter of James Marquis of Montrose, to the gentlemen and heritors of Caithness, complaining that their appearance to support him after his arrival in Caithness had not been so timely as was expected; that that had necessitated him, the conveniency of his Majesty's affairs requiring his removal, to leave behind him certain persons to communicate to them such things as he judged necessary to be done by them at that time; for which end he had particularly commanded them to offer to them an oath of fidelity and allegiance to be subscribed by all and every one of them to his sacred Majesty. Thurste, 14th April 1650.

202. Order by James Marquis of Montrose, for Captain Robert Hall, authorizing him to take whatsoever ships he was able to be master of, belonging to the town of Hamburgh, they not having a pass to show from the Marquis or any other of His Majesty's Admirals. Thurston, 14th April 1650.

203. Assurance by James Marquis of Montrose, Lieutenant Governor, and Lord High Admiral of Scotland, to Captain Robert Hall of one of the best of the ships that were then, or that should afterwards happen to be under the Marquis's command, and of making him commander of a squadron of ships for His Majesty's service. Thursto, 14th April 1650.

204. Oath of Allegiance subscribed by several skippers and seamen, declaring that from their very souls they detested that unnatural rebellion against his late sacred Majesty, his horrid and execrable murder, and engaging to the utmost of their power to evidence to the whole world their firm resolutions for the re-establishment of his present Majesty. Thurso, 27th April 1650.

205. Letter from Louis the Fourteenth, King of France, countersigned by his Minister Henri-Auguste de Loménie, Comte de Brienne, to the Parliament of Scotland, in which, after narrating that he had learned that the Marquis of Montrose by the fortune of arms had been made prisoner in the last battle he had fought in Scotland, he begs that the captors would set the Marquis at liberty, as the Marquis in what he had done, had only generously performed his duty to his Sovereign. Dated Compiegne 10th June 1650.

Montrose was executed before this letter of intercession reached Edinburgh.

206. Act of the King and the Estates of Parliament rescinding the sentences of forfeiture passed against the late James Marquis of Montrose, and his adherents in the year 1645. Dated at Edinburgh 9th February 1661.

In my next Report I may have some suggestions to offer to the Commissioners with reference to the entire collection of the Montrose Muniments.

REPORT ON THE RECORDS AND MANUSCRIPTS AT DUNROBIN, BELONGING TO HIS GRACE THE DUKE OF SUTHERLAND.

The Charters at Dunrobin have been arranged with reference to the lands conveyed by them, and are readily accessible by means of a detailed inventory.

The earliest is dated in the reign of King William the Lion, and from that time the series is complete to the present day.

The Earldom of Sutherland is one of the most ancient honours now existing in Scotland, and its history has been fully detailed in "The Genealogical History of "the Earldom of Sutherland from its origin to the "year 1630, by Sir Robert Gordon of Gordonstoun,"* to which is appended an Inventory of Writs of the Earldom.

Besides the Records which illustrate and prove the descent of the family and property of the lands, there are in the collection others of a miscellaneous description which require a more detailed notice.

Among these is a document of early date, and of much value for understanding the early ecclesiastical history of the district.

The ancient Diocese of Caithness comprehended the extensive province which in time came to be distinguished as the Counties of Caithness and Sutherland. The see was probably founded by King David I., and it received from him and his successors on the throne various charters of endowment, the territory itself however being the seat of a Norse population, under the Jarls or Earls of Orkeney and Orkney.

The rude condition of the people may be inferred from their treatment of two of the early Bishops of Caithness. John, the second Bishop, was seized by Earl Harold Hadadson, at whose instance his tongue was cut out and his eyes torn from their sockets, while Adam his successor was burnt by an enraged crowd in his own kitchen.

To strengthen the efforts of the infant church in civilizing the fierce natives, fresh settlers were introduced into the province by the Crown. The chief of these was a branch of the great family of De Moravia, brought from the opposite coast of the Moray Firth, and which soon became known as Lords and Earls of Sutherland.

The successor of Bishop Adam was a member of the powerful house of Duffus, and a near kinsman of William, Lord of Sutherland. Possessed of great and varied means of influence, he wielded them all for promoting the settlement of his diocese.

One of his beneficent works was the erection of a Cathedral Church at Dornoch.

Among the papers at Dunrobin is the Charter of Constitution of his newly designed Cathedral. The Record is not dated, but may probably be ascribed to the early years of his episcopate, which extended from 1223 to 1245. (Miscell. Ban. Club, vol. iii.)

In it he sets forth that before his time there was only a single ministering priest in the Cathedral, partly from the poverty of the place, and partly from the prevailing disorders, but that now he had resolved on the erection of a Cathedral at his own expense and to provide for a conventual foundation in it, so far as his narrow means would admit.

The constitution of the Cathedral of Moray was derived from that of Lincoln, and Bishop Gilbert from his early connection with the former (having been its Archdeacon), naturally turned to it as the model of that which he had now to frame. In all points except one he adopted the Constitution of Moray. There were the same number of canons, and the same dignitaries in each; but in Moray, as in others of the Scotch Cathedrals, the Bishop sat in the Chapter as a simple Canon, while in the Chapter of the Cathedral of Caithness, the Bishop was declared to be the chief and pre-eminent.

The result of the government of Bishop Gilbert was such that he gained the affections of the people, by whom he was believed to have worked miracles. He was afterwards canonized, and his festival was celebrated on the first day of April, while his relics continued to be held in reverence, and gave a sanction to oaths till the eve of the Reformation.

There are many bundles of letters and papers in the Charter-room, of which in some cases lists have been prepared, and in framing this Report I have made use of these separate lists as well as of the Inventory of the Charters.

Of these papers, the following seem worthy of notice:—

Letter to the Earl of Sutherland from Mary, Queen Dowager of Scotland, dated 12th March 1557, relative to a Commission granted to the Earl to apprehend "Thomas Robertson, pyrat, and his complices."

Notarial Instrument of Relaxation by Alexander, Earl of Huntly, Governor of the North of Scotland, in favour of John Tarrol, of Doill, Donald Tarrol, in Doill, William John Nicolson, and others, of the forfeiture incurred by them for besieging the Castle of Dunrobin, dated 27th June 1519.

Letters of Dispensation by John, Archbishop of St. Andrews, Papal Legate in Scotland, in favour of James, Earl of Bothwell and Lady Jean Gordon, sister-german of George, Earl of Huntly, being within the forbidden degrees of consanguinity, dated 13th March 1565.

This document has been the subject of considerable speculation, and Mr. Burton, the latest writer who treats of it, states that after all that has been written, there is a mystery about it. (Hist. of Scotland, vol. iv. p. 385.)

In the Articles given in by the Earl of Murray to Queen Elizabeth's Commissioners at Westminster on the 9th of December 1568, the nullity of the divorce between Bothwell and Lady Jean Gordon is set forth, which "for consanguinitie standing betwix him and "his wiff proceidit oulie becaus the dispensatioun was "abstracted." (Hopetoun MS.) The late Mr. Joseph Robertson who makes this quotation, adds, "The dispensation thus said to have been abstracted has not been heard of since," and "it was no doubt destroyed "before Bothwell's divorce." (Statuta Eccles. Scot., vol. i. p. clxxxii.)

Mr. Robertson states that the evidence on which the dispensation proceeded, is preserved in a notarial record among the papers at Hamilton Palace; while Mr. Burton, on the supposition that this document was the dispensation itself, accounts for its preservation there, on the ground of the strong interest which the House of Hamilton had to preserve a document that might some day or other prove any offspring of Queen Mary with Bothwell to be illegitimate. (Hist. of Scot., vol. iv. p. 385.)

The marriage between Lady Jean Gordon and Bothwell was declared to have been null from the beginning, by reason of their being of kin within the forbidden degrees. The document now discovered proves that a dispensation was regularly procured before marriage; and as we find that Lady Jean Gordon did not found on it in the consistorial proceedings before the archbishop (which ended in the divorce), and it would seem to have been in her custody throughout, and to have been carried by her to Dunrobin when she was married to the Earl of Sutherland in 1573, the inference is, that her consent had been gained to the divorce, either at the instance of the Queen, or of her own husband.

Certain Articles, sent by the Reverend Father in God Robert, elect, confirmed, of Caithness, to a noble and potent Lord George, Earl of Caithness, his vassal and tenant of the Barony of May, to be performed conform to his bond given to the said Reverend Father and his successors, for him, his heirs and assignees, Earls of Caithness, dated Dornoch, 12 August 1549.

According to the description in the inventory of this document (which from a fresh arrangement of some of the papers could not itself be found) its fourth article is of the following purport:—"The said Reverend Father "desires the pollution of the Kirk and Sanctuary of "Farr to be amended, for that the said Earl not only "gart take away all insicht and gear put therein in "keeping, but also took out of the same aged and "decrepit men and bairns, in colour of safety by faith "of his great oath sworne in presence of a great "auditor, and thereafter gart cruely dispone on them; "and also to cause restore the spuilzie of the chalice "and christening stock, Eucharist and ornaments of the "Altar of the said Kirk of Farr, since the Sacrament "cannot be administered for want thereof, with the "Earl's answer, and the Bishop's confutation."

The bearing which this paper has on the working of the law of sanctuary makes it desirable to have it fully copied. The parish of Farr comprehends a wild and extensive district on the northern coast of Sutherland, in which is the long stretching valley of Strathnaver. In this glen, on the left bank of the Naver, is a ruined chapel with a cemetery, near to which is a stone cross supposed by the people to be that of "The Red Priest." This personage had a stone basin in the neighbouring parish of Durness, known as the stone of the Red Priest, and he is also held in remembrance at Applecross by the same name. There can be little doubt that all these notices refer to St. Maelruba, who, as we learn from the Irish Annals, founded a monastery at Applecross in the year 673, and whose mission in the early Celtic church of Alba was influential and enduring. The Cross of the Red Priest in Strathnaver may have been one of the boundaries of the Sanctuary of Farr. The girth of St. Maelruba at Applecross extended six miles on all sides of his church, while that of the Knights of St. John at Torphichen measured a mile on every side, and is marked by stone crosses. It would appear from the document at Dunrobin that in troubled times the poor people retreated with all their effects to such sanctuaries, and that thus, as for other reasons, an enclosed space of considerable extent was required for girths.

Mutual bond of amity between Robert, Bishop of Caithness, with consent of the Dean and Chapter of Caithness and John, Earl of Sutherland, 15 .

A series of letters from Lord President Forbes to the Earl, from September 1745 to May 1746, as to raising a regiment, and on public affairs generally.

A bundle of letters of the same period from Major Mackay, Capt. Gun, Lady Janet St. Clair, Sir Robert Gordon, Sir John Gordon of Embo, Lord Cathcart, Mr. Baird, Sir Everard Fawkner, Major Colquhoun, General Huske, Lord Justice Clerk, Mr. Frigge, the Judge Advocate, Dr. Kinnaird, the Duke of Argyll, the Lord Chancellor, Clunie Gordon, Lord Reay, Lord Strathnaver, Lord Kilkerran, Inverchasly, and others.

Sir Robert Gordon the historian of the Earldom of Sutherland, became tutor to Earl John, his nephew, in the year 1615.

Among the manuscripts at Dunrobin is his Book of Accounts as Tutor for the years 1616, 1617, 1618, 1619, 1620, 1621, and 1622.

They are recorded in great detail, and many of the entries afford curious illustrations of the condition of the country, referring to agricultural progress, buildings, dress, hunting, fishings, rents, wages and the like.

The following entry preserves evidence of the late occurrence of wolves in Sutherland.

"Item, six poundis threttein shillings four pennies "given this yeir (1621) to Thomas Gordoune for the "killing of ane wolff and that according to the Acts of "the countrey."

I add a few random entries as specimens :—

"1618. Two bolls victual given to Richard Kard for "mending the great gunnis and feeld pieces in Dun-"robin."

"Two chalders wictwall given at Dornogh crop, 1617, "for my lord and his pedagogue and serwants boord."

"Item, thrie bolls in malt spent in Cracock, at the "appointed yeirlye tyme for the Earle of Sutherlands "generall hounting at Stenedell, my lord being ther."

"Item, alewin poundis gewin this yeir, 1618, for bows, "arrowis, golff clubbes and balls, and other necessars "for his lordships exercise." (Next year these are entered at ten pounds.)

"Item, thrie scoir tenten pundis in Januari this yeir, "1619, for the comptens charges in his woyage from "Sutherland to Struthboigie and Frendret, when Lady "Elizabeth Gordonne, the Earl of Sutherlands sister, "was contracted to the Laird of Frendret, and ane "minut of ane contract past betuix the parties."

Rossi Sutherlandiæ Comitum Annales, fol.

Memoirs concerning affairs of Scotland from Q. Anne's accession to 1707, with the account of the origine and progress of the designed invasion in March 1708, and some short reflections on the ancient state of Scotland.

Besides these there is a Kalendar of Fearn, a Præmonstratensian House in the neighbouring County of Ross, founded by Ferquhard Earl of Ross, about the year 1230.

Originally the volume had formed a book of offices, but besides the Kalendar there now remain only two leaves, containing the services for the festivals of St. Stephen, protomartyr, and St. John the Evangelist, and a fragment of the service for the day of the Holy Innocents.

The Kalendar contains the Saints common to the Roman Kalendar, with a few of those of the Celtic church, such as St. Columba, St. Monan, St. Patrick, St. Gilibert, St. Donan, St. Congall, St. Moloc, St. Barr, St. Fillan, St. Ninian, St. Duthac, St. Brigid and St. Colman, and would seem to have been written in the latter half of the 15th century.

It contains the obits of many benefactors of the Monastery, as well as a record of the deaths of people who had no apparent connection with Fearn. It has also been used for chronicling many events of national and local interest.

The entries come down to the seventeenth century, and every part of the pages has been made use of, an older notice being occasionally obscured by a more recent one written over it.

Among the obits are the following :—

Obitus Wilhelmi secundi Comitis de Ros, quæ obiit apud Dehny, XXVIII. die mensis Januarii, anno Domini M.CCC°.XXII.

Obitus bone memorie Walteri de Lesly Comitis de Ross, qui obiit penultimo die mensis Februarii apud Fert, anno Domini M°. [ccc.] octogesimo primo.

Feb. 13, 1574. Obiit Magister Donaldus Fraser Archidiaconus Rossensis, qui occisus fuit apud Awfurd.

The following obits refer to those who were remembered for some special work :—

Obitus domini Wilhelmi Comitis Rossie qui fabricavit et reparavit ecclesiam Nove Farine, et obiit apud Dehny, IX. die mensis Februarii, anno Domini M°.CCC°.LXXI.

Obitus bene memorie quondam Thome Monylaw, prepositi ecclesie Sancti Duthaci, qui fabricavit opus argenteum capitis Sancti Duthaci, et donavit capellanie fundationis sue, pro celebratione misse Corporis Christi ac diversa alia opera . . . Obiit in conversione Sancti Pauli, anno Domini 1490.

And at the foot of the page, on which the month of April occurs, the "Tabula perpetua ad faciendum " pascha," and another, "Ad inueniendum quadra- " gesimum."

Among other families illustrated by the obits are Munro of Cullnald, Munro of Tarlogie, Dunbar of Durris, Ross of Tolle, M'Kenzie of Kintaill, Fraser of Lovat, Ross of Plaids, Douglas of Mulderg, Faid of Ballone, Gordon of Ballone, Munro of Fowlis, M'Culloch of Kindeace, Dunbar of Mayne, Ross of Balnagown, Ross of Terrel, Ross of Annat, Vaus of Lochslin, Ross of Resolis, Ross of Morinche, Ross of Kindeace, Urquhart of Burdisyardis, Ross of Rarrichie, Ross of Inverharrow, Chalmers of Ormond, Dunbar of Benegfeild, and Ross of Auchnaloich.

There occur also obits of many ecclesiastics of Ross, Tain, and Fearn, besides burgesses of Tain and other local families of less importance.

If the Commissioners should wish to obtain Calendars of the papers and manuscripts here noted, the Duke of Sutherland has expressed his readiness to permit them to be made.

JOHN STUART.

REPORT ON THE PAPERS OF THE MARQUIS OF HUNTLY AT ABOYNE CASTLE.

The family of Aboyne is an offshoot from the main stem of the House of Gordon.

In the year 1627 King Charles I. created Lord John Gordon, second son of the first Marquis of Huntly, Viscount Melgum and Lord Aboyne, but his Lordship only enjoyed the title for three years, having been burned to death in the Tower of Crichton of Frendraught, under circumstances of some mystery, which have been the theme of the contemporary annalist Spalding, and have also been sung in the ballads of the district.

On this, George, the eldest son of the Marquis, was created Viscount Aboyne, in 1632, and on his succession to the Marquisate in 1636, the title of Aboyne devolved on his second son James, who died in 1649, while at the Restoration his younger brother Charles was created Earl of Aboyne.

On the death of George, fifth and last Duke of Gordon, and eighth Marquis of Huntly, in 1836, the chiefship of the Gordons devolved on George, the fifth Earl of Aboyne, who became Marquis of Huntly, and was the grandfather of the present Peer.

The Viscount Melgum, who perished in the Tower of Frendraught, was married to Lady Sophia Hay, fifth daughter of Francis Earl of Errol. This lady was a Roman Catholic, and her spiritual necessities were for a time ministered to by Gilbert Blackhal, a priest of the Scots' mission in France, in the Low Countries, and in Scotland, who in a work which he left in manuscript, entitled " A breiffe narration of the services " done to three noble Ladyes," has recorded " How " I came to be engaged in the service of my Ladye " of Aboyne," and " of the services that I rendred to " my Ladye of Aboyne " in the capacities of priest, chamberlain, and captain of her castle.

In this work, which has been printed by the Spalding Club, the author describes his errant life and secret visits to the families who adhered under every trial to the ancient faith, and has furnished many picturesque details which help us to understand the undercurrents of the society in which he moved.

The Lord Charles Gordon who was created Earl of Aboyne in 1660, was an author, and some of his poems are preserved in local manuscript collections, which have escaped the notice of the historians of Scottish poetry. His verses have been said not to be without merit, but to be too often polluted by the licentious spirit of the loose age in which he lived.

In a volume in the library at Skene House, entitled " A collection of severall satyrs, lampoons, songs, and " other poems," a manuscript of the beginning of last century is one of his pieces, called " Earle of " Aboyne's Lynes," addressed to a beauty of the day. The same volume contains another of his productions, called " A Satyre on the Duke of Lawderdale," which thus commences :—

The seepter and croun
With the gospell and goun
Are now turned all to confusion,
The Hector of state
Is the rascall we hate
And his plots we will treat in derision.

The vicissitudes of the civil wars, in which the members of the family took a prominent part on the King's side, may account for the want of the letters and documents of the period which might have been expected at Aboyne.

The papers which have been preserved consist of the charters and title-deeds of the lands, which from time to time became vested in the family. Many of these are of the 15th century, and are of great interest for purposes of local history and genealogy.

Among the families whose history they serve to illustrate, are the Gordons of Midmar, Gordons of Braichly, Gordons of Coldstone, Crabs of Cults, and Chalmers of Cults. A good many of the charters were granted by Bishops of Aberdeen, over lands in their Barony of Birse, some by Adam Gordon of Aboyne, who by marriage with the heiress of Sutherland became Earl of Sutherland, by Alexander Gordon, Earl of Sutherland, by George Gordon, Earl of Huntly, and by Donald Farquharson, a great captain, under Montrose, in the civil wars. There are also old rentals of Mar, which contain points of interest for the agricultural history of the district in the 17th century.

The Papers and Manuscripts of the Right Honourable the Earl of Crawford and Balcarres at Dunecht.

The charters and miscellaneous papers in this collection are varied and numerous, the description of them in a catalogue recently constructed extending to about 300 folio pages.

For the most part they consist of the titles to estates belonging to the Lindsays, Earls of Crawford, the Lindsays of Edzell, the Lindsays, Earls of Balcarres, and other branches of this ancient house, and both they, and the letters in the collection, have contributed interesting and picturesque details to the "Lives of the Lindsays," written by the present Earl while Lord Lindsay.

It is thus unnecessary to refer in detail to papers which have been described and quoted in a work so well known and popular as that just referred to.

One of the charters throws some light on a hereditary royal surgeon at an early period. By it, King Robert I. grants to William of Watterston "filio et "heredi quondam Johannis surgici, dilecto et fideli "nostro" an annual rent of 8 merks sterling, payable out of the rents of the Kings Thanage of Tannadyce, "de quo quidem anno redditu, dictus quondam Johan- "nes, pater predicti Willielmi, obiit vestitus et sasitus "ut de feodo, per donationem clare memorie domini "Alexandri, Regis Scocie, predecessoris nostri ultimo "defuncti." "Reddendo unum par calcarium deaura- "torum apud Perthe in mundinis de Dunde," dated at Cupar in Angus, 26 Dec. 1317.

Among our early charters are many notices of hereditary physicians, who enjoyed lands in virtue of their office, and a collection of these would not be without its use. One of these officials is favourably noticed in an entry in Rymer:

"Littera ab Alexandro primogenito Regis Scottorum "pro Ade Kereudbright, medico quondam Roberti de "Brus, qui contra communem medicorum opinionem "ipsum sanitati restituerat." Scone, 3 Julii 1282.

Fœdera (new edition) I., 611.

A manuscript volume at Dunecht, which contains the proceedings under a Royal Commission for the settlement of the borders issued by King James I. in 1605, is of considerable value for the numerous illustrations which it affords of the singular condition of society then prevalent in "the debateable land."

The commission was granted in favour of Sir William Selby, Sir Robert Delavale, Sir Wilfrid Lawson, Sir William Seaton, and Sir William Humo, Knights; Joseph Pennington, Edward Gray of Morpeth, Patrick Chirnesyde of East Nesbitt, John Charteris of Amisfield, and Gideon Murray of Elibank, Esquires; and was accompanied by instructions from the Privy Council of England.

The first meeting of the Commissioners was held at Carlisle on the 9th of April 1605, when certain articles for their guidance were agreed on, and Sir Wilfrid Lawson was elected convener.

The volume in question appears to have been the official record kept by Sir Wilfrid, and on the first page is written "liber Wilf. Lawson." It contains 247 closely written folios.

At the outset, the commission and relative instructions are engrossed, and every subsequent act of the Commissioners, with their extensive correspondence, is recorded in the most careful manner.

One of their first resolutions was to send out of the country a colony of the Grahames, and "the copie of "the names of Grames which are to be sent away," includes 150 of the clan, of whom the Privy Council, on 17th May 1605, write "that his Majesty having spared "their lives which otherwise were forfeited through "their crimes, his clemency farther appeared, in that "he is pleased to dispose of them as may be greatly for "their good, and in such sorte as they shall be in no "worse condition than his Majesty's good subjects that "were no offenders, being as they are appointed to be "sent to serve in the garrisons and cautionary towns of "Flushing and Brill, places where many honest men "desire to be maintained in service."

Some of the names are accompanied by the soubriquets by which they were familiarly known, such as, "Richard "Grame, alias Jocks Ritchie;" "John Grame, alias "All our Kaines;" "Richard Grame, alias Lang Rit- "chie;" "Andrew Grame of Sarkeyde, alias Little "Andrew;" "Richard Grame, alias Ritchie of Gal- "loway."

The list included the name of Richard Grame of Netherbie, and it would appear that the Scotch Commissioners had proposed its omission when they first met, but on 17th April 1605, the English Commissioners sent a letter from Carlisle to their Scotch brethren, in which they state, "Since our departure from you this "day, we perceive that the leaving out of Richard "Grayme, sonne to Walter Grame of Netherby, is so "evill taken, that we shall be taxed of partiallitye, and "(as yt were complained of that wee have not held in "indifferent course in our proceedinge), therefore, we "have thought good heerby to pray your consentis that "his name may be added to the rest as before yt was, "being a thing that now as the case standis, wee may "not in reason do without your privityes."

In a letter from the Scotch Commissioners, dated at Dumfries on the following day, they concur in the step, but a subsequent effort was made on behalf of Richard of Netherby by the Earl of Montrose, who thus wrote to the Commissioners, from Holyrood House, on 25th June 1605: "Right honourable and assured good freindis, "understanding by reporte of certaine our cozins what "order you have taken with them, and their freindis, "and in especuill that yow have determined to trans- "port thame to Newcastle upon Satterday night, and "there to remaine in ward; we have, therefore, taken "occasion thereby to intreat your honors in favour of "Richard Graime, sone to Walter of Netherby, who is "presently in our company; that notwithstanding of "your ordinance, you will permitt him to continewe "in our company, as yon will do us acceptabill pleasure. "In so doing we shall be answerable for him, both to "his Majestie, unto the Conncell, and to your worships. "Hoping this our request shalbe effectuall at your "handis, we bid you farewell. Your good freind to "his power.

"Montros."

The Commissioners declined to accede to the Earl's request, on the ground that Richard's name was in a schedule sent by the Privy Council, of all those who were to be transported; and, accordingly he was sent with the others destined for Flushing on the 6th of July, with a letter of commendation to the governor of that place, setting forth that the bearer was son to Walter of Netherby, the chief of all the Grames dwelling betwixt Leven and Sark, and that he, "mynding to showe his "forwardness in his Majestie's service, hath desyred us "to give testimony of his birth and place, and that "upon his due desert he may receive such favor as to "his dimerite shall appertyne, which we thinking rea- "sonable have thereunto condiscended, as also that for "his better encouragement to go forward to do his "highnes service, we have intreated the conductor of "the rest to place him as auncient of that company."

By a letter of the Commissioners to the Privy Council, it appeared that they were at first only able to make up 112 of the 150 Grames, and they announced the steps by which they still hoped to make up the original number, adding that "besydes the Grames that dwell "betwixt Leven and Sarke, and whiche were also within "the submission, there are of other surnames whose "lives and conversation have been no better than the "Grames, that the countrey might well spare, and "were fitt to serve and be sent away."

They complain in a letter to Lord Salisbury of 7th July 1605, that there is "one Hutchin Graime of the Gardis, "and one Johne Graime, alias Jock of the Peartree, "that hath much hindered this service."

The first cargo of 50 was sent to Brill, and the second batch of 72 to Flushing.

Before three weeks had elapsed, some of the expatriated Grahams began to appear in their former haunts on the border, to the great disgust of the Commissioners. Some of them had procured licenses from their officers, permitting them to come home for two months, and others returned without any license at all, among whom was Richard of Netherby.

On 23rd October 1605 Sir Wilfrid Lawson writes to the Earl of Cumberland, "as with our last letters we cer- "tifyed the names of such of the Graimes as then to "our understandinge have returned, with license or "without, so I heare there are still mo coming daily, "which as we then wrote, is greatly to the dislyke of "the better and truer sorte of his Majesties subjects "heare, and it is lyke unles ther be some order schortly "taken as well to stay those not yet come, as to send "away or otherwise to take some severe course with "those already come without lycense, that they will all "be schortly at home againe."

The Privy Council in the meantime had instructed the Commissioners on the 19th of October, that they have "taken order with the Viscount Lisle, Gouvernour "of Flissing, that none from henceforth shall have any

" passe, nor be allowed to come over without speciall " lycense from his Majestie, or of us of his Privy " Counsell, finding now that the error in graunting " such passportis to those to come over (wherein some " are lycensed to stay here two months) hath growen, " by reason it hath been usuall for all governors and " there subordinate officers to graunt leave for such " stay to the ordinary souldier for his private busi- " nessis, and that it was not knowne to the governor " or his deputy that these men thus sent over were " destyned to remaine there beyond the seas without " returning. Concerning those who are now over with- " out any lycense, his Majesty is pleased they be pre- " sently proceeded with according to justice, as far " forth as the nature of any their former offences may " beare. In which case when you shall have proceeded " to finall judgement by authority of your Commission, " you shall doe well to cause them be saufe kept in " prison, untill his Majestie upon your certificate be " made farther acquainted with the matter, and there- " upon some other direction given you in that behanlf."

Their attention was directed to some passports, aigned " Phillip Thornington," " who was no captain of " any of the companies, and whose signature, therefore, " must be presumed to be counterfeited."

From a letter to the Privy Conneil of 14th Nov. 1605, it appears that of the 72 Grahams sent to Flushing, only 14 now remained there, the rest having returned home.

A List of " the names of some speciall malefactours upon the border (fol. 63), reveals a sad condition of affairs:

" Edward Armestrong, alias Antons Edward of Willi- abey, for 12 murthers."

" John Armestrong, alias Jock Sowluggis, for divers murtheris, especially for ripping a womans belly, taking out her child alive, cuttinge the woman's throate, and leaving her and her child dead in the road way. This was done by the directione of the said Edward Arme- stronge, who was also present at the deed doing."

" Andrew Armestrong, alias Ingrees Androwe, for murther."

" George Bell of Bowbanck, Wm. Bell, alias Will of Carhoil } For killing Wm. Ur- win, and divers other fellonies."

" Richard Urwin, junr., Francis Urwin, Mathewe Urwin - - - } Sonnes of William Ur- win of Grehay, that slewe the Provost of Dumfreis, for killing of John New- ton, besydes diverse other fellonies since the King's Proclamation."

" Richard Urwin, alias Wattyes Ritchie, for killing the Provost of Dumfreis, and diverse other spoiles and burnings since the King's Proclamation, for some of which he standeth indyted."

" Andrew Hetherington, alias Andrewe of the Rigg- foote, for killing of Clemy Beauchamp, and diverse spoils and burnings since the King's Proclamation."

" Robert Armestrong, alias Robe Saudy, for killing of Carmegill, and for being ane outlawe these 9 years."

" Christopher Urwin, alias Gifford Carleton, for taking of Wlherlipp, spoiling and burning, since the King pro- claimed, a murtherer and an outlaw."

" Richard Urwin, alias Kokies Richee, condemned of murther at Carliell, since the King proclaimed, besydes a famous theefe for many yeares."

" Edward Blenkinsopp, John Blenkinsopp - } condemned of burglary and felony."

" Thomas Blenkinsopp, who with the former, Blen- kinsoppes were theiffs, spoilers, and burners, of riding, with banners displayed in open day, forrowes since the King proclaimed, for which they stand dyverse tymes indyted at Carliell."

At folio 63b is a " copie of the Grames Petition to his Majestie," setting forth " that they and others inhabit- ing within the bounds of Esko and Leven, being the borders of the Realme of England against Scotland, are men brought upp in ignorannce, and not having had meanes to learne their due obedience to God, and your most excellent Majestie, of late and immedinatly after the death of the Queen's most excellent Majestie, your Majesties late deare sister, did disorderly and tumultuously assemble ourselves with all the warlike force and power that they could make, and being so dissorderlie assembled, did invade the inlande parte of the East parte of the county of Cumberland, and spoiled many of your subjects of England with fire, sword, robbing and reaving of their goods, and mur- thering and taking prisoners the persons of the same, which our misdemeanour, albeit we cannot excuse by any ignorance, for that by the lawes of God we doe knowe that all rebelling, reaving, and murthers, are altogether forbidden, yet soe it is, that some among us of evil and corrupt judgment did perswade us, that untill your Majestie was a crowned Kinge within the realme of England, that the lawe of the same king- dome did cease and was of no force, and that all actis and offences whatsoever done and committed in the meane tyme, were not by the common justice of this realme, punishable by force, of the which malitious error put into our heads, as deceived men, and be- lieving over redely that grosse untruth, we did most injuriously run upon your Majesties inland subjectis, and did theme many wrouges, both by fyer, sword, and takeing there goodes, in such sort as before we have acknowledged."

After profession of their sorrow, they beseech his Majesty that he will be pleased " now at our most " humble suite to graunt unto us the saving of our " lives which now is in your highnes, by the justice of " your lawes to take from us at your highnesse good " pleasure, and that your Majestie will be pleased to " relleagate and banish us (as a tumultuous collony) into " some other parte of your kingdome, there to spend " the residue of our miserable and sorrowful dayes in " lamenting and sorrowing for our offences."

This would seem to have preceded the resolution come to of transporting the Grahams to the Low Countries.

The King probably wished to try the experiment of rooting out the barbarous borderers from their native haunts, and exposing them to fresh and more healthy influences and motives among strangers abroad. He had a few years before tried a colony of a different de- scription, when he transported a body of gentlemen and industrious lowlanders from the county of Fife, with the view of forming a Settlement in the Lewis, and turning to account the fertility of the island, which had been neglected by the rude and ignorant natives.

In this case the Colonists also returned to their own country, but it was on account of the opposition and hatred to which their position in the island exposed them, and because they were unable to maintain their hold in it.

The petition of the Grahams is followed by a curious list of " the names of those that standis in feade with " otheris," and is somewhat ominous for the peace of the country:—

" 1. Imprimis, Youngis and Witheringtons.
" 2. Item betweene Youngis and Hallis.
" 3. Item betweene Youngis and Ogles.
" 4. Item betweene the Barnes and Collingwoods.
" 5. Item betweene the Burnes in Watshoe and Dyck with his complices.
" 6. Item betwene the Davisons and Pottis.
" 7. Item betwene the Rodderfords and Pottis.
" 8. Item betwene the Rodderfords and Fenwicke.
" 9. Item betwene the Ellotis and Carletone.
" 10. Item betwene the Ellotis and Doddis.
" 11. Item betwene the Ellotis and Ridleys with the Weltons.
" 12. Item betwene the Armestrongis and the Rid- leys.
" 13. Item betwene the Trumbles and the lard of Larva.
" 14. Item betwene the Trumbles and Fosters.
" 15. The Grayes and the Fissets.
" 16. Grayes and Ruderfurthis.
" 17. Grayes and Anshes."

The subsequent proceedings of the Commissioners, with full copies of the letters received and written by them, are continued to the end of the volume. Among the letters are several from Henry, Bishop of Carlisle, and Lord William Howard, the " Belted Will " of Border history.

The last entries are dated in January 1606.

It appears to me that a calendar of this volume would furnish very valuable and authentic materials for under- standing the state of border society and life, at the interesting period of transition to which it relates.

JOHN STUART.

The Papers of the Right Honourable the Earl of Morton at Dalmahoy.

The charters and papers illustrating the history and descent of the great family of Douglas, represented by the Earl of Morton, are arranged in numerous boxes in the Charter Room at Dalmahoy, and selections from them have been printed for the Bannatyne Club in two volumes entitled "Registrum Honoris de Morton."

Besides these there is an extensive collection of letters and papers, relating not only to the family of Morton, but also to the house of Lochleven, one of which, Sir William Douglas, on the failure of the last heir in the entail of the earldom of Morton in 1588, succeeded to the estates and honour of Morton as sixth Earl.

These have been arranged in twelve folio volumes, which are likewise placed in the Charter Room.

Lord Mortou most readily consented to my inspection of all his papers, but the present Report is confined to the latter series, to which I have just referred.

I notice them in the order of the volumes.

I.—"Morton Papers.—Original documents, 1474–1616."

Most of these are printed in the volume entitled "Muniments Vetustiora Comitatus de Mortoun," one of the two to which I have referred.

Among those by whom they are subscribed are "Angus," "James G." (Arran), "Lennox," "Duncan" "Campbell of Glenurghay," "Drumlanrig," "Mar," "Mortoun," "Jas. Regent," "Blantyre," "Jhon. "Regent," "Geo. Earl of Errol," "Annas Keyth," "James Stewart."

II.—"Royal Letters, 1478–1730."

The earlier of these are formal warrants and precepts. There are a good many letters from King James VI. to the Laird of Lochleven. In one of these, dated 5th August 1582, he applies to him as donator of the ward of the earldom of Buchan, on behalf of Henry Mowbray in the matter of his removing from the lands of Fetterlethir and Lethindie "quhairof he allegis him baith auld "and kyndly possessours and takkismen;" therefore requests that he may be allowed to continue in peaceable occupation during the years of his tack.

A few days afterwards (on 8th August 1582) the king sent another letter to the laird, ostensibly more urgent than the first, on behalf of Mowbray, with a characteristic postscript in his majesty's handwriting, "mak "me quite of this sillie auld man's cummer."

There is a series from King Charles I. to the Earl of Morton in 1627, relative to a levy of 200 men for the king's service in France, and many precepts for payments to be made by the Earl as Royal Treasurer.

III.—"Letters, 1556–1597."

These are from upwards of 70 different writers, mostly of local standing, and they relate to matters of no public importance. A good many are not, strictly speaking, letters, but receipts and procuratories.

IV.—"Original documents, 1476–1570."

Among these are several of considerable interest.

One is a letter from Wentworth (Earl of Strafford) to Lord Morton, dated Dublin Castle, 12th September, 1635. He excuses himself for his delay in answering the Earl's letter, and adds, "I haue not yet recessed any direction "at all from his Majesty concerning the plantation of "Ormond, neither doo I knowe or can conjecture howe "farr his majesty's tytle thereunto will stand good—"and therefore am I the lese willinge to say much "thereof, untill I have a more certaine grownd for my "warrant in that particuler."

In 1466 is a precept by William Edmonston of Duntreath relative to a brief of Mortancestry.

There are two letters from King James V. consenting to the marriage of Lord Morton's daughter Beatrix.

Two letters from James Stewart (afterwards Earl of Murray) to his mother, the Lady of Lochleven; the one from Aberdeen 9th October 1562, the other without date.

Letter from John, Earl of Mar, to his sister, the Lady of Lochleven.

Licence by Henry and Mary to William Douglas to keep in his hands the place of Lochleven, and providing that it should be patent at their Majesties' command. Subscribed by both at Edinburgh, November 13th, 1565.

Warrant by Henry and Mary to charge James, Earl of Morton, to compear before the Privy Council, March 19th, 1565.

Letter from Darnley, dated November 22, 1565, subscribed "Henry R.," to the Laird of Lochleven, stating that he has taken order "through our Realme for "restrayute of shotyng with gunnes," and the Laird being sheriff of these parts, he commands him to apprehend all who "vses to shote contrary our order," and particularly "John Schaw, a common shoter, and to "send him with his gun to us wherever we chance to "be."

Letter by Queen Mary, dated Alloa, 31st July 1566, to the Laird of Lochleven, announcing her intention in proper person to repair "sohortly towards Jedburgh, "and thair to do justice to our puir oppressit subiectis, "that our border being anys quietit, we may the mair "easilie put order in the cuntrie;" and because of the necessity of her being well accompanied by her friends "with their houschaldis and substantius freindis bodin "in warlike maner," asking him to meet her at Peebles on the 13th of August, and to remain with her for 15 days.

1567. Contemporary copy of a bond betwixt certain noblemen and Sir James Balfour of Pittendreich, Keeper of the Castle of Edinburgh, agreeing to relieve the Queen from Bothwell's "thraldome." On the back of this bond is the copy of a letter from England concerning the murder of Henry Darnley, dated 30th May (no year).

[See it printed, Robertson, Appendix No. xx.]

Contemporary copy of the Earl of Murray's Testament, April 2, 1567, "he being in readines to depart furth "of the realme."

Contemporary copy of Declaration by the Queen on the state of the Realm. Edinburgh, June 4th, 1567.

Warrant for committing Mary Queen of Scots to Lochleven. June 16th, 1567.

Notarial Protest, dated 28th July 1567, by William Douglas of Lochleven, in presence of Queen Mary, touching her demission of the Crown in favour of her son. It sets forth that he having entered the chamber of the Queen, and stated that he has come to know how in his presence her Majesty had demitted the Crown on the previous day, he now wishes to learn whether the act had been done of her own will and free consent. Thereupon the Queen homologated the act, and declared that she had not been compelled, and Douglas protests that hereafter she should not be held to have been a captive and under restraint at the doing thereof.

Sir Henry Wardlaw, of Pitreavie, Knt., 1632–33.
John Wemyss, of that ilk, 1627.

The documents in these volumes are of very unequal interest and value.
A large proportion of them are to or from men of historical name, and are worthy of being shortly noted, while others (most of which I have described, especially those in vols. 4 and 5,) should be fully calendared.

JOHN STUART.

THE PAPERS OF THE RIGHT HONOURABLE THE EARL OF STRATHMORE AT GLAMIS CASTLE.

The first of this family of whom Charters are preserved was Sir John Lyon, who was married to the Lady Jane, a daughter of King Robert II., and was Lord High Chamberlain of Scotland. The earliest Charter in his favour is dated in 1368, and there is a complete progress of the writs of the numerous baronies acquired by Sir John and his successors from that time to the present.
When we first discover Glamis on record it is as a Royal demaine, and in all probability it formed part of the possessions of the early Pictish kings, which seem to have stretched all along the central portion of the valley of Strathmore. At the time of the first grant of Glamis to Sir John in 1372 the lands were in the hands of a Thane, the officer or steward of the King, and they were conveyed as the "Thanage" of Glammis, from thenceforth forming the principal messuage and seat of the family.
In 1378 he received a grant from his Royal father-in-law of the Loch of Forfar. This also probably formed a part of the old inheritance of the Pictish Crown, a royal castle having been erected at an early period on an island at its eastern side, while on a promontory on the north side, artificially cut off from the shore, which came to be known as "St. Margaret's Inch," and was fortified by stockades of piles, was placed a house of religion, where for a time a colony of monks from the Abbey of Cupar was placed.
John, the eighth Lord Glamis, headed the barons of Angus of the reformed party, and entered into a bond for maintaining and setting forth the King's authority in 1568. He became Lord High Chancellor of Scotland in 1573, under the regency of Morton.
His descendant Patrick, third Earl of Kinghorne, and first Earl of Strathmore, succeeded to his father in 1646, when he was only four years old.
He is chiefly remarkable for his wonderful spirit of improvement and his refined taste. The Castle of Glamis, which is one of the richest examples of Scottish architecture left to us, owes to him all its characteristic features and its general tone.
In a "Book of Record" which he kept he has recorded the condition of the buildings both at Glamis and Castle Lyon at the time of his succession, and the additions and alterations which he made.
He has also preserved the contracts which he entered into with the artists and tradesmen by whom his designs were carried out. These include a contract with F. de Wit for paintings to be executed in the Earl's chapel and house of Glamis; and we find that he also employed a Dutch carver, Jan Van Sant Voort. His ideas of policy and landscape gardening around the Castle of Glammis, including gardens, planting, and statuary, are all detailed, and there are numerous inventories of furniture, plate, pictures, dresses, and jewels, partly of Earl Patrick's time, and partly of an earlier period.
In his "Book of Record" are many particulars of his personal history, illustrative of the manners of the period.
Shortly before his death, which occurred in 1695, he granted a deed setting forth the many difficulties which had beset his progress through life, and withal the many blessings for which he had to be thankful; in consideration whereof he resolved to build four "lodges" near the Kirktoun of Glammis for the use of four aged men of his own surname, if they could be found, and, failing them, to such decayed tenants as had been reduced to want without their own fault, for each of whom he mortified yearly 4 bolls of oatmeal and 25 marks Scots money, with a "new whyt coloured wyd cloath coat lyned with "blew serge once everie thrie years."
The four men were to frequent the parish church, and "wait alwayes at the church dore when we goe there, "and at their own dores whenever wo shall have "occasion to pass by, if they be not imployed abrod. "... And that they shall be holden (if sickness and "infirmity do not hinder) to repair every day, once, at "the tuelk hour of the day, to our buriall place (whereof "a key shall be given to each in comen), and a forme of "prayer to be read by them by turns, by such of them "as can read, and if they cannot read, that they learne "the same by heart."
The Earl was a great Royalist, and continued an attached adherent to the House of Stuart till the measures of James II. in favour of the Roman Catholic system, which he disliked, alienated him.
The papers at Glamis are put up in bundles, and arranged in a series of boxes, with reference to an excellent inventory of the whole.

For purposes of local and family history they are of great value, but there are no documents of political importance among them. The collection of letters begin in 1609 (Sect. VII. of the Inventory), but they seem to be mostly on matters of business and domestic details.

If it should be considered suitable for the purposes of the Commission to preserve the accounts of Earl Patrick's life which he has left, especially of his improvements in building, furnishing, and ornamenting his Castle of Glamis, it seems to me that such details would contribute very useful materials for a knowledge of the condition of the country in the 17th century, and I have reason to believe that Lord Strathmore will readily permit the "Record," contracts, and inventories left by Earl Patrick, to be used for this purpose by the Commission.

THE MANUSCRIPTS OF THE RIGHT HONOURABLE THE EARL OF DALHOUSIE AT BRECHIN CASTLE.

In my report on the Earl of Dalhousie's papers last year I stated that the greater number of the manuscripts were not accessible at the time of my inspection. Having learned that they had been restored to their places in the library, I took an opportunity while in the neighbourhood, at Montrose, for the purpose of examining the records of the burgh, to return to Brechin Castle, where I examined the manuscripts of which the following is a list:—

1. Collections from the Records of Parliament. By John Cors, Under Keeper of the Registers in the laigh Parliament House. A transcript.

2. Observations and Minutes of Privy Council. By Sir Alexander Seton, of Pitmedden.

33. Martines Reliquiæ divi Andree. A transcript.

34. The Genealogies of the Nobility of Scotland, present and extinct, collected from history; and some other records and reports of people. 1674–6.

Most of the transcripts were made for Mr. Henry Maule of Kelly, and the Earl of Panmure his brother, in the early part of last century. There are few of the manuscripts of which the whole or parts have not been printed since that time; but the chartulary of Binham, and many of the charters in the miscellaneous volumes, have not yet been printed.

JOHN STUART.

THE PAPERS OF THE RIGHT HONOURABLE THE EARL OF AIRLIE AT COKTACHY CASTLE.

The family of Ogilvy is one of great antiquity and importance in the shire of Angus.

The stock from which it sprang was that of the Pictish Mormaers or rulers of the district, who about the time of David I. came to be known as Earls of Angus. In our early annals Gillibride, son of Gilchrist, is styled the second Earl of Angus, and Gilbert his third son may be regarded as the founder of the House of Ogilvy. To him King William the Lion made a grant of a territory in the parish of Glammis, which has long been known as the Glen of Ogilvy, and from which Gilbert took his surname.

From a second son of the house thus founded was descended Sir Walter Ogilvy of Auchterhouse, sheriff of Angus,

"Stowt and manfull, bauld and wycht," who fell in repelling an inroad of highland cateran at Glenbrerith near Blairgowrie in 1392.

The descendants of Sir Walter far eclipsed in importance the old house in the Glen of Ogilvy from which they sprang, and where it continued till towards the end of the 17th century as "Ogilvy of that ilk."

Digitized by Google

But Sir Walter Ogilvy, of Auchterhouse, was the founder of three families of distinction, in the persons of Sir Alexander Ogilvy, of Auchterhouse, Sir Walter Ogilvy, of Lintrathen, and Sir John Ogilvy, of Inverquharity, his sons.

The line of the first soon terminated in a female, the daughter of a grandson of Sir Alexander Ogilvy. The second Sir Walter became a person of great importance and wealth in the time of James I., during whose reign he was appointed Lord High Treasurer of Scotland, and was employed in embassies and negotiations of national importance. Among many other lands acquired by him were those of Lintrathin and Airly, on the last of which he erected a tower, in virtue of a royal license dated in 1432, permitting him to construct it in form of a castle.

His grandson, Sir James Ogilvy, was created Lord Ogilvy of Airly, in 1491, and in 1639, James, seventh Lord Ogilvy, was created Earl of Airlie.

The numerous papers at Cortachy are arranged under the heads of the baronies to which they relate, readily accessible by means of an inventory, and are very interesting for the illustrations which they afford on points of county history and pedigree.

It is not necessary for the purposes of the Commission that I should speak of them in detail, and I therefore confine my remarks to those documents which relate to points of general history.

Among these is a curious deed relating to one of the bells of our Celtic Saints, which were held in great reverence throughout Scotland, and to that peculiarity in our Celtic polity, both civil and ecclesiastical, of conferring on a line of hereditary keepers of such relics, lands and privileges.

The patron Saint of the parish of Airlie was St. Medan, and in 1447 the hereditary keeper of St. Medan's bell resigned it into the hands of Sir John Ogilvy, on which Sir John conferred on Lady Margaret Ogilvy, his wife, the bell, with its pertinents, for her lifetime use; while another writ shows that the Lady was invested by receiving delivery of earth and stone of a toft belonging to the chaplainry of St. Medan, and being shut into the house.

Among the miscellaneous deeds is a series connected with the Abbey of Cupar in Angus, commencing with a charter of privilege by King William the Lion, the founder of the house.

The office of porter of the Monastery, along with a piece of ground, had come to be vested in a family deriving their name from the office, which descended from father to son.

This office with its fruits and privileges was at last conveyed to James, Earl of Airlie in 1608, and the deeds connected with its successive transmissions serve to illustrate the hereditary character of such offices. (No. 1125—No. 1140 of Inventory).

From another document we find that the moothills, which as seats of law and justice, formed a prominent feature in the primitive economy of the Celts in Ireland and Scotland, continued to be used for their original purposes in the end of the 17th century. A disposition of certain lands granted in 1681 by James, Earl of Airlie (No. 451 of Inventory) proceeded on an apprizing "led in a court holden on the Beitchell hill of Cupar "in Angus, being the ordinary court place of the "Regality thereof."

In 1596, James Lord Ogilvy, and Peter, afterwards Sir Peter Young, of Setoun, were sent on an embassy to Denmark, and a manuscript among the papers contains copies of the deeds and letters connected with it.

In the civil struggle of the 17th century, both the first and second Earls of Airlie were devoted adherents of Charles I., and suffered greatly in the royal cause. In 1640 their Castle of Airlie, and Tower of Forther in Glenisla, were demolished by the force under the Earl of Argyll, and at the same time their estates were plundered. This event has been commemorated in a well-known ballad still sung to a plaintive air called "The Burning of the Bonny House of Airlie."

Some of the papers relate to proceedings arising out of this affair. One is a memorandum (No. 1637) by the Earl to his son, who was at Court at the time of the Restoration, requesting him to use means for obtaining reparation for the losses sustained through the down-throwing of the house of Airlie, and plundering the goods therein, also by burning the house of Forther and destroying the plenishing therein, by the late Earl of Argyll and his men.

Another is a warrant by General Monck for examining certain Highlanders suspected of the theft of goods of Lord Airlie from Glenisla, and choosing some honest and famous men who can speak the Irish language to be interpreters. (Nos. 1632, 1633).

There are old inventories of furniture, clothes, plate, and other articles in the houses of Cortachy, Bonnitoun, and Newtown, in 1665, 1678, &c.

No. 1652 is a letter from Sir William Ogilvy, of Barras, to the Earl of Airlie, in April 1682. During the recent troubles Sir William had held out Dunnottar Castle in which the regalia were deposited, and was thus instrumental in preserving them. In this letter he requests the aid of the Earl in forwarding his suit at Court for a reward of his services, and also begs for one of his Lordship's Clanronald hawks. The next paper (No. 1653) is a copy of a signature by King Charles II. for creating Sir William and his son master of His Majesty's hawks, chief hunstman, and master of the Royal game within Scotland.

No. 1666 is a letter from the Lady of Careston to the Earl of Airlie relative to the quartering of Lord Dundee's troops in Angus, 25th April 168 .*

No. 1688 is a letter from Everard Fawkener to the Earl of Airlie, dated at Aberdeen, 15th March 1745-6 informing his Lordship that the Duke of Cumberland was clearly informed of his unwearied endeavours to support the rebels by secretly corresponding with them, and conveying a warning to him on the part of his Royal Highness.

No. 1624 is a letter to the Earl of Airlie from George Ogilvy, dated Spilberg, 27th August 1649, wherein he requests the descents and arms of various houses to be sent to him, and informs his Lordship that he has been admitted to the title of Earl in Germany, as a cadet of the house of Airlie. It is addressed to Lord Airlie as his chief.

No. 1150 is a legal document, entitled "Letters of "four forms at the instance of James Archibald, Vicar "of Lintrathin, against the parishioners thereof, dated "27 May 1566," concluding for payment of the vicarage and other dues "except the cors present, and unrest "clayth," on the ground that "he has been lawfully "provided in said vicarage for divers years bygone, "and has caused the common prayers and homilies to "be read weekly to the parishioners, and is content to "abide such reformation as the Lords of Secret Council "please to make, and is also adjoined to God's con-"gregation and takes part with the said Lords in setting "forward the common cause to the glory of God and "common weal of the realm."

No. 1154 is a Charter granted at Paris on 10th May 1574, by Alexander, Bishop of Brechin, in favour of James, Lord Ogilvy, narrating his absence "thir years "past frome our seat of Breichin, we being occupit "in the study of guid lettres." Mr. Andrew Melvin is one of the witnesses.

No. 1155 is a Notarial instrument, dated at St. Andrews', 14th Feb. 1576, whereby James, Lord Ogilvy revokes certain tacks of teinds granted by him, on the ground that they had been extorted from him while he was kept in ward by the Regent Morton, and were granted at the command of the said Regent.

There are numerous Commissions to the Ogilvys of Airly as Baillies of the Regality of Arbroath, granted by the Abbots in their favour, the first of which is dated 26th Nov. 1485, No. 1337, as well as similar Commissions by the Abbots of Cupar, the first being dated 4th May 1522.

Several papers illustrate the system of repledging from other jurisdictions to that of the Abbots' Regalities (tenants of the Monasteries who had been cited to foreign Courts, No. 1349, 1351. There is a volume containing the proceedings of the Regality Court of Arbroath and another those of the Court of the Regality of Cupar.

The burning of the House of Airlie by the Earl of Argyll may account for the dearth of letters and papers of the period which might otherwise have been expected.

Besides the documents which have been arranged and catalogued there are at Cortachy several large chests filled with masses of documents of very varying dates and character, many of them being modern bundles of tradesmen's receipts, law papers, business letters, and fitted accounts, while occasionally occur mixed up with them letters of the 16th century.

In turning over the contents of two of these chests I selected several letters and orders from Sir T. Dalyell to the Earl of Airlie as to marching and arranging troops, 1680.

An order, dated Leith, 24th Nov. 1652, by the Commissioners of Confiscated Estates, allowing to Lady Helen Ogilvy, wife of Lord Airly, a fifth part of what is received as the rents of his lands.

Copy of a letter from the Earl of Airlie to his son at Court, Jan. 1663, requesting him, among other things, to get a letter from the King to the keeper of the Great Seal to seal the Patent of precedency over the Earl of Findlater, "which was stopped at the Great Seal, not-"withstanding that Charles I. and the present King "had declared under their hands that the precedency "over Findlater does of right belong to us."

There is another letter, No. 1641, on the same subject in Dec. 1663. The writ which the Earl was desirous of getting was not issued till June 1665. It forms No. 1302 of the Inventory.

A writ by King James VI., ordering those indebted in payment of the small teinds and vicarage of Mains of Tantallon to pay them to Patrick Home, younger, of Polwart, keeper thereof.

Several letters written in 1633 by Sir Patrick Ruthven, serving under Gustavus Adolphus, addressed to the Lord Ogilvy.

Several licenses from General Monck. One of them, written by himself to Lord Ogilvy and the rest of the gentlemen of the shire of Angus, desires them to raise a watch of 40 men to preserve the country against rebels.

Letter dated 22nd January 1666, sent from Tyningham by Lord Hadington with pigeons.

Letter dated Edzell, 16th July 1667, signed "J. Lin-"desay Edzell," among other things asks for the loan of his Lordship's goshawk.

It seems to me that a brief calendar of the "Miscel-"laneous" papers, and of those just described, would preserve a good many useful facts for the historical student, and I therefore recommend that such should be made.

JOHN STUART.

THE PAPERS BELONGING TO THE RIGHT HONOURABLE THE EARL OF STAIR.

The family of Dalrymple is of considerable antiquity in Ayrshire, and one of its members acquired the lands of Stair, by marriage with Agnes Kennedy, the heiress, in the middle of the 15th century.

The family first rose into prominence in the person of James Dalrymple, of Stair, born in 1619, who after beginning life as a soldier, took to the study of law, and became eminent as a Judge, and Institutional Writer, having been created Viscount Stair in 1690, and dying in 1695. His son John, Secretary of State for Scotland, created Earl of Stair in 1703, will be remembered for his connexion with the Massacre of Glencoe, and his great zeal in carrying through the treaty of Union with England, for which he was one of the Commissioners.

His son John, second Earl of Stair, K.T., began his military career at the battle of Steinkirk in 1692, afterwards distinguishing himself in the campaigns of Marlborough. In 1715 he was sent on a diplomatic mission to France, and after the death of Louis XIV. was appointed Ambassador Extraordinary to that Court, from which he was recalled in 1720.

In 1742 he was made Field Marshal of the forces, and sent as Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary to the States of Holland. He was appointed Commander-in-Chief of the Allied Army in Flanders, serving under King George II. at the battle of Dettingen in 1743, soon after which he retired from the service.

The papers at Oxenfoord, to which through the kind permission of Lord Stair I received ready access, consist partly of the charters and papers, forming the titles to his many baronies and landed estates, which do not call for special remark. Another series, entitled "The Stair "Papers," consists of the despatches, instructions, and correspondence of Field Marshal Lord Stair at various periods between 1709 and 1746, and a separate volume includes letters addressed to Sir Patrick Hamilton, of Preston, and others, 1646-1688.

The Stair Papers have been arranged in 28 volumes folio, and 1 volume 4to.

The latter vol. contains letters from 1715 to 1720. One series, from February to August 1715, is written from London to the Earl of Stair at Paris. They bear no signatures, but are supposed to have been written by Col. Charles Cathcart, and generally relate to regimental matters and political news.

There are various letters from "John Murray" (Earl of Mar) to "Capt. John Brown" (Earl of Stair), from the year 1716 to the year 1720. After a time the correspondents give their real signatures. Those in 1719 from the Earl of Mar are dated from Geneva.

There are also other letters from Whitehall, without signature, devoted to political gossip.

Of the folio series, which is entitled "Original "letters and other papers, being the correspondence of "John, second Earl of Stair, during the period when "Ambassador at the Court of France, 1709–1746,"—

Vol. I. contains general correspondence from the year 1709 to the year 1714, and among others, letters from—

The Secretaries of State. Whitehall.
Lord Townshend, from Vienna.
Mr. Adam Cardonell. The Hague.
I. Walpole. The Hague.
Lord Albemarle. A Tournay.
Secretary Stanhope.
Duke of Marlborough.
Lord Halifax.
The Magistrates of Stranraer, with an address to the King.
Tho. Agnew. The Hague.

Memorial for the President of the Session in Scotland, 1714.

Memorandum, in French, about an Article of the Treaty of Peace at Utrecht.

The first letter in the volume is from H. Boyle, Whitehall, 27th December 1709, and enforces the necessity of vigorous action by the allies in the war against France, adding that the Queen had written letters to the several states and princes of the alliance to exert themselves on this occasion; and for the most part the correspondence relates to public affairs.

Vol. II. Volume second contains among others,—

Letter from the Queen to the Earl of Stair, asking him to demand of Matthew Prior, the former Ambassador, all instructions and letters since he was sent to France, 1711.

Instructions by the King to the Earl of Stair, "Our "Minister at the Court of our good brother the Most "Christian King," 30th April 1715.

A key to the cyphers, of which a great many are used in this and the succeeding volumes.

The words are represented by Arabic numerals: e.g., Baron is "102," &c.

Copies of letters from the Earl of Stair to various persons during the year (1715), in some of which cypher is partially used.

Letters from the Secretaries of State at Whitehall.

"Copie of the private letter sent to Mr. Stanhope, "dated 8 March 1715." Another on the following day "sent by Phillips, the messenger."

Lettre particulier to Mr. Stanhope, 15th March.

Mr. Stanhope's letters to the Earl are partly in cypher. One dated February 1715 expresses the King's great satisfaction with Lord Stair's mission.

The bulk of the volume is of letters from I. Walpole from the Hague. They are on public affairs, and some of them have the reading of the cypher interlined above the figures.

Vol. III. A. In this volume is an intercepted letter of King James to the Republic of Venice, addressed to Mr. Higgins, dated 18th October 1715.

Intercepted letter of Mr. Higgins conveying the above letter, 19th December 1715.

Secretary Craggs's letter of 18th February 1719 tells the Earl that the King has consented to his request to be recalled.

The Earl had complained to Craggs that his private letters were shown, which the latter denied. Writing on 10th March, Craggs says, "The fact is that you are "recalled, that as you observed very justly upon ye "terms you were at that Court, you ed. not doe the "King such good service as heretofore. Whether it "has been by Lord Stanhope's fault, by yours, mine, or "any other person's, is very little material to ye public, "but it is very material in ye circumstances yr. Lord-"ship suspects and represents to look out very sharp "for this purpose, as you'l see by my publick letter. "Lord Stanhope is making his second trip to Paris. "Sir Robt. Sutton follows him in a few days. His "Lop will come to your house and inform you very "exactly of what he has to doe, and he will settle with "you how long you shd. stay till Sir Robt. is a little "instructed in the carte du Paris. I hope during his "Lordship's stay in France you'l keep up the decent "appearances at least which are necessary between the "servants of the same master. I believe if you are "willing you may be also very good friends, but if you "have not a mind to it, why, patience, there is no fence "against a flail.

"Your account of Mr. Law is very curious in your "private letter to me. If yr. intelligence is good, "surely whatever ill designs he may have he will not "be very able to execute them. He is a comet that "has lately appeared in ye world; whither he will set "it on fire or disappear I cannot tell; but if his design "is to ruin us, I am not yet convinced he will succeed "in it, or whether he will subvert France, nor can I "hope, being very clear of opinion that we have nothing "to doe but wait ye event, using all reasonable and "possible means to take care of our selfes, and looking "out as sharp as we can for the intentions of the French "and Spanish Courts. Our S. Sea business will goe, "but were you to see with what cabals, factions, and "difficultys you wd. be convinced 'tis a much easier "thing to say what wd. be right than to put it in "execution."

Lady Oxfuird's account to George Stirling, apothecarie. 1667.

Account, the Laird of Little Preston to Thomas Kinkaid, apothecarie, beginning 1669 and ending 1676.

Another volume in 4to has one old document, a writ signed by the Duke of Albany, 148—; the rest of the volume being occupied with Peers' letters soliciting votes at elections. 1742-4, &c.

The "Stair Papers" contain many documents of great value for understanding the politics of Europe during the period over which they extend, as well as the state of parties in England.

It is impossible within the compass of a report to do more than indicate their extent and general character, or to specify how many of them may have been already printed in the historical collections of the period. It seems plain that many of the documents are new to history, and I cannot doubt that calendars of these would be of great service to the historical student.

There are a few letters addressed to Sir Patrick Hamilton in the Preston volume, of which, from the allusions and subjects, brief notes should be made.

JOHN STUART.

THE PAPERS AND MANUSCRIPTS OF THE RIGHT HONOURABLE THE EARL OF ROSSLYN, AT DYSART HOUSE.

The ancient papers of the family were destroyed in an accidental fire at Dysart House which occurred in May 1722, with the exception of a very few which happened not to be in the Chartor Room at the time; but an inventory of the whole has been preserved.

Of those which escaped destruction are the following:—

Charter by Richard Moreville, Constable of Scotland, granted to Henry St. Clair, of the lands of Herdmanstoun and others, for the service of the fourth part of a soldier. [Circ. 1160.]

Charter by the said Richard Moreville, granting to the said Henry St. Clair, for three marks, Edmund and Gillemichel, two brothers, and their offspring, on condition that, if they should leave Henry's service with his consent, they should not serve any other master than the said Richard.

A Norse deed on parchment, described in an old Inventory of Orkney Writs in the Charter Room as "berand all the lands that Zopyn Segarsono airit be "his wif Johne Scottis dochter, and alsua the landis "quhilkis he wan fra Thome Inglis, that he clamit of "Andro Scot at wes his wiffis faider bruder, and the "said Zopyn sald it to Schir Dauid Sinclair, Inprimis "in Linga, in Quhalisay sound, x merkis & viii d."

"Ane letter in Northin beand ane Chartor made be "Olave Mavnusone of xxii merkis landis of Hoole in "Ovnst, to Schir Dauid Sinclair and his aris."

Another is entitled "Letter in Northin of the King "of Norwayis—is of the Scottis [Skatts] of Orkney, "umquhill givin to Bishop William Tullauch for his "lyve tyme, and eftir him gevin to Sir David Sinkler "for his lyve tyme—part is in Inglis."

Skatt was a tax on all odal land, payable to the King of Norway, for the support of the Crown and the expense of Government, and William Tulloch, Bishop of Orkney, was receiver for the Crown. He continued to administer the Earldom of Orkney after it was ceded to the Scottish King in 1471, and, according to some accounts, he laid the foundation of those measures which afterwards led to the overthrow of the nature and privileges of the Odallers, and to the introduction into Orkney of the feudal tenure with its many exactions.

Of the miscellaneous papers of early date, the following are worthy of notice:—

"Obligation by William Maitland, younger, of Ledinton, Secretar to our Soverane Lady, touching "the sale to him by Henry, Master of Sinkler, of the "lands of Bolbagy and others, and also ane hundreth "merks yeirly off all and haill the Colheuchs off "Dysart, and also ane Hous callit THE HERMITAGE, "within the Bruch of Dysart, which he obliges himself "to resign on the completion of the marriago agreed "on between James, the eldest son of the said Henry "Sinkler, with Marien Maitland, the eldest daughter "of the said William Maitland. Dated at Edinburgh, "20 March 1564, before witnesses, David, Earl of "Crawford, Richard Maitland, of Lethington, Master "Robert Maitland, Vicar of Kinnarny, Master John "Gothre, and Cuthbert Henderson, Notar Public."

The House, thus called "The Hermitage," in the town of Dysart, is associated with St. Servanus, or St. Serf, the great Saint of Fife, who is believed to have flourished down to the beginning of the fifth century, when he died at his monastery of Culros on the Forth, a spot on which a Cistercian Abboy was erected in later times.

At Culros St. Serf presided over one of the monastic "families" of the Celtic Church, from thence evangelizing the country around, and founding churches in many parts of Fife, which own him as their patron saint; while it was under St. Serf that Kentigern received his training to be the apostle of the Cumbrian Britons.

We learn from an early life of St. Serf that he was wont to retire to cells and caves for purposes of devotion, and that, while in one of the latter, "in Deserto," he was assaulted by the Devil, who wished to engage him in a religious disputation. This cave was situated in a rock on the sea-shore not far from the town of Dysart, and, although its surface is much disintegrated through the effect of damp, there may still be seen marks of artificial cutting, which probably resembled the remarkable figures cut on the walls of the adjoining caves at Wemyss and Cuiplie, where St. Adrian and his "company" occasionally resided on their mission among the Picts of Fife.

Such retreats were known in early ecclesiastical language as "Deserta," and both in Scotland and Ireland the memory of their primitive occupants is kept up by the term "Disert," or "Dysart," which has been affixed to them.

It thus happens that the territory of Dysart owes its name to the Hermitage of St. Serf, which was doubtless a prominent object of regard when permanent names came to be given; and it would appear that the House, "callit The Hermitage," designed to form part of the dowry of the daughter of Queen Mary's Secretary, had stood in close connexion with the original cave of St. Serf.

Other documents in the Inventory of the papers make reference to the "aikers lying in the Chappells of "St. Servan," and to "the house and yard lying "immediately beneath the Church of Dysart possest "by Sir Henry Pearson, Chapland of St. Servan's "Chappell, in Dysart."

The Parish Church was, of conrse, dedicated to St. Serf. "Sanct Serf's hill" appears in early deeds as a land boundary, and "Sanct Serf's money" was a yearly payment made by the inhabitants of Dysart for purposes connected with his Church.

A Book of Household Expenses, 1564, kept by Robert Oliphant, and regularly balanced and docqueted by "Henry Sinclar," the Lord of Dysart. It is bound in the leaves of an old Service Book, and the entries are very minute and curious.

Journal of John Paterson, Archbishop of Glasgow, while in London in the years 1695–6.

This Prelate had been deprived of his see at the time of the Revolution, and was now in London. In his Diary he records his interviews with many of the leading statesmen of the day, whose influence he was soliciting for the royal permission to his return to Scotland. This was, however, denied to him, and he was also prohibited from residing in any of the northern counties of England.

The following is a specimen of the Diary:—

"Jan. 26. Sunday before prayers, Mrs. Strachan "told me that she perceived my Lady Warner had a "great desire that I should marie her, and said she "had told her she had never seen a person since she "was a widow that she could marie save me only. "She is a most discreet and wise woman, and of an "opulent fortune. I am much obliged to her, but am "in no thoughts of marrying more." "Earl Arran is "still my noble friend, and sent me a bottle of Irish "usquebeau, and six bottles of Burgundy, Hermitage, "and Frontinage wine."

"Abstract of the account of the Orkneys under the "family of Sinclair, being a rough draft only." 16 pp. fol.

Memoirs of the Insurrection in Scotland in 1715. By John, Master of Sinclair. This volume has been printed for the Abbotsford Club.

Besides these records of early date, there is an extensive collection of letters, ranging in date from 1774 to 1830. They were addressed to the first and second Earls of Rosslyn by some of the most eminent political leaders of the period, and relate to many transactions of public interest and importance.

The earliest portion of these were written to the first Lord Rosslyn, better known by his previous title of Lord Loughborough, Lord High Chancellor of England.

They have only been partially arranged, and are still in their original covers. They consist of:—

1. A series of letters from Lord Clive, beginning in 1774.

2. A very extensive collection of letters from Edmund Burke, ranging over the period from 1780 to 1797.

At the commencement their style is formal, but it grows into one of affection, and many of the letters are long and of great interest. One, dated 13th June 1792, is on the subject of a coalition government, where the writer says, "I think with you almost in "everything."

Writing on 12th December 1794, Burke recommends a literary aspirant, Mr. Wilde, of Edinburgh, and subscribes "your obliged and most unhappy friend." Among the letters is a paper entitled "Some thoughts "on the present state of parties," and addressed to the Lord Chancellor.

3. Another series of letters from Sir John M'Pherson, 1781–93.

4. Letters from Lord Carlisle, 1781–93.

5. A series of letters from the Duke of Portland, 1792–94.

6. A series of letters from Charles James Fox, only dated by the day of the week.

7. A series from the Bishop of Clonfert, 1783–1804.

8. A series from Lord Lavington in 1792.

9. A series from William Pitt, 1792–1800.

Some of these are long, and a few are marked "private."

10. A series from Lord Thurlow, 1796–97.

11. One from Lord Minto, 1798.

12. One from the Hon. W. Windham, undated.

13. A series from Lady Augusta Murray, 1798.

14. Three letters from Lord Eldon, 1801.

15. A series from the Earl of Carnarvon, 1793–94.

16. A letter from the Duke of Sussex, at Rome, 14th Nov. 1795, signed "Augustus Frederick," requesta the Lord Chancellor's aid in getting measures passed for his relief, and about his marriage.

17. A series from Lord Moira, 1796–97.

18. One from the Earl of Tankerville, without date.

19. A series from Lord Suffield, 1796.

20. A packet containing letters from Lieut.-Gen. Whyte, Lord C. Somerset, Lady Lucas, and Dr. Laurence.

Besides these political letters addressed to the Lord Chancellor, there are many miscellaneous papers of his own, such as—

1. Memoranda of law cases and opinions, drafts of Bills, with relative remarks, and correspondence.

2. Papers connected with the union between Great Britain and Ireland; and on the admission of Roman Catholics to all the privileges of subjects.

3. Papers about the office of Lord High Steward and its precedency, and on other subjects; with notes and interlineations by the Lord Chancellor.

4. Papers, dated in 1778, relative to the state of affairs in America, and on the subject of a treaty.

5. Papers written apparently in the years 1792–3. One of them, in the Lord Chancellor's writing, is on the usefulness of defensive associations.

The letters to the second Earl of Rosslyn are dated from 1806 to 1830.

One large bundle is made up of separate packets, with the following titles:—

1. Despatches Henry Brougham to the Earl of Rosslyn, Oct. 11 to Nov. 17, 1806.

2. Copies, letters, the Earl of Rosslyn to Lord Howe and Mr. Howe, 1806–7.

3. Despatches from the Earl of Rosslyn to Mr. Fox and Lord Grenville.

4. Lord Strangford's letter to the Earl of Rosslyn.

5. Private letters from Mr. Brougham to the Earl of Rosslyn, Sept. 1806 to Jan. 1807.

There are besides, many letters from Mr. Brougham to the Earl, of later dates, on all sorts of subjects, such as the Roman Catholic question, and the King's opinion of it; the position of Mr. Brougham with regard to office, &c.; with drafts of some of Lord Rosslyn's answers.

"Conversation with Lord Brougham on Grey's retiring."

"Abercromby's letter to Brougham"—speculations as to the Duke of Wellington's intentions with respect to Ireland and Emancipation.

An extensive series of political letters from Earl Grey in the years from 1821 to 1829.

Several letters from the Duke of Wellington, in one of which, dated 28th May 1829, he offers to Lord Rosslyn the office of Privy Seal.

"Protocol of a statement made by Mr. Stephenson to the Duke of Wellington on the 6th of March 1830, by the command of H. R. Highness the Duke of Sussex, about the death of Lady Augusta D'Ameland, at Ramsgate, on Thursday evening March 4."

Besides these two sets of letters, there is a series dated in 1799 from Lord Nelson, Lord St. Vincent, and Lord Keith to General Sir James St. Clair, Bart., who, on the death of the first Earl of Rosslyn, succeeded to the title in 1805.

There can be no question that Calendars of many of the letters and papers here noted would contribute valuable materials for understanding the history of the period over which they extend; and if they are desired by the Commissioners, Lord Rosslyn is willing that they should be made.

The Papers of the Right Honourable the Earl of Cawdor, at Cawdor Castle.

The Charters and other Records at Cawdor Castle have been recently arranged with great care, and can be readily consulted by reference to an Inventory.

The earliest in date is a charter granted by King Robert Bruce in 1310 to William Thane of Calder of the Thanage of Calder fer a yearly payment of 12 merks, and the rent of the land which Fergus the Dempster was wont to pay in the time of King Alexander III.

We may infer that William was a descendant of those hereditary stewards of the Crown to whom the charge of this part of the Royal demesne lands had been committed, and who now had come to hold them hereditarily for payment of a stated rent, and services. The part of the Thanage originally assigned to the Brehons or Judges for their support, and in reward of the performance of their functions, had also come to be held for a fixed rent, and this rent instead of being paid to the Crown, was assigned to the Thane.

The Thanes of Calder were also hereditary Sheriffs of Nairn, and Constables of the Royal Castle at the burgh of Nairn.

This Scottish tenure, in no long time, was converted into a regular feudal holding, the Thanage being held in barony of the Crown.

The line of the early Thanes terminated in a female, on the death of William Thane of Calder, in the year 1498. His daughter Muriel, when only twelve years old, was married to Sir John Campbell, a younger son of the Earl of Argyle, and thus the thanage, and other lands, were carried into another family.

In 1689 Sir Alexander Campbell of Calder married Elizabeth, heiress of Stackpole Court, Pembrokeshire, and in 1726 his son John was married to Mary daughter of Lewis Pryse of Gogirthen. In 1796, John, the grandson of the last John, was created Baron Cawder, and in 1827 his son John Frederick, was created Earl of Cawdor and Viscount Emlyn.

The papers at Cawdor illustrate the descent of the land, and the condition and relations of the family during this long period. A selection from them has been printed in a volume contributed to the Spalding Club by the late Earl of Cawdor, and as they may thus be said to have been brought under the notice of the historical student, it is not necessary for me to give any detailed account of their nature in this place. I may remark, however, that the collection is full of instructive illustrations of the condition of the country, and progress of society in the shape of contracts, letters, domestic accounts, inventories of furniture, arms, plate, and the like, with detailed notices of planting and gardening.

In 1454, William of Calder, and Thane of the same, had a royal license for building and fortifying his castle at Cawdor, and the picturesque square tower which he erected, still remains, together with additions of subsequent dates, of which the history can be traced in the papers. In 1455 the Thane had a warrant from the Crown for razing and destroying the old insular Castle of Lochindorb, famous for the long siege which it stood under the Countess of Athol in 1336, for whose relief Edward III. made an expedition to the north in that year.

The marriage of the heiress of the old Thanes of Calder with Sir John Campbell led to much intercourse with families in Argyllshire. Among other lands which Sir John acquired in that country was the territory of Muckairne on the sheres of Loch Etive. This had belonged to the monks of Iona, and it was now conveyed to Sir John Campbell by Ferquhard Bishop of the Isles and Commendator of Iona by a Charter, the narrative of which gives a very unfavourable picture of the native population: "Et quia (nobis ut clare con-" stat) in prouincia praua et perniciosa nostre terre " antedicte jacent, de quibus summas et profieua in " prefata carta specificatas, nec nos nec nostri pre-" decessores unquam habere potuimus, aut potuerunt, " nec eadem similiter vel verisimiliter apparet et " arbitramur memoratus Johannes aut heredes sui " habere poterit seu poterunt."

Sir John, with the view of strengthening his position in Argyllshire, contracted by bonds of manrent alliances with many of the chiefs of the Islands and Western Highlands. One of these dated at Canistak in Dura, 29th September 1520 is a bond of fostering between him and Neyll McNeyll of Gese, by which Sir John "bindis " and obleyes hym for to gif to Neill McNeyll of Gese " in fosteren his secund son callyt Johne, and gif that " son deyss, the next sen or dochter that the forsaid " Johne hais to gif, to the forsayd Neyll quhen he " desyris any of thame."

His second son John was Prior of Ardchattan and Bishop of the Isles, and in his last will this prelate constitutes the Laird of Calder, his nephew, to be his executor, leaving his body "to be bureit in Eeolmkill " gyf God callis me thair, and to be laid with bys-" choippe John Campbell in Sanct Michellis cwrist " quhilkis I haif mendit and thekit." His principal means consisted of outstanding claims against the "men " of the yls" and others, who seem to have been bad debtors, and among his legacies is one "to Daniel " McFeye, harper, by [besides] his hundreth pundis " I aucht hym, with the feye, sax lib."

One of the papers connected with Muckcarne (still unprinted) seems worthy of note.

It is a notarial instrument dated 12 March 1541, on the election of Duncan, son of Odo MacDunlewe, clerk of the diocese of Dunkeld, to the parish clerkship of Killespickcrrill and Kilmacronack in Muckarne. The election was made by the parishioners assembled in the Church of Kilmacronack "ad diuina audienda," and in token thereof, symbolical possession was given to Patrick [Mac] Finlay, [Mac] Alexander Glass, as procurator for Duncan "per aque baiulum sine vasculum, " aquam consecratam in se continentem, cum aspers-" orio." "Qui quidem Patricius finlai Alexandri Glass, " secutus est curatum per totam ecclesiam, atque " ministrauit missam majorem celebranti procuratoris " nomine dicti Duncani in signum electionis et posses-" sionis ciusdem."

The record contains a full list of the names of the parishioners, and is a good example of the Gaelic system of name-giving, where some forefather, or saint, was selected as a head, and the members of the family were recognized by their descent from, or relation to, him.

The few trades from which names were derived may be held to show the circumscribed wants of the community, beyond what the skill of each family could supply. Of these the most prominent was that of fuller; then the blacksmith and the tailor.

The following is a specimen of the names:—Nigellus Joannis McKennich, Dugallus Nigelli, Nigellus Donaldi vic Dunlewe, Dugallus Donaldi Nigelli vic Awlai, Anna dominici Cristini, Gillespik Mac Gillespik vic Achem, pych, Karistina nein a doura, Gillespik Mac Gillemore, Gillefellan Donaldi Macgillebane, Cristiuus Maelmore vic gillelan, Nicolaus Johannis Sartoris, Gillemichel Martini, Joannes Glass Mac Gillemore vic indowra, Dugallus Mac Gillechallum vic Philippi, Efrica dominici vic Calman, Katerina Vicarii Joannis Patricii vic Achromone, Finlaus Martini vic Gillindach, Joannes McGillespic vic choan, Gillecrist duf Mac Philip, Joannes niger Collini vic Philip, Finlaus fallo, Joannes Duncani nigri fabri, Katerina Columbi vic Gillebride, Donaldus Sarteris, Duncanus Joannis Duncani Sartoris, Joannes Joannis Duncani vic Torcatall, Duncanus bane mac Rowane, Gillebride mac lucas, Joannes Glass pectoris Mariota fabri, Mora nein a doura, Effrica fullonis, Cristina fullonis, Finlaus Macheath, Archibaldus Jonis Sartoris, Katerina fabri, &c.

It appears to me that although the Records at Cawdor have to a certain extent been made known to the student, yet calendars of many of those of general historical interest would be found useful, as part of a series suggested in my general report of last year to be made from the miscellanies printed for clubs and families, but not published.

The Papers of the Right Honourable Lord Forbes, at Castle Forbes.

The ancient family of Forbes derived its name from the territory of Forbes in Aberdeenshire, which has belonged to them since the middle of the 14th century, and probably from a much earlier period, although their title can only be proved by records from the date just mentioned.

At an early time three branches blossomed into the Houses of Pitsligo, Tolquhon, and Brux, the first of which shared with the parent stem the honours of nobility.

The members of the House of Forbes soon assumed a position of public importance. The grandson of the first clearly ascertained head having served under the Earl of Buchan in the beginning of the 15th century in that gallant band of Scots which he led into France, and having married Lady Elizabeth Douglas, only daughter of George, Earl of Angus, and granddaughter of King Robert II. He was a Lord before the year 1445, and his successors have always been ranked as the premier barons of Scotland. His son had a license to fortify his tower of Drumynor in 1446.

In later times the family have borne their part in all the national struggles.

The territories of the family bordered with those of the great House of Gordon, and their neighbourhood often led to mutual misunderstandings and serious feuds, which culminated in bloody battles in the time of Queen Mary. The heads of the rival houses came to an amicable arrangement in 1589, and some papers connected with the subject are in the Charter Room. [57.]

The records at Castle Forbes are well arranged, and are described in an inventory, of which, by the courtesy of Lord Forbes, I was permitted the free use.

The largest portion consists of the charters and records of the successive investitures of the Lords in their lands, which, however valuable for illustrating local history and topography, do not fall within the scope of this report.

Among the miscellaneous papers is an early example of those agreements which the lawlessness of the times led men of power to enter into for their protection. By an indenture, dated 9th August 1467, the House of Forbes, by their heads William Lord Forbes, Sir Alexander Forbes, of Pitsligo, Alexander Forbes, of Tolquhon, Arthur and John Forbes, of Brux, on the one part, and Duncan McIntosh, Chief and Captain of Clanchattane, with his two brothers, on the other part, bound themselves to take "open upright part in all "quarrells one with the other, and to defend each other "with all their goodly power both by slight and might, "excepting their allegiance to the King and their "respective over lords."

Among the letters of any antiquity are two, illustrative of the spirit of knight errantry which actuated many of the younger sons of our Scotch families in the 17th century. They are both addressed to Arthur Lord Forbes by James Forbes, younger, of Corsindae.

The first is dated London, 29th August 1617 (No. 75 of Inventory), in which he writes, "I hane bein in sueing "for tuo places since I did come into England, quhairof "the worst wold have yielded me 80 lib. sterling; but "altho' I had gryt promeses of noble men, yet the envy "of the Englishe crue hes borne me downe in them "both, quhairfoir I haid recourze to the Florence "embassadour, and maid acquantance with him, quha "hes gewin me letters to Florence, that (as he hes "promesed) sall get me ane hundreth crouns a yeir, as "guid clothes as any gentleman of England wears, "with my dyet, quhairfoir I am lying me thither so "fast as I can, for the supplie of the quhilk journey I "am forced to have sold such buikis as I haid at half "rate; so lnik for no more letters from me untill the "tyme I be settled, which I hoip salbe sooner than iff "I haid stayed in England." "Ther is no newes, "bot daylie expecting of the King; our Scotishmen "are in werie lytle regaird among the Englishe, and "I think more hated now than befoir the King "com in England." "Your Lordship's friend, my "Lord Hayes, is not yet maried, nor will never git my "Lord of Northumberlandis guidwill to it, bot they "say he hes bein at noddie with his dochter, and is "still with her."

This refers to James Lord Hay, afterwards Earl of Carlisle, a favourite of James VI., who married against her father's consent Lucy Percy, youngest daughter of Henry, 9th Earl of Northumberland, and afterwards obtained her father's liberation from his long imprisonment, 18th July 1621.

At the end of the letter are the following epigrams:—

"Ad Arthurum Forbosiorum et Alfurdiæ comitem, Epigramma.

"Arcturo cœlum dederat custodia ut Vrsæ
Arthuro terras sic dedit ursa suas.
"Jac. Forbes."

"De sue Gordoniana Epigramma cujus argumentum inter scribendum occurrit.

"Gordoni Herculeos jactant se aquare labores
Captant ambo suam de sue gloriolam;
Sus fera at ista fuit, hæcce domestica; Multùm
Illa vorax hominum, stercoris hæcce vorax.
Ergo quam sue sus distat, tam distat inanis
Gloria Gordonum—Gloria ab Herculea."

The next letter (No. 83) is also addressed to Lord Forbes, who has indorsed it "Letter from James "Forbes, sone to Corsindaye, wrytin out off Padua in "Aprylt 1621."

In it he refers to an intermediate communication, descriptive of his fortunes, and states that as two occasions of going to Jerusalem had failed, he was now proposing to go to Spain, "quher I will stay two "months to perfyt my Spanis language, and from "thence straicht through France to England, quhair "I sall be in the first fyftene dayes of December."

Of this period is a paper (No. 105) entitled "Certan "speaches that past betwix the Lord Reay and the "Master of Forbes since the fyfteinth off December "1630, in Stralsound in Pomergarners lan, in King's "streit, and the tour off London, concerning the "Marqueis of Hamiltoun and the Earl of Seafort."

This document illustrates some occurrences which had nearly led to the last judicial combat in England, arising (according to the ordinary accounts) from a statement by David Ramsay that Lord Reay had alleged against the Marquis of Hamilton, that the troops raised by him for the service of Gustavus Adolphus were in reality to be employed in placing the Marquis on the throne of Scotland. The document hardly bears out this statement, although it appears that Lord Reay had repeatedly affirmed that the Marquis had no intention of going into the King of Sweden's service, "bot theas lewnis war intendit for sum other "purpois quhilk wold break out in its awin tym. "Withall he enquyred of me quhat the Marquis meant "he bringing hom so manie armes to Scotland, and "quhat meant his macking so manie canons and "muskettis in Scotland, and quhat meant his macking "all his cheiff officiaris Scotismen. Well, said he, "yow will heir newis of this or long."

At the end of the paper is written, "At Lutget hill "in Ja°. 1632. 'Roxburgh' et 'Hadintoun.'"

In the following year Lord Forbes was preparing for a journey from the north to Edinburgh, and the "Me- "morandum of all things which he had to attend to" there, is preserved (No. 106).

The 22nd note is, "Item to try at William Dick and "all otheris that hes intelligence in forran countreis "quhair and quhow my tua sonis ar, and giff my eldest "sone be releiffit or not, and what houpis of his "estait."

This gives a lively picture of the difficulties of keeping up a knowledge of friends in foreign parts which the distractions of the times occasioned. It may be added that his Lordship lost two of his sons in the German wars.

The 20th No. of memoranda shows that Lord Forbes was engaged in many law pleas, one of which was against the old ally of the house, the Chief of the Mackintoshes. "Item to try at ane sufficient man that "vill playe my actionnis, first, agens Makintosch and "Grant; (2), agens Allen Makkoneldeny; (3), agens "sum Stradoune men; (4), agens sum Cathnes men; "(5), agens the steillaris of Arthur Veris guidis, giff "my Lord of Mar refuses to doo me ressoune, and to "agree with them for the thrid or halff that beis frei, "by the cost and expensis that beis maid in euery "actioune."

Many of the other entries refer to law proceedings in which he was interested, and which must have kept him in continual vexation, so that we are prepared for the 29th item of his memoranda, in which among his wants he conjoins "ane buik callit the Sanctuary of a trublit "saull and sum other guid litill buikis—and sum "tobacco."

The burning of the house of Frendraught in January 1630, which resulted in the death of the Viscount Melgum, Gordon of Rothiemay, and others, arose out of feuds which prevailed between the Gordons and the Crichtons.

It was celebrated in a contemporary ballad, and the proceedings connected with it fill many pages of our criminal records.

The widow of Gordon of Rothiemay was a sister of Lord Forbes, and a letter from her to her brother is preserved, dated 27th November 1634 (No. 108). In it she informs him that her house had been seized by a band of rebellious gentlemen of the Gordons, who took possession of the keys, and advised her either to remove with her family or to remain in a part of the house by herself, "for they will remain heir. If I be "content it is weale; if I be not content, they know "what course to tak." On the other hand she had received a legal charge from the Laird of Frendraught to appear before the Privy Council, and she was in great doubt what to do. "If I compeir not, I am in "danger of the law; if I compeir and abandon my

" vernment of thoise chalmerlans. I know not what
" compt they will mak to me, sieing they refuse to be
" comptable to the King and his counsell."

Alexander, the tenth Lord (son of the last), while Master of Forbes, entered into the service of Gustavus Adolphus, in which he attained the rank of Lieutenant-General. In June 1635, he left the service, when he received a testimonial (No. 109) from the Rix Chancellor Grave Oxell Oxenstiern of his having served his Majesty for five years with fidelity and bravery.

After his return to Scotland he commanded in the army sent from that country to suppress the Irish rebellion in 1642.

Several papers of interest connected with his service at this time are preserved at Castle Forbes.

Among these is a letter from John Fitzgerald (No. 122), whom his Lordship styles "The Knight of " Kerry," dated 4th Nov. 1642. In it he gives advice as to the attack on a certain castle, of which he says, "It " is a little iland nott above an Irish acre in compass, " invironed with the sea, and the passadge thereto butt " a drawing bridge, and no possibilitie for eany ship " to com within battering shott of it, the rocks and " shalloues are such a distance 'twixt it and the deep. " Uppon extraordinarie calms and nothing even then " to be battered butt a small pile of a castell that will " not conteine twentie men, which is in nature of a gate " house over the bridge, and the Irish thached houses " wherein the people live are nott discernable from the " sea nor land, they are soe sunck doune in the park " or ground."

He gives farther counsel as to the attack of Dingle, preparations to assist Musgree in the county of Cork, the great lack of discipline in the Royal levies, his own misfortunes in having been robbed of all the horses and cows formerly left him by those who rifled his house, concluding with assurances of his continued loyalty and his zeal for the King's service and laws "which my " unfortunatt contrimen oppose."

Another paper, dated 20th Nov. 1642, (No. 123), is entitled "The Answer of the Gentry of the County of " Clare to the propfosals] of the Right Honorable the " Earle of Thomond, in the behalf of the English and " Dutch." It is subscribed "Dor" O'Brian, Conner " O'Brian, Chr. Brien, Donnogh Mucniemmara, Daniell " Macnemara, Teige O'Brien."

A letter, signed "Inchiquine," from Cork, 15th Dec. 1642 (No. 124), (apparently to Lord Forbes), gives a sad account of the distressed condition of the Royal levies in that quarter.

A paper, dated 26th August 1661, and entitled "A " short relation of the Lord Forbes loyall indevors to " serve his Majesty and the Royal family these many " yeers bygon." (No. 138), exhibits a remarkable picture of the vicissitudes to which the loyalty of Lord Forbes had exposed him.

It begins with a statement that in the year 1626 his Lordship's cousin, the Lord Reay, having engaged to serve the King of Denmark in his wars against the Emperor, of the 2,000 men which he carried over for that purpose, Lord Forbes and his friends furnished 800, besides engaging himself for a large sum to enable Lord Reay to carry on the service; and when in 1628 the Earl of Morton levied a regiment for the relief of Rochelle, Lord Forbes furnished out his second brother and twelve proper gentlemen fully accontred.

It proceeds to narrate his services and engagements in the army under Gustavus Adolphus for the restitution of the Palatinate, and subsequently, until his employment in the Irish wars just referred to.

In the end of 1643 he came to Scotland for a short time, in the hope of being able to recover some part of his estate, which had become greatly dilapidated, and failing in this he went to Holland, and on the conclusion of peace between Denmark and Sweden he proceeded to the latter country. Coming across to England in 1646, when it was hoped that the King and his opponents would come to some agreement, and with the view of settling accounts for his Irish service, he was thrown into prison, where he remained two years.

Returning to Sweden in 1651 the Queen allowed him a pension, and in 1652 "did give him a priveledg for " taking up sunk ships and goods in the waters, seas, " and harbours belonging to the dominions of Swedin, " his design therein being to be inabled to furnish his " Majesty with compitent stor of brass guns, both for a " train of artillery by land, and ships by sea." In 1654 the Queen of Sweden quitting the Government, his pension was kept from him, he fell into long continued sickness, and was reduced to great straits.

It does not appear what was the result of his application to Charles II., but he returned to Sweden, and at Stockholm on the 6th April 1672 he made his will (No. 142). It is in Latin, and in it he refers to his services to the Crown of Sweden, and to his losses of money and friends, beseeching the favourable consideration of the King of England towards his surviving wife and children.

A letter from the well-known General David Leslie, dated 12th April 1650, (No. 131), addressed "Hono' " or Camerad," announces a contribution to be raised from the army on behalf of "diverss poore and weill " affected officeris and othir poore Christianes in great " necessitie, who have no meanes of subsistence." It was therefore arranged that "Every trouper dedicat " and lay aside a sex pence of his monethly pay, and " the officeris according to thair severall charity and " qualities doe lykeways mortifye and give proportion-" ally of thair pay for such pious and charitable uses as " sall be thoght fitt."

William, 12th Lord, succeeded to the title in 1691. In 1689 he joined in an address to the Prince of Orange which bore to be from "The Master of Forbes and his " freinds." (No. 164.)

Of his period there is a document of some interest among the Charters, of which it is not known that any other copy has been preserved. It is a memorial to Queen Anne, signed by 20 Scottish Peers, and was occasioned by the resolution of the House of Lords, upon the Duke of Hamilton being created an English Peer by the title of Duke of Brandon, "That no patent " of honor granted to any Peer of Great Britain who " was a Peer of Scotland at the time of the Union can " entitle such Peer to sit and vote in Parliament or to " sit upon the trial of Peers."

From some loose papers, which have not been arranged or inventoried, I selected a "Letter from Sir " Donald Makky, Colonell, out off Germany, brocht " hame be Mr. Robert Farquhar, burges off Aberdein, " 1627."

The writer of this letter—created first Lord Reay in 1628—has been already referred to in connexion with the cartel between him and David Ramsay. It is dated from the leaguer at Wasterbad, 12th June 1627, where he was serving under the King of Denmark (described as "ane resolut soldeir"), and it contains some curious details of the position of the King's army and that of his opponents.

The writer, with the true spirit of a soldier of fortune, after referring to the small pay afforded by the King, adds, "bot iff he opines not his pourss I " will sik ane uther maister; the King of Speen is " ane treu man and ane good payer."

The letter begins with an address to "my wery ho-" norabill good lord and cheiff," the latter term arising out of a family tradition, noted by Sir Robert Gordon in his History of the Earls of Sutherland, that the family of Mackay drew its origin from a member of the house of Forbes.

John, eighth Lord Forbes, was married to Margaret, daughter of George, Earl of Huntly, in 1558. In 1573 he was divorced from this lady on grounds, of which various accounts have been given, but which probably resulted from religious differences.

The lady was a warm adherent of the old religion, and was believed to have been instrumental in converting two of her sons to that faith. Both of them were admitted into the order of Capuchins under the title of Brothers Archangels. One died in 1592, the other, John, survived till 1606. Of him there is a life in the library at Castle Forbes, where also is a portrait of Brother Archangel, presented to James Ochoncar, Lord Forbes, by the Superior of a Convent in Sicily. (Registrum de Forbes, p. 251, MS.)

The life appears to have been written by a priest of the order, and is divided into 29 chapters, some of which contain curious notices of the adventures of the two brothers and their mother, and of the religious houses at Bruges and Antwerp, of which brother Archangel became Superior. It is entitled "An Historical Narra-" tive of the Conversion and Conversation of F. Arch-" angel, borne of a Noble Family in Scotland, of the " order of S. Francis, of those who are called Cappu-" cins, and of the ladie Margarit Gordon his mother."

Among the papers is the copy of a letter addressed in the year 1600 to the Archangel by his next younger brother Arthur, who subscribes as "Arthur, Maister " of Forbes," as if his elder brother were dead. It is directed "A son tres ayme frer Jean Forbes qui s'ap-" pelle Capucin religieux de l'ordre Francois en Flan-" dre en la vill de Saint Oue Capucins."

It would appear that the Capuchin had written to his brother on various religious topics, including that of the "Catholic" Church, and the letter in question, which is a very calm and sensible one, is the answer to it. On one subject they appear to have been nearly agreed, "So as I am glaid that ye agre with our "preichouris not to worschip or adore picturis, so wald "I reiosye if other ye micht warrand against them "the religious vsing of them or with them be per-"suaded to leave them."

In the library is a volume entitled "The Rentale of "ane Nobill and Michty Lorde William Lord Forbes, "maid in the year of God ane thousand five hundrethe "fifty-tua zeris of all his landis, as eftir followis per-"ticularlie, and to indure v zeris."

In the end of the same volume are records of Baron Courts held by the Lords Forbes and their Baillies from 1659 down to 1678.

This volume affords full and detailed information regarding the rural economy, and condition of the country for more than a century, showing, among other things, the smallness of the money rent receivable by the landlord, with the great extent of personal services and payments in kind to which he was entitled.

It seems to me that full calendars of the letters and papers particularised in this Report would be very useful to historical inquirers, and that for the same object a copy should be made of the rental, which is one of the earliest and most minute known to me, with such excerpts from the Records of the Baron Court Book as illustrate the management of land and the relations existing between Lord and Vassal.

JOHN STUART.

THE PAPERS OF THE RIGHT HONOURABLE LORD TORPHICHEN AT CALDER HOUSE.

In the little vale of the Douglas, which sheltered in their early years the founders of the great house of Douglas, we discover before the middle of the 14th century a neighbouring family who, like the other, took their name from their lands.

The first on record is James Sandylandis, to whom David II. confirmed a charter of Sandylandis and the Redmire in the Lordship of Douglasdale, in the year 1348.

About the same time, James of Sandylandis was married to Alionora, sister of William, the first Earl of Douglas, from whom he received in free marriage the Barony of Wester Calder, and in 1385 James Sandilands, his son, was married to the Princess Joan, daughter of King Robert II.

William, the first Earl of Douglas, was married to Margaret, daughter of Donald, Earl of Marr, by whom he had a son, James, and a daughter, Isabel. James, second Earl of Douglas, fell at the fight of Otterbourne in 1388, without leaving lawful issue, and Isabel, his sister, who succeeded him, also died without issue.

The title to the Douglas estates, and to the representation of the Douglas family, on the death of Isabella, belonged of right to James Sandilands, as in right of Alionora, his mother, but for some consideration he was induced to renounce in favour of George Douglas, Earl of Angus, a natural son of Earl William, his right to the estates.

His representation of the Douglas blood could not, however, be affected by the arrangement, and consequently after the death of the Countess Isabel it became vested in James of Sandilands and his descendants, and in token of this inheritance the arms of Douglas have ever since been quartered with those of Sandilands by this family.

The Charters at Calder House have recently been chronologically arranged, and are easily accessible by means of an inventory.

Those relating to the Barony of West Calder begin in 1338, when it was granted by the Earl of Fife to Lady Beatrix of Douglas in liferent, and her son, John of Douglas, in fee, and the series from that time to the present is full and complete. They afford many valuable illustrations of genealogy and local topography, but do not here call for special note.

There is, however, in the Charter Room a series of papers of more general scope and interest, connected with the history of the Knights Templars in Scotland, whose estates became vested in the family of Sandilands at the period of the Reformation.

At this time the Baron of West Calder was James Sandilands, a man who had embraced the reformed opinions, and is often mentioned by John Knox in his history as an ardent and sympathizing associate. He was succeeded by his eldest son, John, who inherited the principles of his father. Through another son, James, the inheritance of the Knights Templars became united with that of West Calder.

Among the many papers connected with the Templar possessions are some which show the steps by which Mr. James Sandilands was promoted to the office of Preceptor of the order. In 1540 he had the Royal license to pass to the Master of the House of Rhodes, Malta, or otherwise, to obtain provision from him of the Preceptory of Torphichen by the resignation of Sir Walter Lindsay, Lord of St. John's and Preceptor of Torphichen. In the subsequent year he received from the Grand Master a nomination to the "ancianitas" or right of expectation of the Preceptory, on its becoming vacant, which received the confirmation of Pope Paul III.

In 1547 he became Preceptor on the death of Sir Walter Lindsay, and his presentation was confirmed by the Pope. He also received from his Holiness the renewal of a privilege of exemption from private and public burdens formerly granted.

In June 1550 he was invested in the Preceptory, both spirituality and temporality, receiving as symbols delivery of the chalice, missal, and other ornaments of the High Altar, and the keys of the Church as for the spirituality, and by being put in possession of the place of Torphichen, with delivery of earth and stone in the court thereof, for the temporalities.

There are various licenses from the Crown in favour of the Preceptor, permitting him to leave the country; and in 1557 there is one from the Grand Master allowing him to return from Malta, whither he had gone.

The Preceptor, like his kinsman, the Knight of West Calder, was an early convert to the reformed opinions, and he acted with the leaders of that movement. In 1560 he was sent to France by the Scottish Parliament to report their proceedings to Queen Mary. In 1563 he resigned into the Queen's hands all the lands and baronies belonging to his Preceptory, receiving a re-grant of the whole united into one whole and free Barony of Torphichen.

About the same time he got a charter from the Queen, with consent of her husband, James, Duke of Orkney and Earl of Bothwell, of all metals in his lands, except silver and gold.

In 1567 he got the Queen's license to proceed to France and Italy, and a few months later he received a letter from the Queen, now a prisoner in Lochleven, recommending him to her brother and the Lords of Privy Council. It is subscribed "Your richt gud sister "and frind." In 1570 he had a license from Queen Elizabeth permitting him to come to the baths in England, and in 1572 he got a fresh permission from King James VI. to proceed to France and Italy, having hitherto been prevented by ill-health from availing himself of the license formerly granted.

He died in 1580 without leaving lawful issue, so that his title and lands devolved on his heir, James Sandilands, ninth Baron of Calder, who thus became second Lord Torphichen.

The Queen's re-grant of the baronies of the Preceptory in 1563 did not contain words creating a peerage, but ever since its date the Lord of St. John and his heirs have been Peers of the Realm; and in 1633 it was found in Parliament that the "title, honor, and dignitie "of Lord Torphichen is annexit to the meane remaner" or middle portion of the barony surrounding the place.

Besides the writs which illustrate the proceedings now narrated, there are Royal charters of privilege and confirmation by Alexander II. and Robert I. in favour of the House of the Templars.

There is also a Commission by the Grand Master of the Order in 1532 to the Preceptor, allowing him to feu out the lands which lay more remote from their house, and "because much effusion of Christian blood had "been caused by the inability of the Preceptor to "defend the possessions of the Preceptory with the "armed hand."

Of all these documents I would recommend that full calendars should be made, as they serve to illustrate a portion of our history, of the details of which we are much in the dark.

The Papers of Sir James Horn Burnett, Bart., at Crathes Castle.

The charters in the collection here are arranged in masses, with reference to a careful and well-constructed inventory.

The document first in date is a charter by David II., dated 17 Nov. 1359, confirming one by Robert I. in favour of Alexander Burnard. By the latter the King granted to him "pro debitis in quibus sibi tenebamur "pro constitutione parci del Drom terram de Kellienach- "clerach, una cum terris infra forestam ejusdem for- "restæ." He also conveyed to him "in compensationem "officii forrestarii et foggagii Willelmi de Irwyn infra "forrestam del Drom, quod quidem officium cum fog- "gagio dicto cepimus ab eodem Alexandro, sex mercatas "terræ infra terras nostras del duabus Cardenys. Red- "dendo unam celdram farine aveno annuatim ad cust. "parci nostri del Drome." King Robert's charter is dated at Berwyk-on-Tweed, 28 March 1324.

The lands thus granted by the charter of King Robert (along with many others in the north) had come into the hands of the King, on the forfeiture and other failure of the great houses of Durward and Cumine, in whose places new families were at this time introduced from the south, of whom were the Gordons, the Hays, the Burnetts, and the Irvines.

From the charter it appears that the King had newly conveied part of the forest of Drum into a park, and that Burnett was rewarded for his aid in its construction by a grant of Kellinach-clerach, with other lands within the forest; and the keeping of the forest having been taken from him and granted to William of Irwin, the King added in compensation for said office a part of the two Cardenys, subject to a reddendo of a chalder of oatmeal for the maintenance of the park.

The family thus settled on the Dee in the year 1323 has remained and flourished there till the present time, alongside of their neighbours, the Irvines, who were planted at Drum at the same time.

Besides the large number of charters in the collection which are of great interest in the illustration of pedigree and topography, there are several masses of a miscellaneous description, consisting, however, principally of law papers, discharges, receipts, and the like.

In one of them I noted a few letters from Duncan Burnett, a member of the family who was an eminent physician in Norwich in the time of James I. They are dated from 1610 to 1620, and relate mostly to family matters, with occasional medical prescriptions.

There is a letter from the covenanting leaders to Sir Thomas Burnett in 1639; General Middleton's protection of his lands from the oppressions of the Highlanders in 1645, a letter from the Earl Marischal asking him to send men and horse to Dunotter in 1650, and a holograph letter from King Charles II. to Sir Thomas in 1651 for his relief from the quartering of soldiers.

A letter from Bishop Gilbert Burnet (whose father, a learned Scottish lawyer and judge, was a son of the House of Crathes) is dated at Bradford in the year 1700, and relates to the death of a relative for whose children the writer offers his aid, and another from a namesake of the bishop, dated from Edinburgh in 1715, announces the death of the bishop of a pleurisy, after an illness of six days.

Among the miscellaneous documents are the Court Books of the Barony of Skene, ranging from 1613 to 1633, and the Court Book of the Barony of Leys from 1636 to 1674. A considerable amount of formality appears in the proceedings of these miniature courts, whose officers were a baillie, dempster, clerk, and officer. "Barlamen" had also certain duties within the barony. The orders of the court which appear occasionally somewhat arbitrary, afford considerable insight into the agricultural and social position of the district, and selections from the records in question have been printed in a volume of miscellanies of the Spalding Club (vol. v.).

The Papers of John Guthrie, Esquire, of Guthry.

The barony of Guthry has for many centuries belonged to a family deriving their name from the lands. In the time of King James III. Sir David Guthry of that ilk was Lord High Treasurer of the Kingdom, and in 1479 he founded a collegiate church at Guthry for a provost and three prebendaries. In 1468 he received a licence from the Crown to erect and fortify his tower at Guthry, which yet remains in good repair.

There is no inventory of the papers in the charter chest. They consist, however, principally of the title-deeds of the lands of Guthry, and of Gagie, another property belonging to Mr. Guthry in the parish of Murroes.

Of the house of Guthrie, there were two Scottish prolates in the 17th century.

John Guthry, of Guthry, was promoted to the see of Murray in 1623. He was deprived in 1638, and after a time he came to reside at his Castle of Guthry where he died.

Henry Guthry, son to John Guthry of this house, was made Bishop of Dunkeld in 1664, and wrote "memoirs "of Scottish affairs from the year 1637 until the death "of Charles I."

In the charter room is the Congé d'élire and relative letter by King James VI. in favour of John Guthrie. The Congé is dated at Greenwich the xxvii day of June, in the year of our reigne, of Scotland twenty-one, and of England, France, and Ireland the fiftie-seventh. It is superscribed by the King, and he seems to have inserted the name of the bishop in the blank, as well as the date and regnal year at the end of the writ, the last part being blundered by a transposition of the year of his reign in Scotland to his reign in England. There are also many letters from the privy council of Scotland to the Bishop of Murray, dated from 1627 to 1632. They are for the most part of a formal character, summonses to attend meetings of commissions, and the like.

Among the miscellaneous papers is a commission by Andrew, Bishop of the Isles, in 1617, in favour of K. Mackenzie as his commissary, and another by John Leslie, Bishop of the Isles in favour of Alexander Guthry of Gagie, to act as his commissary, dated May 1630.

In a lumber room I found two large boxes of unarranged papers. They proved to be for the most part letters, accounts, and scraps of no historical importance.

Among them, however, was found a bundle of letters to Francis Guthry of that ilk, entitled "Irish Corre- "spondence." Some of them are from the above mentioned John Leslie, who was translated from the See of the Isles to that of Raphoe in Ireland in 1633. Others from Raphoe are subscribed "James Leslie" and "Robt. "Buchanan." They are dated from 1639 to 1660.

A few leaves closely written, entitled "Diary of John "Guthry, of Guthry, 1647." It seems to be mainly of a devotional character.

A paper entitled "Bishop of Moray: confession of "faith, 1629."

"Bishop of the Isles. The rentall of the Bishoprik of "the Yllis with the present estaitt thairoff;" also a separate "rentall of the Bishoprick, and the Priory of "Ardchattan."

"Bishop of Moray, 1623. Archbishop of St. Andrews "letter to the Dean of Murray."

"Letter, the Lords of Session to the Earl of Seaforth, "and John, Bishop of Murray."

A bundle of discharges and business papers of the bishops, 1637.

A bundle of ecclesiastical documents, chiefly copies of Acts, reports, and remits, before the church courts, 1650-60.

"The catalogue of bookis belonging to Mr. John "Guthry, the father." A receipt for them, dated in 1643, is signed "Jos. Brodie" "Aeneas Imes."

A series of letters to the laird of Guthry from the Marquis of Douglas. They are principally dated from Douglas, and Crawford, from 1640 to 1650, and are signed "Wm. Douglas." In one from Perth, dated 6th Sept. 1650, urgently calling on the laird to come to see him at Perth, is a postscript in which is the following passage "Douglasse doith keep ane mirrie man to the "foir in all iniquities of tymes."

In another from Douglas, dated 25 January 1644, he writes concerning "that book quhilk Anna Hond is "caus print," "and quharas ye say it may possiblie "goe verie hard unles that I compone with thame, "quhilk will stand me verie deare, I am coutent as I "speak to your self to pay a pairt and to let hir have the "benefit of the trew richt coppie, bot not that I sould "pay for all, for it concerns my sone and the rest of "our freinds of the name, moir nor it does me in "respect of my old age."

It does not appear what work is here referred to, but in this year a little volume of translations was published by Mrs. Anna Hume, with the following title, "The Triumphs of Love; Chastitie, Death; translated out of Petrarch by Mrs. Anna Hume. Edinburgh, 1644."

This lady was the daughter of David Hume, of Godscroft, whose history of the House of Douglas and Angus was first printed at Edinburgh in the same year.

There is a series of letters of about the same dates from Archibald, Earl of Angus, son of the Marquis of

Digitized by Google

Douglas, to the laird of Guthrie, written from Tantallon, Holyrood House, Dundee, and Perth, and relating to subjects both of public and private interest.

In one dated 11 Oct. 1650, the writer says, "I pray "yow if yow have put an end to my busines with my "lady Kinghorn, or Claverhouse, send me word, so "soon as yow can, if you come not yourself to Perthe, "for if the Coronatione hold on the first of January "(as I know nothing to the contrary), I must desyr yow "with my other freinds and vassals to come to me there "against that tyme."

In another dated Perth, 25 May, he says, "Having "been with the King at Sterlin the beginning of this "last week, and coming back from thence be the coast "syd of Fyf that day, I missed your brother-in-law, "who, they tell me, went from this to Sterlin, and was "greaved at the heart at my return yesternight to "understand of that misfortune befallen on you from "these barbarous villains."

A letter from Perth dated 30 June 1651, signed "Johnstone," refers to that "base and insolent actione "committed by some of Col. Hoomes troupe."

There is a letter from the Earl to the Laird of Edzell, "annouucing that a commission had been directed to "him as Sheriff of Angus, to apprehend and examine "these cut-throats (rather than troupers), who having "committed that insolencie in the house of Guthry, "which all noblemen and barons would look on as an "ill preparatione from sojours, so those are to shew "you that gentleman Guthry is my speciall freind, and "the baillie of my regality there."

In another, the Marquis of Douglas, writing from Perth, 22 May 1651, "Is exceeding sorie for that accident "has befallen you. How soone I gott intelligence of it "by your brother-in-law, I spoke with my Lord Hume, "who much resents the business, as you may perceive "by his own lettre, and has sent orders to Col. Hume "very tymelie this morning to secure all of them till "they be brought to condign punishment." Several letters from the Earl of Angus relate to this business.

In one from Holyrood House "5 July," he says, "If "I had mett with yow as I expected at the beginning "of this session I would have intented som wakening "of my ples with Claverhouse, for I will not altogether "forget that busines, for in effect he is the only man "in these parts that I think myself fardest behind "with."

In another from Tantallon, "Thursday Morning," he sends back "the book, not one of the loose papers in "it awanting, tho' if you had been to see how few days "mor should have given me full satisfaction in it, I "know yow wold yet have chosen to have delayed my "len [loan] a littel mor, and for his anger have bidden "(as they say) the inshe as you have done the spaun."

A tiny duodecimo volume in a parchment cover, and in writing of the 17th century, is filled with prayers and conjurations for revealing of secrets and exorcising evil spirits. There are many diagrams, and drawings of figures to be used in these processes, some of them with reference to lunar and stellar observations.

The following are specimens of the book:—

"An experiment to be scene in a Christall Stone.—Take a Christall Stone or glasse most clear, without a crase, and wrape about it a pece of hartes lether, saying, In the name of the Holy Trinity and of the hee* deity. Amen. Then hold the christall in the beame when ☉ is most bright, at the hottest of the day, and say these con[jurations] subscribed, and by and by you shall sie the spirite per aduenter appeiring himselfe; then say to him,—

"'I con[jure] thee, Spirit, by the vertue of all 'things aforesayd that thou deperte out of this 'christall, and bring with thee thy followes in any 'honest and decent forme apparelled, some in blew 'and some in yealowe.'"

"For som tyme he commeth alone hiding his head, sometime in a cloke, some tyme in a gowne; then commaund him or them, if you worke for theft to goe out of the christall, and that they come again, bringing or representing the forme or shape of the thefe or theves and things stolne, or which shall be stolne,—et fiat,—and he will bringe with him the theves and will shewe them with his finger, and their names if thou wilt; also thou maiest aske and be certified of Treasure hid under the ground, how then maist have it, when it was laid there, and so you may be certified of parents, frindes, or enemyes being far or neare distant, or what other thing you will require."

THE PAPERS OF ALEXANDER FORBES IRVINE, ESQ., OF DRUM, AT DRUM CASTLE.

The first of this ancient house was William of Irvine, for whom King Robert Bruce erected into a Barony, the whole forest of Drum outwith the royal park, except the portions of it which he had granted to Alexander Burnard, and subject to the annual payment of a chalder of oatmeal for the maintenance of the park.

By King David II. the royal park was granted to Sir Walter Moigne along with the above chalder of meal payable by Irvine, and another payable by Burnard or Burnet, and forty years afterwards, viz., in 1389, was acquired by "Alexander of Irwyne, Lord of the Droum, "from John Moyne, Lord of the Park of the Drum."

By grants, purchases, and marriages, the landed estates of the Irvines of Drum were greatly increased, and shortly before the commencement of the civil wars their possessions were enormous, and their influence proportionate.

Such was the position of the house of Drum at this period, that it has been believed that Charles I. expressed his intention of raising it to the peerage, but the only reward which was bestowed on its constancy and devotion, was a clause in a charter of King Charles II. commemorating its loyalty of old, and its manifold losses and sufferings in later days.

Having thrown in their lot with King Charles I., the family suffered in many ways from the ruin of the royal cause. The house of Drum was besieged and plundered, fines and imposts were exacted from their lands, while their tenants were harried.

Of all these transactions the charter-room at Drum contains proofs and illustrations. The charters, contracts of marriage, wills, and bonds of manrent are numerous, and for purposes of genealogy and topography are of great value. Many of the earliest of them have been printed in one of the volumes of the Spalding Club (Illustrations of the Antiquities of Aberdeen and Banff, vol. iii.).

Among the miscellaneous papers is a protestation by Sir Alexander Irvine against the presbytery of Aberdeen in 1652, which serves to illustrate some aspects of the contest between Presbytery and Independency then in progress.

In this document, Sir Alexander, against whom a sentence of excommunication of the presbytery of Aberdeen was threatened, appealed to Colonel Overtoun, one of Cromwell's captains. It appears that Sir Alexander had been accused by the presbytery of being a papist, "which is thair ordinarie course, whereby they mak "the more colourable way and fairer pretext to satisfie "their restles ambitione, and exeout their rage upon "all who will not implicitlie obey thaim and idolatrize "all their craftie inventionis;" and although the knight made offer "to cleir himself from being a papist," "yet "this offer was absolutelie rejected, unles I wald reseind "my appeall and submit myself totallie to their judica- "torie, which was to sweare to all their inventionis." He was thus compelled to renew his appeal and "seperat "myself from the discipline of presbyterie, in particular "that of Abirdene, as a humane inventione that is des- "tructive to the civil peace of Christianes, and intends "be the help of God to walk and live in sick an "Christian way and gospell as is conforme to the divine "will in the sacred word."

Among many papers connected with the losses of the civil wars is a series containing "Lists of goods plundered "from the tenants of the laird of Drum in Cromar by "the Covenanting forces in 1644 and 1647."

Some of these, and the protestation of Sir Alexander Irvine, have been printed for the Spalding Club (Miscellany, vol. iii.)

The troubles of the 17th century in which the family was involved may account for the absence of political letters which might have been expected at Drum.

THE PAPERS OF JAMES FORBES LEITH, ESQUIRE, OF WHITEHAUGH.

Mr. Leith is the representative of a branch of the family of Leith, which has been for many centuries settled in the district of the Garioch in Aberdeenshire, as the owners of land.

He also represents the ancient house of Forbes of Tolquhon, the first of whom was Sir John Forbes, third son of Sir John Forbes of Forbes, who, in the year 1420, was married to Marjorie Preston, one of two co-heiresses of Henry Preston, Thane of Formartyne. By this marriage he acquired the lands of Tolquhon, and became the progenitor of the Forbeses of Tolquhon, Foveran, Waterton, Culloden, &c.

In the year 1706, William Forbes of Tolquhon was married to Ann Leith, daughter and heiress of John Leith of Whitehaugh, and in 1761, on the death of his brother without issue, John Forbes Leith, his second son, became the representative of the family of Tolquhon, and the numerous charters connected with the Barony of Tolquhon from the year 1420 downwards, are in the muniment room at Whitehaugh.

Besides these, there is also a large number of charters connected with the lands of Montgarrie and others belonging to the Leiths.

These charters are of great importance for purposes of genealogy and local topography,—and large selections have been printed in the "Illustrations of the "Antiquities of the Shires of Aberdeen and Banff" for the Spalding Club. There are, however, no letters of early dates, or documents of a general historical interest.

There are several manuscript volumes of old rentals and registers of Baron Courts. From one of the last description ranging from 1686 to 1687, selections have been printed for the Spalding Club (Miscellany, vol. v.).

Among these manuscripts, I noted a quarto volume in a vellum cover, being the book of accounts of George, third Earl of Winton, beginning in January 1627.

During the first three years the accounts were kept and written by his lordship.

A fresh set of accounts was commenced in 1640, when they were kept by Mr. Robert Setoun, and they come down to 1651. They were regularly checked and docqueted by the Earl himself till the month of December 1650, when he died.

This Earl was a man of great magnificence and energy. By him the quaint old house of Winton was erected during 1620, in which year "he founded and "built the great house from the foundation, with all "the large stone dykes about the precinct, park, "orchard, and gardens thereof."

In the Book of Accounts are many entries for furnishing to his house of Winton, for plaster and iron work to it, and for some of the stone dykes just referred to. It furnishes details of his outlay for dress, journeys to Court, lawyers' fees, portraits, losses at bowls, wines, provisions, wages, gratuities to retainers, and payments for horses and cattle.

The following are specimens of the entries:—

"August 1627. Item (the 22) gewyne to Jhone Kirk for his better defraying the depoursements of the house furnessinge, 300 lib.

"Item gewine to Mr. George Schairpe at my sonnes goinge northe with his uncle my lord Hay, 90 lib. 13 s. 4 p.

"Item, June 9, gewin to Sir George Hammiltonne in satisfactionne of sum Englische golde, and monneyes furnissched be him to me at my going the last yeire to Court, 2,000 lib.

"Item gewine to Sir George Douglasse as ane help to him, 100 lib.

"Item, July 18, the said day allowed for my awne, my sisters, and my servaunts gerse of the gritt meidden, 131 lib. 9 s.

"Item (22), gewine to Mr. James Inglisse for supplie to ane misterfull freinde, 36 lib. 13 s. 4 p.

"Item the said day, gewine for twa peice of frenche wyne for serving of my housse, 117 lib. 10 s.

"Item the 8 August, gewine to James Maistertoune in complcitt payment of my haille glassewarke of Wintoune the soum of 661 lib. 14 s.

"Item, the 19, gewine to Jhone Quhytte in pairte of payment of his last taske for his plaister warke at Wintoune, the sonne of 100 lib.

"Jan. 19, 1630, gewine to ane daggemakerr in Leithwynd for twa paire of pistolles, 40 lib. 18 s.

"Item (20), gewine to Eduarde Kellie for supplie to the making of the bouling aille at Hollyrood house, 24 lib.

"May 29, gewine to Mr. James Abanna for my pairte of supplie to the bigging of ane constant manse to the preittcheines at Holyrood house chartche, 66 lib. 14 s.

"Item, Aug. 2, gewine to Jhone Kirke for his defraying the depursements of my house furnessing in the Cannogaitt for thrie oulkes in the tyme of the Conventioun, inde, 302 lib. 19 s. 2 p.

"Item the 12 Oct., gewine to Andrew Preittierman for 9,000 skhaites fetched out of Caithnes, at 22 lib. the thousand, inde, 200 lib."

I venture to suggest that a Calendar of this volume would be desirable.

THE RECORDS AND MANUSCRIPTS OF THE UNIVERSITY OF ABERDEEN.

In the earlier periods of the history of Scotland the educational wants of the country were provided for by the Burgh Grammar Schools and the schools of the monasteries, whose existence can be traced in numerous entries in the Chartularies of our monastic houses and episcopal sees. At this time also, it was a common practice with many of our Scotch youths to finish their studies at the English and continental universities. It was thus that about the middle of the 14th century, John Barbour, Archdeacon of Aberdeen, and author of the great epic of "The Bruce," was a student first at Oxford, and afterwards at Paris; and he was only one of many who followed the same course.

Soon after, however, the misunderstandings between England and Scotland became an obstacle to the continuance of this intercourse; and in the beginning of the 15th century Scotland obtained a university for herself. This was brought about by Henry Wardlaw, Bishop of St. Andrews, who had been a student at Oxford somewhat later than Barbour.

Wardlaw founded his University at St. Andrews in 1411, and one of the early fruits of it was William Elphinstone, who was promoted to the See of Aberdeen in 1483.

This Prelate, after, as a youth, taking his degree of M.A. at Glasgow, proceeded to the continent, and pursued his studies at the most celebrated schools there. For six years he taught Canon Law in the University of Paris; removing to the University of Orleans, where he remained for some years, and received his degree of Doctor of Decrees.

About six years after his consecration as Bishop of Aberdeen, Elphinstone obtained (in 1494) from Pope Alexander VI. a Bull setting forth the rude and savage condition of the people in the northern parts of Scotland, and therefore erecting in the city of Old Aberdeen a "Studium Generale" and University, as well for theology, canon and civil law, medicine, and the liberal arts, as for any other lawful faculty, to be there studied and taught, by ecclesiastical and lay masters and doctors, in the same manner as in the "Studia Generalia" of Paris and Bologna.

Ten years later the Bishop engrafted on the University a collegiate body, which he founded and endowed for teaching the several faculties, and for the service of the Church which he founded in immediate connexion with his university. To this foundation King James IV. contributed a partial endowment, and in association with this monarch it came to be known as "The King's "College."

Thus arose the University and King's College at Old Aberdeen, to which Elphinstone soon attracted several celebrated men, who had been his associates in foreign schools. Among these were Hector Boece, Arthur Boece, and William Hay.

Its records are very numerous, the inventory of them filling about 130 folio pages.

They may be divided into,—

(1.) Deeds connected with the foundation and endowments of the University and College.

(2.) Papers regarding the course of education and internal administration of the College.

(3.) Papers regarding the fabric, library, and moveable property of the College.

Of these a selection was printed in 1854 for the members of the Spalding Club, at the expense of the Earl of Aberdeen, President of the Club, and then Chancellor of the University.

This volume may be said to contain most of the papers of general interest,—and assuming that it makes them sufficiently accessible to historical students, I shall confine this Report to a notice of the manuscripts in the library which are not there described.

The most prominent feature of these is a series of about 20 volumes of Bishop Elphinstone's, some of which appear to be in the Bishop's own handwriting, and others (probably acquired by him), on which he has written his name.

One set consists of six large folio volumes, of paper, in double columns (W. P. B., 2, 7). On each is written "Liber Willelmi de Elphinstoun."

Vol. I. commences "Gregorius Episcopus Quoniam " omnis racio superne creature vel terreue sciencie in " deo est que est earum caput et actor et quicquid alibi " queritur non perfecte inuenitur quia hic est perfecta " virtus et sapicutia."

At the end of the volume is written "Liber Magistri "Willelmi de Elphinstoun hic finit."

Vol. II. is like the first, but has marginal notes in a different hand from the body of the manuscript, with illuminated initial capitals. At the end is "Explicit " tercia pars super xv. decretalium. . . . Reveren- " dissimi domini Nicolai Abbatis de Cicilia decre- " torum doctoris alias Panormitani."

Vol. III. has no marginal notes. At the end is written "Explicit lectura domini Pa. . . super tercio decretalium. " Parisiis, anno xxx^{o}. Junii xx^{o}.

Vol. IV. is partially noted on the margin, and wants a few leaves at the end. In the first page a reference is thus made to a work on canon law: "quia super hoc " secundo libro aliorum juris canoniei difficilimo ac " magis utili quem de presenti . . . ordinarie lego, " labente domini anno millesimo $cccc^{o}$ xxi. inicium " scribendi sumpsi duxis decreti annis quibus publice " legendo elaboraui nephas existimaui."

Vol. V. is incomplete at the beginning and end, and is partially annotated in a different hand.

Vol. VI. resembles the others. The words "Liber " Mag'ri Willelmi de Elphinstoun" on the volumes is in a different hand from that of the body of the book.

"Expliciunt recollecta super vi°. . . per venerabilem Magistrum et dominum dominum do Sancto Gemmiano decretorum doctorem finita . . anno Domini $M^{o}cccclx^{o}$ ix. die mensis Maii per R. de S. Deo gracias. Amen."

Another series is in five smaller but similar volumes.

Vol. I. has at the end a piece of Latin verse. The handwriting of the volume is more cramped than that of the last, closer and faded.

Vol. II. and III. Of these there is nothing to remark. The words "Liber Mag'ri Willelmi de Elphinstoun" in them is written with a darker ink than the body of the manuscript.

Vol. IV. At the end in a small hand is written, "Guilelmus Elphinstoun, studens louan," and then, in the same hand as the inscriptions in the other volumes, "Liber Mag'ri Willelmi de Elphinstoun."

Vol. V. is in the same hand as the first series, and in double columns, a feature which the volumes just noticed want. In the middle of the volume is written "Explicit lectura quarti libri decretalium secundum " venerabilem dominum Nicolaum Abbatem Cicilie " doctorem eximium. Deo gracias. Amen. R.S."

"Liber Mag'ri Willelmi Elphinstoun."

Then begin "Glosse Panormitani in Clemc[ ]," and at the end, "Explicit Panormitanus super Clemen- " tinis declarando glossam Johannis Andre," followed by "Constitucio ad regimen Benedicti XII.," dated at Avignon "3 Idus Januarii, pontificatus sui, anno primo."

A third set consists of eight volumes. One of these (9 . . 11) has in the middle "Explicit primus liber " Magistri Henrici Boyches," and "Incipit Tabula " distinctionum Magistri Henrici Boybis super libro " decretalium," and the usual inscription at the end " Liber, &c."

On a page of vellum on the inside of the board is written "Sex ad Martem, sex ad Natalia X-ri. Sex sunt " ad puri. Bis sex sunt atque Phi-pe."

"Ad Jacobum totidem, novem sunt ad Michaelem.

"Adde dies octo totus completur annus."

Among the other manuscripts are,—

A Treatise on Extreme Unction, Ordination, and Matrimony, by Mr. Wm. Hay, Sub-principal of King's College, 23rd July 1535.

"Johannis Irlandi Scoti Parisiis SS. Theologie Pro- " fessoris Questiones in 3 et 4 Sententiarum P. Lom- " bardi." "Collegii Aberdonen. dono Magistri Hectoris " Boetii primi primarii ejusdem."

"Boetius de consolatione philosophie." Presented by John Vaus, the celebrated grammarian, who was a regent in King's College.

"The Mirrour of our Lady," on paper, probably shortly before 1500. At the end is written, "Here " endeth the story on Sunday, and that is sufficient for " this half of our Ladyes Myrrour." "Love, drede, " and pray. Your symple servant, R. Tailour, whylke " booke belongeth to Syster Elyzabeth Wentoun."

In the year 1593, George, 5th Earl Marischal, having obtained grants of various lands and tenements formerly belonging to the Black, White, and Grey Friars in the burgh of Aberdeen, founded the Marischal College on the site of the Franciscan Monastery there, and endowed it with funds for the support of a principal, and three professors of philosophy, six poor scholars, or bursars, an economus, and a cook, all of whom were to live in a collegiate manner, eating and sleeping within the buildings.

This institution, after maintaining a separate existence for about 266 years, was recently united to the King's College and University, and both now form "the " University of Aberdeen."

The Records of Marischal College comprise the deed of foundation, and subsequent deeds of endowment for professorships, and bursaries for students, together with papers regarding the course of education, the buildings, library, and other property of the College.

Many of the charters of the monastic houses already referred to are preserved in this collection. Some of them are dated in the 13th century, and the whole are referred to in my Report to the Commission on the Materials of Scottish History.

In the library of Marischal College are a good many manuscripts which were formerly in the libraries of these convents; among which are—

Six volumes containing St. Augustine on the Psalms, and Homilies; works of St. Jerome, St. Gregory, and St. Bernard.

I beg to refer to the suggestion in my Report on the Materials of Scottish History, for calendaring the deeds of foundation of the Scottish Universities, beyond which I do not feel called to advise any measures regarding the Records of the University of Aberdeen, of the nature of which the historical student will be able to form a fair estimate from what has been said in the present Report.

THE MANUSCRIPTS PRESERVED IN THE LIBRARY OF THE CATHOLIC COLLEGE OF BLAIRS.

The Library of the Catholic College of Blairs, near Aberdeen, possesses this special interest, that in it are supposed to be preserved the books and papers which formerly were deposited in the Scottish College at Paris. Unfortunately this is true only in a very limited sense. Many of the printed books and a few of the manuscripts which were extant in that college up to the period of the Great French Revolution certainly are to be found in the present day at Blairs, but the others never reached Blairs College. Not one of the many volumes of the State papers, illustrative of the history of Scotland during the reign of Queen Mary, which were collected by Cardinal Beaton and Bishop Lesley, is forthcoming at the present time. Their incalculable importance may be gathered from the selections published by Bishop Keith in his History of Scotland.

The principal manuscripts in the library at Blairs are the following,—

1. "An abridgement of the history of the troubles of "Great Brittaine excited by the Covenant, containing "what passed from A.D. 1633 to 1649." A volume in 8vo. consisting of 48 pages.

2. i. "The Genealogies of the families of Scotland, "collected by Sir George Mackenzie, His "Majesty's Advocate." Arranged in alphabetical order.

ii. "The Genealogy of the family of Drummond." A volume in folio, consisting of 175 pages.

3. "Missale ad usum Ecclesiæ Sarisburiensis." The printed edition, Rothomagi, quarto, 1506, in the calendar of which are added various Saints' Days, with the number of lessons applicable to each.

The following notes occur in MS.

"In natali unius martyris officium."

"Prosa de S. Niniano."*

"Ave pastor et patrone,
"Præsul pie, pastor hone,
"Professor eximie!

"Roga Deum, Niniane,
"Pro salute suo mane
"Præsentis familiæ."

4. "Missale ad usum Ecclesiæ Sarisburiensis." The printed edition of Paris, 1526, quarto, formerly used in the church "Sancti Petri de Innerhowen," and described in a coeval hand as being "Ex libris magistri "Jacobi Gordounc, cancellarii Moravienisis, 1562." Various local saints are added in MS. in the Calendar.

5. An account of various noble Scottish families, with topographical notes, written in 1728.

6. Gulielmi Bellendini, Scoti Gelmerdeunensis, opuscula, &c.

i. Chronologia, ad an. 1618.

ii. Annotatiunculæ in Rhetoricam Scholæ Rhemensis. The volume consists of 109 pages.

7. Fragmentum tractatus cujusdam de Pœnitentia, sec. xii. Begins, "Qui in ecclesia genna centies flexerit, "id est, veniam centies petit, vel in loco convenienti, "co die sennat quod supradictum est." A single leaf upon vellum.

8. "Floriger diversarum sententiarum ex operibus "Sancti Augustini." This compilation consists of 26 sections, of which the last treats "De gloria beatitudinis æternæ." A MS. upon vellum, in 12mo. of the 15th century.

9. "A letter from Dr. Henry, author of the History "of Great Britain, to William Tytler, Esq., with the "answer, and a dissertation on the marriage of Queen "Mary with the Earl of Bothwell." It consists of 50 pages in 8vo.

10. "Newes from Scotland, declaring the damnable "life of Dr. Finn, a notable sorcerer, who was burned "at Edinburgh in January last, 1591." Modern transcript from a copy printed by William Wright.

11. "An apology in favor of the three missions of "Madure, Maysure, and Carnato, by Francis Lainez." In quarto, consisting of 318 pages.

12. "Essay on the life and manners of the venerable "Robert Grossetete, Bishop of Lincoln, from his own "works, and from contemporary writers." A thick quarto volume, the authorship of which is ascribed to ——Perry. The volume also contains two letters respecting the work, one from George Bishop, dated at Brailes, 5th April 1766, and the other, without date, from Bishop Challoner.

13. A vellum roll written in the 14th century containing a poem upon the Instruments of the Passion of our Blessed Lord, or, as they are sometimes called, The Arms of Christ.*

Begins, O Veronicle, I honoure Him in the,
That þe made þorw His privite;
The cloth He sette to His face,
The prente beleфte þere þorw his grace.

After the lines upon our Lord's Sepulchre, follows an address to Christ, beginning,—

I þanke þe, Lord, þat þou me wroȝt,
For wit strong painis þou me bout,
I þank þe, Lord, wiþ ruful entent,
Of þi paynis and þi turment.

The poem ends thus,—

In liif, in deþ, in wele and wo,
Let nevir my herte turne þe fro;
But mercy, Lord, I þe pray,
þou lete me nevir in sinne day,
Wher þorn þat I may dampued be,
Derworþe Lord, for þi pite. Amen.

Then follow in red letters a few concluding lines, beginning thus:—

These armis of Crist, loþe God and man,
Seint Petir þe pope descrivyd hem,
What man þisc armis oviseeth
For here sinnes sori and schrive heþ.

14. A manuscript, in 4to, written upon paper, bearing the following title:—"Catalogus abbatum hujus monas-"terii ad Sanctum Jacobum Ratisbonæ, a Placido "Fleming, abbate, confectus, 32ª sui regiminis anno, "sc. 1704."

This history of the monastery of the Scottish Benedictines at Ratisbon is compiled from various historical sources, but chiefly from ancient documents belonging to the abbey. The charters which are cited range from the time of Pope Alexander III., the earlier deeds having been destroyed by fire in 1346. From the period of the Reformation the biographical memoirs are arranged under the following heads,—

Balthasar Dauson, ob. 1566.
Ninian Winzet, ob. 1592.
John James Whyt, ob. 1639.†
Alexander Bailley, ob. 1655.
Macarius Camerarius, ob. 1687.
Placidus Fleming.

After the death of Fleming, which occurred 8th January 1720, the monastery was governed by the following abbots,— Maurus Stuart, ob. 13th December 1720.

Bernard Bailley, ob. 1748.
Bernard Stuart, ob. 1755.
Gallus Leith, ob. 1775.

* The whole of this sequence is given in the "Arbuthnot Missal," at the xvj. September, p. 367.

* See the description of the Stonyhurst MS., No. 32. Of the two copies the preference must be given for antiquity and purity of language to the present.

† The affairs of the monastery appear to have been managed at this time by certain administrators, viz., Hugh Wallace, Alexander Bailley, Silvan Main, and (the second time) Alexander Bailley.

Benedict Arbuthnot, living when the volume was completed.

The later biographies are full and interesting.

The same volume contains a history bearing the following title.—"Tentamen super vitis et actibus "abbatum monasterii S. Jacobi Scotorum, Ordinis "Sancti Benedicti, Erfurti, quantum hucit ex antiquis, "quæ supersunt documentis ejusdem monasterii, con-"gestum a D. Bernardo Baillie, anno 1722, et hic "propria manu scriptum."

The later narratives are these,—

Andrew Hunter, ob. 1561.
William Chalmers, resigned, 1581.
John Hamilton, ob. 1585.
Richard Irwin, resigned, 1595.
John Walker, ob. 1603.
James Winzet, ob. 1613.
William Ogilvy, resigned, 1617.
Hugh Wallace, ob. 1634.
Alexander Baillie, ob. 1655.
Macarius Chalmers, ob. 1687.

15. A large collection of original charters, bulls, letters, and other documents granted to, and connected with, the "abbas et monasterium Sancti Jacobi ecclesiæ "Scotorum de Ratispona," from the middle of the 12th century to about the year 1700.*

16. Original letter of Bishop Leslie to the abbot of S. James of Ratisbon, upon many affairs of public and private interest, dated at Paris, 27th August 1579. Three folio pages; a pleasant and interesting letter.

17. A quarto volume containing "The fourth, sixth, "and eighth books of Virgil's Æneids, translated into "English heroick verse by the Lord Maithand." Dedicated to Queen Mary of Este, and dated at S. Germain's, 1st January 1691. Apparently the autograph copy.

Begins,—

"Deep in her heart the wound the anxious queen
"Had now received; the fatal dart unseen."

18. A volume in 4to. upon vellum, containing a fine copy of the Hours of the Blessed Virgin Mary, every page surrounded by a border of colours and gold.

19. Five leaves of vellum cut out of a book of Devotions, ornamented with colours and gold.

20. A book, in 4to. upon paper, containing—

"A breiffe narration of the services done to three "noble ladyes by Gilbert Blakal, secular preist of the "Scots-mission in France, the Low Countries, and in Scotland. Dedicated to Madame de Gourdon, one of "the forsaid three, and now dame d'attour to Madame, 1671."

21. A volume in 4to. upon paper, containing—

"Sixe bookes of politickes, or civill doctrine, writen "by Justus Lipsius, translated by M. Thomas Cargill; "dedicated to the Right Honorable Thomas Menzeis, of Durne, provost of Aberdene." The dedication is dated "from Aberdene, 19 Oct. 1594."

22. A volume in narrow folio, upon vellum, consisting of 119 folios, written in the 15th century.

The illuminated frontispiece (which would have served to identify the original owner or owners of this volume, or the person or persons for whom it was executed) is now considerably defaced. Apparently, however, their initials seem to have been J. E. and their patron saints S. George and S. Margaret. The page is surrounded with a border of marguerites, and a similar ornament occurs in various other parts of the volume. A tradition, yet current in the College of Blairs, states that it formerly belonged to Mary Beton; in confirmation of which it may be stated that the arms of the family of Beton occur on the lower part of this page. The binding is ancient, apparently of the 16th century.

The volume contains the Psalter, with various canticles, litanies, the office for the dead, and other devotions in Latin, followed by a large miscellaneous collection of French religious poetry. On fol. 62 are to be found certain prayers in English, together with a prayer upon the Instruments of our Lord's Passion, of which the following is a specimen:—

"O joieux Crosse! that with the holy Blood
Of Christ Jhesu inlowed wast by grace;
O, glorieux Crosse! so mighti and so good,
That al vertu by hevenly power has."

23. A volume in quarto, upon vellum, executed in France towards the beginning of the 16th century, consisting of 69 leaves. It bears the following title in a later hand:—

"Heurca d'Anne de Bretagne, regne de France."

A page, highly ornamented, at the beginning of the volume, contains the letters L. and A., both crowned, with the devices of Louis XII., King of France, and of his wife, Anne of Brittany; the former "Eminus, comi-"nus," the latter, "Potius mori quam foedari." Throughout the volume occur illustrations representing the following subjects represented in a high style of art:—

Our Blessed Lady and her Divine Son.
Our Blessed Lord in glory.
The Virgin and Child.
The Stabat Mater, a Pieta.
God the Father presenting God the Son.
S. John the Baptist.
S. John the Apostle.
S. Peter and S. Paul.
S. James the Apostle.
S. Stephen (this illumination is injured).
S. George.
S. Blaise.
S. Sebastian.
S. Christopher.
S. Nicolas.
S. Anthony.
S. Francis.
S. Louis, confessor and priest.
S. Louis, king.
S. Mary Magdalen.
S. Anne.
S. Catherine.
S. Apolonia.
S. Margaret.
S. Lucy.
S. Susanna.

24. A volume in folio, upon paper, containing histories of the monasteries of Iona and Dunfermling, written by Father Marianus Brockie, a Benedictine Monk of the Scottish Monastery of Ratisbon, and transcribed from his papers at a later period.

25. A volume in folio, upon paper, containing collections from various sources respecting Scottish ecclesiastical antiquities, viz.,—

Extracts from the Cartulary of Moray.

"The copy of the Table quhilk ves at Cowper, of all "the erls of Errolls quhilks ver burried in the abbey "thair."

Copies of Charters relative to the monasteries of Couper and Scone (copied in 1738).

Copies of Charters relative to the Hospital of Turreff.

Copies of Charters relative to the Earls of Erroll, &c.

Copies of Bulls, Charters, &c. relative to the Scottish College at Ratisbon.

26, 27, 28, 29, 30. Five volumes in folio, upon paper, consisting of a fair transcript of the first part of the Monasticon Scoticum, compiled by Father Marianus Brockie, mentioned above.

Vol. I. commences with p. 1926 and extends to p. 2687.
Vol. II. commences with p. 2688 and extends to p. 3532.
Vol. III. commences with p. 3533 and extends to p. 4322.
Vol. IV. commences with p. 4323 and extends to p. 5142.
Vol. V. commences with p. 5143 and extends to p. 6012.

31, 32. Two volumes, similar to the above, containing the second part of the previous work.

Vol. I. commences with p. 8232 and extends to p. 9326.
Vol. II. commences with p. 9327 and extends to p. 10,393.

33, 34. Two volumes, similar to the above, but more neatly and correctly written, consisting of another transcript of the same work, beginning with the Propylæum.

Vol. I. commences with p. 1 and extends to p. 863.
Vol. II. commences with p. 864 and extends to p. 1923.

35. The original copy of the above work in the author's holograph, with corrections, unbound.

The object and plan of this remarkable composition may be gathered from the Title page and Preface which he caused to be printed, a copy of which is preserved along with the original manuscript. They are worthy of being given in their integrity.

THE PAPERS AND MANUSCRIPTS, AT TRINITY COLLEGE, GLENALMOND.

After the disestablishment of the Episcopal Church of Scotland, at the period of the Revolution in 1688, its government was carried on by bishops elected by the clergy of the different dioceses, one of the bishops acting as Primus.

As such, it fell to the Primus to convoke and preside at meetings of the bishops, and to him in his representative character was committed the custody of the records belonging to the Church.

The collection at Glenalmond was formerly in the custody of the Primus for the time, and soon after the erection of Trinity College, about 20 years ago, it was transferred to that institution as a central place of deposit, and placed under the charge of the Warden of the College.

The documents are arranged in the chest in which they were placed when in the custody of the Primus.

A descriptive Catalogue of these was formed by Robert Forbes, Bishop of Caithness, in the year 1758, in continuation of earlier lists drawn up by Robert Keith the historian, who was Bishop and Primus, and various additions have been subsequently made.

The first part of the Inventory describes a number of original letters "taken out from among the papers " of Archbishop Sharp by some of his Grace's friends, " and delivered up to the Right Reverend Bishop " Keith."

Among these are many addressed to the Archbishop by the Earl, afterwards Duke, of Lauderdale. In one of them, dated August 26th, 1661, and addressed to the Right Rev. Dr. James Sharp, Rector of the University of St. Andrews, he states, that so far from having corresponded with Ireton (of which he was accused) he had never seen him till he saw him hanging on the gallows at Tyburn.

In another, dated July 18, 1668, he congratulates Sharp on his escape from the attempt to shoot him. On May 6th, 1679, he writes to the Archbishop about the increase of lawless conventicles, and on 20th October in the same year, Lauderdale jointly with Rothes writes to inform him that the King had restored the now Earl of Argyll to his title as Earl, but not to be a Marquis, with a small competency to him, and the rest of the estate to the creditors.

On 26th January 1671, Lauderdale expressed to the Archbishop his conviction of the impossibility of satisfying the discontented Presbyterians, and his determination to support the Established Church.

On 1st May 1677, he acquaints him that certain field conventicles had been lately held and that the outed ministers were becoming bolder. On 5th April he complains of the Earl of Dundonald and his family being licensed to have nonconformist chaplains.

A Letter dated 6th May 1675, from Paterson, Archbishop of Glasgow to Sharp, then in London, is principally occupied with the "prevaricatious" of Gilbert Burnet.

In a Letter dated November 20th, 1665, Sharp writes to the Earl of Kincardine in answer to two from his Lordship, about his countenancing (though a privy counsellor) disorderly and schismatical meetings; he asserts the divine right of Episcopacy, which (the Archbishop says), was believed in by the King, as well as by his father and grandfather.

Another series of papers is described as having been taken from those of Archbishop Paterson by some of his Grace's friends, and delivered to Bishop Keith. Among these is a copy taken by the Archbishop from the original at Ham, dated 3rd May 1680, containing rules and directions for the Bishops in Scotland by King Charles II. in 1676, originally written by the Earl of Tweeddale, and contrived by the Earl of Shaftesbury, Sir Robert Murray, and Bishop Leighton.

On 6th December 1674 Archbishop Paterson writes to Sharp, then in London, expressing a wish that Gilbert Burnet, for his own sake, were settled in some place in the country, lest London prove his snare, recommending that some of the forces be stationed at Glasgow, as useful for suppressing conventicles, which are designedly kept up in the west, and by which people are incited to ill-humours. He shows the necessity of having honest men as magistrates, and wishes to gain over and conciliate the advocates, &c.

On 9th March 1675, the Archbishop writes a letter to ——, expressing his desire that by the return of the more sober Presbyterians to the bosom of the Church, if such an object could be accomplished without endangering the liturgy, rites, and government of the Church of England, a coalition may be made, which may serve to oppose and quell the Popish interest, &c., mentioning that Galloway is infested by itinerant and vagrant preachers from Ireland, and hoping that conventicles might receive a dash effectually.

Many letters relate to the internal arrangements of the Episcopal Church, and to the difficulties which it encountered at the Revolution.

Of these the most remarkable is one addressed by Alexander Rose, a member of the ancient House of Kilravock, the last established Bishop of Edinburgh, to Bishop Archibald Campbell on 22nd October 1713. In it he gives a curious and detailed account of his mission to London in December 1688, undertaken with the hope of obtaining relief to the clergy in Scotland under their sufferings, and with the view of communicating to the Scottish Bishops the progress of events in England. He waited on the Bishop of London "and entreated " him to speak to the Prince to put a stop to the " persecutions of our clergy, but to no purpose. I was " also with the then Dr. Burnet upon the same design, " but with the same success, who told me, that he did " not meddle in Scots affairs."

Afterwards he waited on the Prince of Orange at Whitehall, through the introduction of the Bishop of London. While waiting, the Bishop "directing his " discourse to me said, My Lord, you see that the King " having thrown himself upon the water, must keep " himself a swimming with one hand; the Presbyterians " have joined him closely, and offer to support him, and

" therefore he cannot cast them off, unless he could see " how otherways he can be served. And the King bids " me tell you, that he now knows the state of Scotland " much better than he did when he was in Holland; for " while there, he was made believe that Scotland generally " all over was Presbyterian, but now he sees that the " great body of the nobility and gentry are for Epis- " copacy, and 'tis the trading and inferior sort that are " for Presbytery; wherefore he bids me tell you, that " if you will undertake to serve him to the purpose that " he is served here in England, he will take you by the " hand, support the Church and Order, and throw off " the Presbyterians. My answer to this was, My Lord, " I cannot but humbly thank the Prince for this frank- " ness and offer; but withal I must tell your Lordship " that when I came from Scotland, neither my brethren " nor I apprehended any such revolution as I have now " seen in England; and therefore I neither was nor " could be instructed by them what answer to make " to the prince's offer; and therefore what I say is not " in their name, but only my private opinion, which " is, that I truly think they will not serve the prince so " as he is served in England, that is (as I take it) to " make him their King, or give their suffrage for his " being King. And though, as to this matter I can " say nothing in their name and as from them, yet for " myself I must say, that rather than do so, I will " abandon all the interest that either I have, or may " expect to have in Britain. Upon this the bishop " commended my openness and ingenuity, and said he " believed it was so; for, says he, All this time you have " been here, neither have you waited on the King, nor " have any of your brethern the Scots bishops made " any address to him. So the King must be excused " for standing by the Presbyterians."

When Rose was admitted to the King's presence "he " came three or four steps forward from his company, " and prevented me by saying, My Lord, are you going " for Scotland? My reply was, Yes, Sir, if you have " any commands for me. Then he said, I hope you will " be kind to me and follow the example of England. " Wherefore being somewhat difficulted how to make a " mannerly and discreet answer, without entangling " myself, I readily replied, Sir, I will serve you so far " as law, reason, or conscience shall allow me. How " this answer pleased I cannot well tell, but it seems " the limitations and conditions of it were not accept- " able, for instantly the prince, without saying anything " more, turned away from me and went back to his " company."

" Whether what the Bishop of London delivered as " from the prince was so or not, I cannot certainly " say, but I think his lordship's word was good enough " for that, or whether the prince would have stood by " his promise of casting off the Presbyterians and " protecting us in case we had come into his interest, " I will not determine, though this seems the most " probable unto me." " And I am the more confirmed " in this, that after my down coming here, my lord St. " Andrew's and I taking occasion to wait upon Duke " Hamilton, his Grace told us a day or two before the " sitting down of the Convention, that he had it in special " charge from King William, that nothing should be " done to the prejudice of Episcopacy in Scotland; in " case the bishops by any means could be brought to " befriend his interest, and prayed us most pathetically " for our own sake to follow the example of the Church " of England. To which my Lord St. Andrews replied " that both by natural allegianee, the laws, and the " most solemn oaths, we were engaged in the King's " interest, and that we were by God's grace to stand by " it in the face of all dangers, and to the greatest " losses, subjoining that his Grace's quality and " influence did put it in his hands to do his master the " greatest service, and himself the surest honour; and " if he acted other ways, it might readily lie as a heavy " task and curse both upon himself and his family." The first part of the letter relates to the consecration by Bishop Rose of a chapel at Nairn House, and the latter was printed by Bishop Keith in his Catalogue of the Scottish Bishops.

Among the letters relating to the condition and discipline of the church soon after the Revolution, are others of Bishop Rose, and of Bishop Fullarton both of Edinburgh, John Sage and John Falconer two of the College Bishops previous to the Diocesan adjustments, and the English non-juring Bishops Collier, Spinckes, and Brett, and Mr. Dodwell.

One of this class is a paper of excerpts by Bishop Keith from letters of Bishop Rose, Mr. Spinekes, Dr. Brett, and Mr. Peck, in 1713, 1718 and 1721, showing that Scotland is tied down to no Liturgy but may choose or compose one for her own use from originals yet extant.

Many of the letters are occupied with discussions on the Usages, the subject of which was brought into prominence by the English non-jurors, and which proved a source of division among them as among the Episcopal clergy of Scotland. These usages related chiefly to the mixing of water with the wine for Holy Communion: the Commemoration of the faithful departed, the use of an express prayer of Invocation, and the use of a formal prayer of Oblation in the office of the Eucharist. Others related to immersion in baptism, and the use of chrism both in baptism and confirmation.

Among the miscellaneous papers are several letters from the Chevalier on the subject of the election of Bishops, his consent to which was still asked by the Episcopal Church of Scotland. One from him to the Bishops, dated 30th July 1739, renews his former directions to restrict the number of bishops to seven, and gives them power to keep up that number without any application for his consent, but only reserving the appointment of the Bishop of Edinburgh to himself.

Letter from Lord Balmerino to Bishop Millar offering (1st) to prove that it is the natural right of every man or number of men who want a master or governor, to choose their governor; (2dly), to show in what cases this natural right ceases; and (3rdly), to show that it cannot be pleaded for popular elections in the Church. [circ. 1725.]

Copy of the Earl of Mar's letter to the Governor of Perth, describing the battle of Sheriffmuir, dated Braco, 13th November 1715.

Letter from Bishop Falconar to Bishop Millar stating that he had now taken courage to commence wearing a cassock, which was not excepted against by any to his knowledge, &c. March 11, 1719.

Among the papers is a series entitled "Injunctions," "Synodical Meetings of Bishops" particularly for the Synodical Meeting and Canons of May 5th, 1720. "Cases of Presbytere," "Admonition" and "Remonstrance."

An extensive correspondence between Bishop Keith and Bishop Rattray is occupied with questions as to the administration of the Church by a College of Bishops or by Diocesan Bishops, as well as certain points of liturgical and ritual use. There are many letters on the same subjects from Bishop Smith in England. The series extends from 1725 to 1743.

Papers connected with the filling up of vacant sees, and congregational charges.

Letters of testimonial by the masters of the New College at St. Andrew's disapproving of the conduct of Mr. James Weems, Principal of St. Leonard's college as undutiful and not suitable to the reverence and respect he owed to his Grace the Archbishop. May 12th, 1669.

Royal Commission granted to the Duke of Landerdale, the Archbishops of St. Andrew's and Glasgow, the Duke of Hamilton, the Earls of Argyll, Marischal, Cassilis, Tweeddale, Kincardine, and Dundonald, the Bishops of Edinburgh, Aberdeen, Dunblane, Brechin, and of the Isles, the Lord Elphinston, President of the Court of Session, the Provost of Edinburgh, and Lockhart younger of Lee (nine to be a quorum whereof two must be bishops) as visitors of the University of St. Andrew's. 20 Nov. 1672.

Instrument taken by the Rector, Vice Chancellor, Dean of Faculty, and eight Regents of the University of St. Andrew's against the riotous and disorderly conduct of Dr. James Wemyss, Principal of St. Leonard's College, and the Regent's adhering to him, who openly seceded from the University, because the said Professors and the great majority of the University had elected the Archdeacon of St. Andrews, Rector. Aug. 7. 1674.

Sentence of suspension of said Dr. James Wemyss. 11 Nov. 1675.

Copy of a Letter, apparently from Bishop Arch. Campbell about the principles of the Greek Church, and the different sects thereof, in a very particular manner, as proposed in queries to the Archbishop of Thebais, with his answers when he was in London 1714 and 1716, also of the doctrine of lay baptism, and of the alterations in the present English Liturgy, as differ- ing from that of King Edward the Sixth's time, at some length.

Papers relating to the consecration by the Scotch Bishops of Dr. Samuel Seabury of Connecticut, in November 1784.

" Concordate or Bond of Union between the Catholic " remainder of the ancient Church of Scotland, and " the now rising Church of Connecticut. 1784."

There has been recently added to the Collection at Glenalmond the manuscripts and papers of the late Bishop Jolly of Moray.

The papers are stored in a chest, and consist of many unarranged documents and scraps of very varying character. Among them are many sermons and prayers, much correspondence, especially letters addressed to Bishop Alexander at Alloa, and Bishop Petrie at Meiklefolla. There is also a register of Bishop Jolly's own letters to his friends from the year 1816. He died in 1838.

The following manuscripts which bolonged to Bishop Jolly are ranged on shelves in the Muniment Room at Glenalmond.

The Ancient Liturgy of the Church of Jerusalem being Bishop Rattray's original manuscript.

Bishop Archibald Campbell's Sermons on the Gospels. 2 vols, 4to.

Many Manuscripts of Bishop Forbes of Caithness, 1762–75. Among these are several folio volumes con- taining sermons, letters, journals, and poems. In one of these is inserted Journal of a Journey to and from John o' Groat's House in 1762, with many minute details of description, and incident, Also notes of a visit to England in 1764. Journal to and from Inver- ness, Rosshire, Strathnairn, Lochaber, and Appin, in 1770.

An account of the papers relating to a Concordate between the Greek Church and the Catholic remnant of the British Churches.

Another copy of the proposal for a Concordate with Preface by Thomas Brett, March 30, 1725. At the end occur "the points on which the conference with the Greeks is to be held" then a letter in answer to the question what is the present true state of the Greek Church as to doctrine and worship: very long. " The " above letter [of Bishop Campbell I suppose] taken " from a copy in Bp. Petrie's handwriting. A. JOLLY."

A volume of original Letters between the Easterns and the non-juring Bishops, some of them in Greek.

The papers at Glenalmond are very miscellaneous in character, but from their mode of arrangement they are readily accessible with the help of the Inventory. Many of them give historical facts not to be found else- where, and I cannot doubt that Calendars will be found of great service.

JOHN STUART.

REPORT ON THE RECORDS OF THE ROYAL BURGH OF MONTROSE.

From an early period of our history, one of the Royal Castles was placed at Munros, near the mouth of the South Esk, and the huts of those who sought for shelter under its walls, doubtless, formed the origin of the town, which in later times came to be known as the Burgh of Montrose.

At this castle King William the Lion made his occa- sional residence, appointing, as its gate-ward, a man of the name of Crane, with certain lands annexed to the office. In 1261 the succession to those became the subject of legal proceedings, from which it appears that Crane was succeeded in the office by Swayne his son; after whom came Simon, son of Swayne, leaving five daughters; when, questions having arisen on the subject, they were determined by an inquest of seven- teen of the barons of Angus and the worthier of the burgesses of Munros. By them it was found that no military services or aids had ever been demanded from Crane and his successors, and that nothing was exigible beyond the duties of the office. (Acts of the Parlia- ments of Scotland, vol. i., p. 90.)

In the time of King Malcolm IV. the town appears as a Royal Burgh. That monarch granted to the Abbey of Jedburgh the church of St. Peter of Rostynoth in Angus with its revenues, part of which consisted of the tithe of his ferm or rent of Munros, with the tithes of his salt pans and his mill of Munros.

It is not easy to trace the process by which the earlier " towns " passed into the condition of Burghs Royal,—as no Scottish Charter to a Burgh, containing words of erection is known to exist, and the earliest burghal charters are more of the nature of writs sur- rounding with protection, and conferring exclusive privilege on communities which had already attained a measure of corporate existence, than deeds creating or erecting them into burghs.

The privileges thus conferred were not confined to the more town or burgh, but were extended over a wide district of country, within which the rights of trading belonged exclusively to the favoured burgesses.

Thus it appears from a charter granted by King David II. to the burgesses of Montroso, on 6th March 1352, confirmiug one of earlier date, that the burgh boundaries extended from the water of Thawhoko as far as Findoune, and from Findoune through the north parts as far as the water of Carudy, and so descending through the south part as far as the water of Peychty as it runs in Drumlay, thus including a district which, approaching to Aberdeon on the north, reached nearly to Dundee on the south.

The maintenance of their exclusive rights within so large a district frequently led the inhabitants of Mont- rose into legal proceedings, and to apply for fresh Royal Charters of Confirmation. Their monopolising spirit prompted them on occasions to interfere even beyond their own limits, for it appears by a letter of complaint from the community of Banff, addressed to the Guar- dians of the Kingdom of Scotland in 1291 (among the Records of the Burgh of Aberdeen), that the burgesses of Montrose were in the way of obstructing and dis- turbing certain fairs in Aberdeen established by Alexander III., for the common weal of all his burgesses on the north of the Mounth.

Digitized by Google

Many of the early documents in the Archives of the Burgh are connected with those proceedings, and are of considerable value for understanding the nature of the corporate privileges conferred on our early towns, and the progress of trade amid the obstructions which oppressed it.

Thus David II., by a writ of the same date with the Charter just cited, found that certain infractions of the burghal privileges had taken place at Brechin and Fordoun, and ordered proclamation to be made, "ne "quis de cetero apud Brechyn de lanc corijs aut pel- "libus lanatis, aut apud Fordoune vel in quocunque "alio loco, infra metas et bundas burgi nostri de "Monros, per predecessores nostros Reges Scotie con- "cessas, et limitatas, de quibuscunque rebus venalibus "nobis magnam vel paruam custumam debentibus, "fora aliqualiter teneat, foueat aut exerceat, vel illuc "prenissa emendo vel vendendo accessum habeat."

With regard to Brechin, which was the Burgh of the Bishop with certain privileges of its own, the above prohibition was of little avail, and accordingly on 25th January 1364 King David issued a writ to the sheriff of Forfar for taking down the market cross of Brechin.

The same monarch, in the year 1359, erected the Town of Inverbervy into a free Burgh with all the privileges and rights belonging thereto, but with a reservation which recognized the earlier exclusive interests of Montrose and other Burghs, "ita tamen quod "libertates per nos sic concesse, non cedant in damp- "num seu gravamen lesionem aut subversionem liber- "tatum burgensibus nostris de Aberden, de Munrosse, "et de Dundee, per predecessores nostros Reges Scotie "aut per nos concessarum." (Original at Bervie.)

To regulate the commercial intercourse between the Burghs of Montrose and Forfar, a convention was entered into on 1st Sept. 1372 by the Brethren and Burgesses of Gild of Monros on the one part, and the Brethren and Burgesses of Gild of Forfar on the other part, so that the Burgesses of Montrose should have in the said Burgh of Forfar and bounds thereof, within the shire of Forfar, free entry and exit, and liberty of buying and selling all merchandize pertaining to Gilds, and the Burgesses of Forfar should enjoy the like liberty in the Burgh of Montrose,—and with provisions against the market of Brechin.

On 27th February 1447 the Burgh asserted its exclusive jurisdiction by re-pledging from the King's Justice-air at Dundee certain of its own burgesses by an instrument still among their Charters.

Disputes of long standing existed between the Burghs of Montrose and Dundee as to their trading privileges and respective boundaries.

In 1448 there is a Notarial Instrument regarding the position of Montrose in respect of these differences.

On 4th February 1449 there is a writ by King James II., in which there is a clause of reference to sundry noblemen for settling the disputed points between the two Burghs.

On 8th July 1458 a notarial copy is made of a writ by David II., in which he ratified the former privileges of the Burgh of Montrose, and debarred the Burgh of Dundee from exercising trading privileges within the bounds therein specified.

On 3rd Sept. 1462 the disputes were still unadjusted, when James II. granted a writ for settling the boundaries of the Burghs of Montrose and Dundee.

The jealousy towards the town of Brechin on the part of the Burghs of Montrose and Dundee has been noticed. It probably led to an attempt on the part of Brechin to obtain a legal sanction to their asserted position, and on 1st September 1451, James II., by a Charter to the Bishop of Brechin, conferred the right of holding a market at Brechin on Sunday, with a Cross in such spot as the Bishop should choose; and with the privileges of buying and selling wool, skins, and leather, and freedom to enter with their boats and ships the waters of Southesk and Tay; all to be held of the Bishop for the time.

No reservation like that in the Charter to the Burgh of Inverbervie of the previous rights of Montrose and Dundee occurs here. On the contrary, the rights are conceded, "non obstantibus quibuscunque literis, con- "cessionibus, assedationibus per nos predecessores "nostros, seu camerarios aut alios quoscunque, bur- "gensibus de Montross, de Forfare, et de Dunde, de "eorum burgis et bondis, aut aliis quibuscunque "huc-usque concessis aut faciendis." (Registrum Episcopat. Brechinen, vol. i., p. 169.)

It was not to be expected that the Burghs, whose rights were thus infringed, would submit without remonstrance, and accordingly we find a protest against the Charter to Brechin on the part of the Burgh of Dundee, dated 1st January 1451, in which they "pro- "test that sen we ar left of Kyngis of this realme with "bowdis and fredemys as our feftmentes and charteris "proportis in thaim self, that this pretendit feftment "to Brechyn purchest of fals suggestioun be infor- "mationa of partiale personys . . . turn us nor "our infeftments to our prejudice, na skathe, in tyme "to cum, gif we be law may hafe remede thereof." (Registrum Episcopat. Brechinen, vol. ii., p. 314.)

The following two papers in the collection at Montrose relate to the same subject:—

Procuratory, dated 12th June 1464, by the Provost and Baillies of Montrose, for debarring the inhabitants of Brechin from loading or livering, or selling any goods, within the privileges of Montrose.

Decreet by the King and his Council, at the instance of the Burgh of Brechin, against the magistrates of Montrose.

Fresh and more extensive infringements of the exclusive rights of Montrose called for another interposition of the Royal authority. James IV., on the narrative that the burgesses of Montrose suffered loss by the exportation of wool, skins, salmon, haddocks, and other merchandise, against the privileges granted to them, at the ports of Stanehiffe, Gowrdone, and other coast places, as also by daily markets of like goods by men not burgesses, at the church of Fordoun, Federesso, Fethircarne, and other places within the freedom of the said burgh, of new ratifies their privileges and prohibits all infringement thereof.—20th December 1506.

There are in the Burgh archives many other Royal Charters of Confirmation, among which is one by King Robert II. dated in 1384, confirming another of his predecessor David II. granted in 1369.

From King Robert II. the burgesses received a grant of a piece of ground for the erection of a court-house or tolbooth, by a charter dated 14th December 1376.

Of miscellaneous papers worthy of notice are:—

"Copie of the Indenture betwene the town of Mon- "trose and the Heritor of Hedderwick, anent the "marches, 10th April 1375." Contract of wadset between Lady Mary of Douglas, Countess of Angus, and William the Graham, with consent of his son, and the Alderman and Council of Montrose, of an annual rent of 10 marks, payable out of the lands of Old Montrose, 25th November 1460.

Commission for a contribution to the poor of Montrose, 24th April 1494.

Remission by Queen Mary to the Burgesses of Montrose for joining with the English, when they landed at the Castle of Burghtie at Dundee, 28th March 1552; with reference to which it may be remarked, that when Edward I. had subdued Scotland, Montrose alone of the Burghs in Angus took the oaths of allegiance to the conqueror, 12 of its burgesses having gone to Berwick, in August 1296, for that purpose.

"The Town of Montrose's acceptance to be under the English Commonwealth, April 1652."

Besides the papers which I have here specified, there are many others of the 15th and 16th centuries relating to the Ancient Hospital of Montrose, altarages within the Parish Church, and the House of Dominican Friars in the Burgh. Of the altars, three were respectively dedicated to St. Andrew, St. Bride, and St. Sebastian.

It appears to me that calendars of the Documents which throw light on the constitution and trading privileges of the Burgh would be useful, as part of the series which I have suggested in my previous Report on the Manuscript Materials of Scottish History.

THE RECORDS OF THE UNIVERSITY OF ST. ANDREW'S.

During the Celtic period of the history of Scotland, there was at St. Andrews a Monastery or House of Culdees, and as we have recently become acquainted with the existence in other Scotch monasteries of that class, of the Fer-legrum, or man of learning, an official who also figures prominently in the records of the early religious Houses of Ireland), we may infer that he was to be found in the Monastery at St. Andrews.

The duties of the Fer-legrim, according to Colgan, embraced the transcription of manuscripts, and ruling and teaching in the schools, and through his means the learning of the day was preserved and inculcated.

The introduction into Scotland of fresh elements of society, both ecclesiastical and civil, which began when the Saxon Princess Margaret was wedded to the Celtic Chief of Alba, resulted in the depression of such of the earlier monastic establishments as would not submit to canonical rule and episcopal control. At St. Andrews the conflict between the old and new order of things was long maintained, and during its continuance we get a glimpse of the Fer-legind in a controversy with the new fashioned Prior and Canons who had been established in a Priory almost close to the earlier Culdee House.

This dispute was settled between the years 1211 and 1216, in such wise, that the Prior was bound to pay to Laurence the Ferleyn, or lecturer (who was also Archdeacon of St. Andrews), for the use of the poor scholars of St. Andrews, the old "cane" of the lands in dispute, amounting to 40 stones of cheese, 70 measures of barley, and a sheep.

The monastic schools continued to afford a large proportion of the instruction which the youth of the country could receive in their own land, while many of those, who wished for higher degrees than they could thus attain, went to England and to the Continent, to finish their studies in the Universities which had long been flourishing there.

In the progress of affairs the intercourse with England became obstructed and precarious, while the love of learning had become so diffused as to call for the benefits of its higher culture at home.

The man to whose enlightened spirit Scotland was indebted for her first University, was Henry Wardlaw, who was promoted to the Episcopal Seat of St. Andrews in 1403.

This Prelate, by his Charter, dated 27th February 1411, founded a University at St. Andrews, conferring on it many immunities and privileges, and defining its constitution and objects. Various Bulls were granted by Pope Benedict XIII., in the year 1413, for clothing the infant establishment with the ecclesiastical sanction required to complete its character as a studium generale, in which might be taught theology, canon and civil law, the arts, medicine and other lawful faculties; while King James I. added the royal confirmation by a Charter, dated 20th March 1432.

In little more than 40 years after the foundation of the University, the College of St. Salvator was established within it by James Kennedy, who succeeded Wardlaw in the see in the year 1440. The Bishop's first Deed of Foundation was confirmed by Pope Nicholas V., and a second one, with improved arrangements, received the sanction of Pope Pius II., in 1458.

A second College within the University owed its origin to Alexander Stewart, Archbishop of St. Andrews, and John Hepburn, Prior of the Convent there, who founded St. Leonard's College for the study of philosophy and theology in the year 1512. In progress of time these two Colleges were united into one establishment.

The College of St. Mary was founded by Archbishop James Beaton in the year 1537, and he procured for it the confirmation of Pope Paul III. in the course of the same year. It received from Archbishop John Hamilton a fresh Deed of Erection in 1553.

The Records of this ancient seat of learning thus consist of three branches, namely, that of the University, that of the United Colleges, and that of St. Mary's College.

The Records of the University comprise the Deeds of Foundation and Confirmation already referred to. They are in good order, and have been printed in the Appendix to the Report of the Commission on the Universities of Scotland, dated in 1830.

Amid a mass of verbiage in which these documents are expressed, there are hidden many valuable illustrations of the educational arrangements and principles of the time, as well as of the position, habits, and duties of the members of the institutions.

The foundation of the University did not imply the erection of any buildings for the conduct of its affairs, but simply the creation of a corporate body in St. Andrews for teaching, with powers of conferring degrees, and with various privileges and immunities. These are specified with considerable detail in Wardlaw's Deed of Foundation, and the Confirmatory Bull by the Pope.

In 1444 an agreement was entered into between Bishop Kennedy on the part of the Members of the University and the citizens of St. Andrews, defining minutely the relations which were to prevail between them, and among other things providing that the houses and hospices of the city, might be rented for the accommodation of Members of the University.

The privileges of the University, were confirmed, and in some points enlarged by Archbishop Shevez in 1479. They were renewed by King James IV., in 1512, by James V. in 1522, in 1525, in 1532, and in 1535, by James VI. in 1579 and 1607, by Charles I. in 1633, by Charles II. in 1672, and by James VII. in 1685.

The Colleges were each of them provided with buildings, and the Members were bound to residence within them.

The Charter of Bishop Kennedy by which he founded the College of St. Salvator in 1458, contains various interesting provisions as to the duties of the members of the foundation.

A Bull of Pope Pius II. dated in 1468, conferred on the College the privilege of granting degrees in theology and the arts.

For the College of St. Leonard, Prior John Hepburn framed a Code of Statutes, regulating the teaching, studies, and mode of life of the members on the foundation. These are of peculiar value, amid a dearth of such materials, for the insight which they afford into the Scotch College life of the day. They are divided into eight heads with the following titles:—I. De modo recipiendi. II. De Divino Officio. III. De modo interius Conversandi. IV. De modo exterius exeundi. V. De Magistro, Capellanis, et Regentibus. VI. De aliis in nostro Pauperum Collegio conversari volentibus. VII. De correctione delinquentium. VIII. De infirmis. et defunctorum suffragiis.

The new deed of foundation of St. Mary's College by Archbishop John Hamilton in 1553 defines with great exactness the duties, and mode of dress, and living of the members, and some of its provisions show the progress of ideas in matters of education which had occurred since the erection of the University.

Archibald Hay came from the College of Montague at Paris to be Principal, to which office he was promoted in 1546, some years before the Constitution of the College was finally settled by Hamilton. In 1540 Hay printed at Paris, a Panegyrical Oration on the elevation of Archbishop Beaton to the dignity of Cardinal, wherein he paints in strong colours the abounding corruptions in the Church, and the dangers which their continuance must involve. He also lays down a plan of teaching for the new College which the Cardinal was employed in organizing. He wished for teachers, who could instruct in the three learned languages, and if it should be thought proper to add those who could teach in Chaldee and Arabic, he would warmly approve "quandoquidem cum Hebraica magnam habent affinitatem, et plurima sunt illis duabus linguis scripta, quæ non parum sint habitura momenti ad rerum pulcherrimarum intelligentiam." He would like to see the study of Plato supplant the subtle arguments of the schoolmen, while he laments the neglect of the Roman law, and the uselessness of many of the glosses and commentaries on the Canons and Decrees.

The Deeds which I have described illustrate the ideas and principles on which our great educational institutions were founded and conducted previous to the Reformation. For understanding the re-arrangements and adaptations which after that event were considered necessary "the new foundation and confirmation of the three Colleges in the University of St. Andrew with the ratification thereof by the King and Parliament of Scotland in 1579," furnishes the necessary information. This change followed on the Report of certain Commissioners for inquiry named by the King, of whom George Buchanan was one.

It appears to me that Calendars of the pregnant passages of these documents would serve many purposes of literary research, and I refer to the suggestion in my Report on the Manuscript Materials of Scottish History, for a collation of the clauses as to teaching, in the Deeds of foundation of all the Scottish Universities.

There are lists of the students in the University and Colleges. The first volume draws back to the foundation of the University and is entitled "Acta facultatis artium ab initio studii Sancti Andree, fundati et inaugurati per Benedictum papam, MCCCCXIII." Then follow for the respective years "Nomina bachalariorum," "Nomina magistrorum," "Nomina licentiatorum," "Nomina determinancium." There are also lists of the Rectors of the University from 1412, and Acts of Visitations of the College at various times.

Among Records of a miscellaneous character is a Register of Charters and Leases connected with the College of St. Salvator, the first dated in 1456. In it is:

Memoranda of Chaplainries founded in the College of St. Salvator.

Compota of the expenses of the Masters and Students of St. Leonard's College, and of the general funds of the College, beginning in 1550.

A small volume in parchment entitled "Registrum Ciuitatis Sancti Andree" contains an account the foundations in the Parish Church of the Holy Trinity, beginning with the rents of the Altar of the Holy Cross. One of these rents was derived "de quolibet aratro "infra dictam parochiam" which paid "annuatim "xxiiii. garbe auenarum. Item componens caseum "infra dictam parochiam solnet unam formellam de "melioribus."

These payments, the first of which seems to be analogous to the plough-alms of the Saxons, of a penny from every plough-gate, were probably inherited from the Celtic period, when extensive grants of land and privileges were conferred on the Church of Saint Andrews.

Rental of the Altar of St. Laurence, Martyr, founded by Robert Drydeu, Rector of Kinnettles.

Rental of the Altar of St. Ninian founded by the brothers and sisters of the fraternity of St. Ninian, and of St. Felan, gifted by the town to a chaplain in 1449.

The volume contains many valuable illustrations of local topography and family history. One of the Deeds engrossed in it is a grant by the City of St. Andrews to John Ramsay of the office of Parish Clerk, dated June 1459, which throws some light on the duties and emoluments of these functionaries. Ramsay was promoted on the resignation of John Brown who reserved "commoditates et emolumenta ruralibus dicto clerico de- "bita et consueta" from all the parishioners beyond the city, "salvis tamen et exceptis oblationibus faciendis per "eosdem parochianos in sponsalibus, et matrimonia, "purificacionibus mulierum, et obsequiis mortuorum, "et aliis miuntis oblacionibus dicto clerico parochiali "pertinentibus, quibus idem Johannes Ramsay libere "gaudebit . . . faciendo inde dictus Johannes Broun "pro toto tempore vite sue pro hujusmodi commodita- "tibus et emolumentis ruralibus nobis et parochianis "dictis seruicia infra scripta, viz., quod ipse Johannes "Broun in propria persona, vel alius sufficiens pro "ipso, misse nostre famine in ecclesia parochiali pre- "dicta cum nota cotidie celebrande, singulis diebus "intererit, ac etiam ministrari faciet dictis parochianis "ruralibus, singulis ebdomadis, de aqua benedicta, "sufficienter, prout decet, secundum antiquam consue- "tudinem landabilem et consuetam, tantum pro alio "seruicio quod pro dictis commoditatibus et emolu- "mentis ruralibus exigi poterit."

Memorandum of the settlement of a dispute between the Bishop and the Culdees in 1303, wherein is contained an extract from the Register of St. Andrews which itself has been lost for nearly two centuries.

Note of a Settlement of disputes between the Bishop and the citizens dated in 1444.

Charter in 1614 by George Archbishop of St. Andrews to the Provost and Bailies of St. Andrews ratifying all old charters granted in favour of the town, and engrossing those of Bishop Robert, Bishop Roger, Bishop David, Malcolm King of the Scots, and others.

In a Miscellaneous Volume entitled "Charters Uni- "versity, St. Andrews" are engrossed the Deeds of foundation of St. Salvator's College, and many writs connected with its property, foundations of bursaries, and parish churches belonging to the College.

At page 61 occurs a notice of the proceedings against Patrick Hamilton, Abbot of Fearn, who was condemned to be burnt before the gates of St. Salvator's College for heresy in the year 1527. It is entitled "Libellus "signatus sigillo magno Universitatis Sanctiandree, "continens errores quondam Patricii Hammilton, "heretici, condemnatique pro eiusdem suis heresibus "combusti. Registratus et locatus in communi archa "custodie euidenciarum Collegii Sancti Saluatoris "Universitatis prefate in ꝯ scrinio."

A thin octavo volume in parchment is entitled "Ren- "tale Altaris Sancti Fergusii, situati infra ecclesiam "parochialem Sancti Andree," 1525. This is one of a class of records not common in Scotland, and it contains notices of considerable historical interest.

It gives an account of the foundation of the Altar by William and Thomas Kairnis, adding that William Cubbe, the first chaplain, served 40 years, and William Malwyn, the second, seven years. On his resignation James Braid was appointed chaplain towards the end of the fifteenth century, and most of the volume is occupied with a record of his gifts to the altarage "In "honore Dei Omnipotentis, beate Marie Virginis, et "beatorum Fergucii episcopi, et Triduane Virginis."

In the Legends of the Scottish Church, St. Triduana is represented as one of the Companions of St. Regulus in his mission, leading an eremitical life at Rescoby in Angus, and dying at Restalrig near Edinburgh, where she was held in reverence down to the Reformation. St. Fergus, on the same authority, was one of the many early missionaries from Ireland, who carried the faith into Scotland, founding churches in various districts, and at last dying at Glammis, of which parish he is the Patron Saint.

The gifts thus bestowed by Braid consisted of lands, houses, annual rents, ornaments and books, and he left his mark in the many improvements which he carried out, planting trees in the garden, constructing a sewer, and erecting "tria solia in tenemento Sancti Fergucii "jacente in Argaill. Et in eodem tenemento con- "struxit sex caminas. Similiter in eodem tenemento "construxit unam aulam cum camera pro solio voca- "tam Dunseis haw."

He also bequeathed "unum magnum lectum ligneum, "cum parvo lecto eidem annexo sive coniuncto, unam "magnam prepuram majori lecto annexam, unum "sedile, unum le Westhell bynk, annexum sub le trap, "cum predicta terra anteriore pro perpetuo reman- "suris." He likewise gave "unum librum manu sua "propria scriptum, continentem in se seruicia et "legenda Sanctorum bene Cathenatum. Item unum "peruum Missale manu sua propria scriptum, in "papiro lumbardic."

He procured from the King a bone of St. Triduana from Restalrig, and in like manner he obtained from David Lyone, tutor of Glammis, part of the neck-bone, and a joint of St. Fergus from Glammis, where the relics of the Saint were long held in great regard. So much was this the case that on one occasion an Abbot of Scone carried off his skull to the monastery of Scone, where it came to be celebrated for the miraculous cures effected through its means, and on a visit to Scone by James IV. in 1503 he made "an offerande of xiiiis. to "Sanct Fergus heide."

One of the ornaments of the Altar was a stone image of St. Fergus.

Among the loose papers in the Collections of the University may be noted a roll, in a hand of the 13th century, of Charters in favour of the city of St. Andrews, and a page of parchment rescued from the binding of a folio, which exhibits the "Ave Maria" set to music, probably of the 14th century. According to Boece, the religious men of the priory of St. Andrews were always celebrated for their skill in music.

There are few manuscripts in the University Library. Of these one is a copy of the works of St. Augustine written probably in the 14th century. On folio first, is a table of the contents, and above it the inscription, "Liber Monasterii Sc'i Andree Ap'li in Scocia."

Another is "Liber Politicorum Aristotelis," a volume in vellum of the 14th century. On a leaf at the beginning is written "Robertus Stewnis Deirensis "Uenobii," showing that the volume had at one time belonged to Robert Stephen, who was Prior of the Cistercian Monastery of Deer, in Aberdeenshire, in 1537.

A copy of Wyntown's Cronikl (T. T. 66) is in a hand of the 16th century. On a page at the commencement is written, "Regis inclite Roberti primi apothegma."

Some of the lines are underscored, in red, after the book comes down to the History of Scotland, and at places where quotations are given and where occasional remarks on words in the text occur in the margin.

At the bottom of one of the pages of Lib. V., Ca^m V^us, xvii. is written—

"Patrik Lermonthi,

This gentleman flourished about the middle of the 16th century. He was Provost of St. Andrews, and in the year 1549 he received from John Roull, Prior of Pittenweem a grant of the Isle of May.

At the line "Yat in his court yar was a Kynclit," is written, in an old, but later hand, "hoc fabula."

At the line about the election of Bishop Arnold, where the MS. has "Bischope of Kelsow apone Tweyd," the annotator has scored out the last word, and inserted "clyd" and added the words, "1161 ye yeir yat ye "Kirk of Androiss was foundit."

The last title in the book is "Quhen ye Erle off Mar "of Scotland past on Cowndyt in to England," and the last lines are—

The signature seems to be later in date than the writing of the manuscript.

At the end, and also in a later hand than the body of the manuscript, is a Chronicle of Scotland, containing the fabulous account of the early settlement of the Scots, which for some time formed part of the national creed.

A volume in the University Library, entitled "For- "mulare Instrumentorum Ecclesiasticorum," is deserving of especial notice. It is a small quarto, in a hand of the middle of the 16th century, of 635 folios, besides 65 prefatory leaves; on one of which is written "Taxe ecclesiarum et monasteriorum Regni Scotie de "quibus consistoriliter disponi consuevit, prout tax- "antur in libris Camere Apostolice," followed by the "Summa" of names of all the churches of the Diocese of St. Andrews, and an Index of Contents.

The varied nature of the subjects treated of may be gathered from the titles of those under A., B., and C.

A.—Absolutiones, aggraviatoria, assignationes, attornatus, admissiones, assedationes, et acceptationes; appellationes et apostoli, ac arresta, et additiones, ac admissiones, et arreptiones.

B.—Breuia, et bacchalariatus.

C.—Commissiones diuerse; constitutiones diuerse; constitutiones processuum; cassationes, consecrationes, coadiutorie, et concessiones; constitutiones procuratorum; concordie, contractus, conuentiones et compromissa, ac compulsoria; confirmationes et illarum additiones; cessiones, confessiones, et consensus pro erectionibus et aliis faciendis; carte diuerse et infeodationes; collationes, et commendo beneficiorum; citationes diuersarum formarum."

The "Formulare" contains the Synodal Statutes of Archbishop Forman (between 1515 and 1521), the letters of Archbishop Beaton of St. Andrews and of Archbishop Dunbar of Glasgow, convoking the General Provincial Council in 1536, the letters of Cardinal Beaton, summoning the General Convention of St. Andrews in 1543, and the General Provincial Council of St. Andrews in 1546, with a few other writs illustrating the procedure in Scottish Synods in the same age.

In the volume are more than 600 writs to serve as styles, which may be said to illustrate every kind of process in the Roman Court or at home, in cases of matrimony, divorce, heresy, institution, dispensations, illegitimacy, benefices—their union, vacancies, translations —showing the practical working of the ecclesiastical system, its pervading influence, and its contact with individuals in every relation of life, civil or ecclesiastical.

At fol. 148 occurs "Monitorium perhorrendi anathe- "matis contra Lutheranos, et heretice pravitatis fau- "tores, ut infra 'Gavinus miseratione divina archiepi- "'scopus Glasguensis decano Christianitatis nostre de "'N., necnon curatis parochialium ecclesiarum de .'" Those against whom it was directed are accused of disputing "in colloquiis, conuiuiis, potationibus, et pub- "licis societatibus, et conuenticulis quibuscumque, recitare, "affirmare, asserere et sustinere, aliqui autem eorum "['diuersos noui testamenti libros, Anglicana lingua "'impressos ac alios'—interlined] libros codicillos, et "cartas hereticas, opiniones predictas continentes, "legere, interpretari, et studere, sint ausi," &c.

In the archives of the United Colleges of St. Salvator and St. Leonard, is a very extensive collection of Charters founding and endowing altarages and other ecclesiastical institutions, the property of which came to be vested in the Colleges after the Reformation. Some of these charters are dated in the 13th century, and for purposes of local history the whole are of great importance. There are also the Bulls and Deeds connected with the foundation of the Colleges, to which reference has already been made, and their subsequent visitations and their property.

In a volume in parchment is written, in a hand of the 16th century, "Statuta Collegii Pauperum Domi- "norum Prioris et Conuentus Prioratus Sancti Andree "prope Ecclesiam Divi Leonardi situati," to which I have already referred as the rule, "brevis vitæ ordo," of Prior John Hepburn, the founder of the College.

Another volume contains a collection of styles of the 16th century—brieves and writs of various kinds—having in the beginning a copy of the code known as "Regiam Majestatem." Most of the brieves are in Latin, but some are in Scotch. One of them, "de "nativis," is where a man, for protection, gives himself up as a neyf or bond to a lord in his court, "per "crines anteriores capitis sui;" and afterwards where the nativus is adjudged to a lord, "ille dominus potest "redigere ipsum per nasum suum ad pristinam servi- "tutem."

It appears to me that Calendars of the Deeds of foundation, as well as of the miscellaneous Records now noticed, would be of great value. The "Formulare" reported on is of especial interest.

The Ormonde Muniments at Kilkenny Castle.

The present is but a preliminary notice of the results of an inspection of this collection, which was not available till the Report of the Commission for 1870 was on the eve of being closed.

These archives, as yet unarranged and uncatalogued, are rich in unique original documents, and constitute an invaluable series for elucidating the history of the numerous important affairs in which representatives of the Ormonde line were engaged from the 12th to the 18th century.

The family of Gaultier, subsequently styled "Botiller" and "Ormonde,"* held high rank among the Norman proprietors in England before Theobald or Tybaud FitzGaultier acquired large territories in Ireland in the 12th century. From that era members of this house were frequently entrusted with the government of the English dominions in Ireland, and their consanguinity with the royal stock of England was put on record by Edward III. in a public instrument. Apart from peerages and high offices, the Botillers exercised wide influence through the talents of many of their family in England, Ireland and abroad, as energetic men of the sword, diplomatists and administrators. Numerous alliances supported their importance, and in their Irish territories they ruled as almost sovereign princes, to some extent independent of the Kings of England. The actions of the more eminent representatives of the house of Ormonde are intimately associated with the annals of England and Ireland. Hitherto, however, the portion of their history most open to the world has been that connected with James, first Duke of Ormonde, who filled an important place in the history of England and Ireland during the times of Charles I. and Charles II.

An interest equally high in connection with their own times attaches to many others of this house, some of whom may be here briefly referred to. Edmund Le Botiller, created Earl of Carrick in 1315, viceroy for Edward II. during part of the Irish wars of the Bruces, is

* "The name of "Ermon," "Ormon," Ormonde or Ormounde, intended "to represent the Gaelic Ur-Mumhain, or Eastern Munster, was applied "to the lands in the north of Tipperary known to the natives as Mear- "craidhe Thire." History of Viceroys of Ireland, Dublin, 1865, p. 169.

mentioned in Barbour's poem; and various instruments connected with him appear among the "Historical and "Municipal Documents of Ireland," lately published in Lord Romilly's series. James Le Botiller, son of Edmund, Earl of Carrick, married Eleanor de Bohun, cousin german of Edward III., and was in 1328 created first Earl of Ormonde. Froissart speaks of the third Earl of Ormonde, for whose son Richard II. was godfather. James, the fourth Earl, eminent for his learning, served with Henry V. in France and acted as his Viceroy for Ireland. The fifth Earl, under his title of Wiltshire, Treasurer of England and knight of the garter, stands out among the Lancastrians in the "Wars of the Roses." The sixth Earl was Ambassador for Edward IV., who pronounced him to be the finest and most honourable gentleman in Christendom. Thomas, the seventh Earl, reputed the richest subject in England, where he owned above seventy manors, represented Henry VII. as envoy to Burgundy. During the reigns of Henry VIII., Mary, and Edward VI., the nets of Piers, the eighth Earl, and of his successor James, are interwoven with Irish public affairs. The true history of the reduction of Ireland to English rule at the commencement of the 17th century, cannot be understood without a knowledge of the documents written by and connected with Thomas the tenth Earl of Ormonde. The career of this nobleman, who was educated with Edward VI. in England, formed the themes of Latin and Irish poems, and Spenser has panegyrized him among the patrons of the "Faery Queen." Carte in 1735–6 devoted three volumes to a history of the life of James, the first Duke of Ormonde, from his birth, in 1610 to his death in 1688.* This Duke's son Thomas, Earl of Ossory, by his intrepidity as a commander on land and sea advanced the reputation of the English nation, which mourned his death as a public calamity.

Lord Ossory's son James, second Duke of Ormonde, truly described by Earl Stanhope as "a princely noble- "man endowed with many amiable qualities," held a prominent place in England and Ireland from the latter part of the 17th century till he became an exile in 1715. His biography is yet unwritten, but his position may be estimated from the following list of his titles and offices:—Earl of Brecknock, Baron of Lanthony and Moore Park, Earl of Ossory, Viscount Thurles, Baron Arklow, Lord of the regalities and liberties and governor of the county Palatine of Tipperary, and of the city, town, and county of Kilkenny, Honorary Chief Butler of Ireland, Lord Warden of the Cinque Ports, Constable of Dover Castle, Lord Lieutenant of counties of Somerset and Norfolk, High Steward of Exeter, Bristol, and Westminster, Chancellor of the Universities of Oxford and Dublin, Colonel of the first regiment of foot guards, Captain General and Commander-in-Chief of all the forces of England by sea and land, member of the Privy Councils in England and Ireland, Knight of the Garter, and Lord Lieutenant of Ireland. To these may be added another distinction—that of friend and benefactor of John Dryden.

Of the peerages held by independent branches of the Ormonde family, I may mention those of Aran, Cahir, Carrick, Dunboyne, Galmoy, Gowran, Ikerrin, Mountgarret, and Tulleophelim, each of which produced men of mark.

A minor Ormonde house furnished military commanders to Austria in the early part of the 17th century, amongst whom was Colonel Walter Butler, who, for services against Wallenstein, received a title and lands in Bohemia from Ferdinand II.

Materials happily survive at Kilkenny for illustrating the history of public transactions in which the chief members of the House of Ormonde and its branches participated.

These muniments also include many valuable writings which in early times came into the custody of religious establishments, and passed from them at their dissolution in the 16th century.

The late lamented and accomplished Marquis of Ormonde was desirous that the archives of his house should be available for the elucidation of the history of Ireland and the Empire. His representatives are prepared, through the Royal Commission for Historical Manuscripts, to carry out his enlightened views in such mode as may be most effective for the advancement of a true knowledge of the history of the men and times of which these documents are the memorials.

To the Report of the Commission for 1871, I hope to contribute details of importance in connection with this extensive and valuable collection.

THE MANUSCRIPTS OF THE RIGHT HONOURABLE THE EARL OF GRANARD, K. P., AT CASTLE FORBES, CO. LONGFORD.

The Archives at Castle Forbes may be divided into two classes, those specially connected with the family of Forbes—earls of Granard—and those which came to the latter through alliances with the houses of Moira and Huntingdon.

In the present report I propose to notice the first named of these classes.

According to genealogists the family of Forbes was of ancient Irish origin. Sir Arthur Forbes, founder of the house of Granard, was born about 1569, served under Gustavus Adolphus, and fell in a duel at Hamburgh in 1632.

His wife Jane, widow of Sir Alexander Hamilton of Killeshandra, Cavan, had previously, about 1624, erected Castle Forbes, in the county of Longford, which she defended in 1641–2 during nine months, against the uprising Irish.

Some details of this siege are given in a deposition of Lieutenant Arthur Achmuty and Martin Johnston of Castle Forbes, sworn on the 13th of September 1642, copies of which are in the present collection.

They state that Lady Forbes, anticipating dangers, furnished her castle with arms, ammunition, victuals, and men; gathered her British tenants of Longford, and kept strong watch and ward. The Irish of Leitrim bordering upon these parts having taken action, the whole of the British there rose in arms, and under Sir John Seaton fortified the castle of Longford, which they soon surrendered. Seaton, his lady and retainers, retired to Castle Forbes, and notwithstanding numerous sallies, effective musketry, and relief secretly given by friends among the besiegers during the dark nights, the garrison capitulated after Lady Forbes had given them all her great horses for food. We are told that they were permitted to march away with their wearing clothes to Trim, leaving behind their arms and ammunition, ten muskets only excepted: "So the lady Forbes, "Sir John Seaton, and his lady, and all the rest of the "castle, to the number of two hundred and twenty per- "sons, all maintained at the costs of the Lady Forbes, "came away upon the terms aforesaid to Trim and "thence to Dublin, through many dangers and mis- "eries."

The following document connected with those times is still extant at Castle Forbes, written on a double sheet of foolscap paper somewhat injured by damp.

"Good cossin,

The Forbes papers of a public character inspected by me relate chiefly to the transactions of Arthur first earl of Granard, and his grandson George, third earl, some of the chief points of whose careers may be here noticed.

Arthur, eldest son of the lady Jane Forbes of 1641, served under Montrose in Scotland, and retired to the Highlands with the royalists in 1653. This "gallant "gentleman, who had been a great sufferer for the King "both in his blood and estate," waited on Charles II. at Brussels in 1659–60 with a secret commission to invite him to Ireland. He was appointed in 1670 Marshal and commander-in-chief of the army in Ireland, and a Lord Justice in 1671. By his exertions the Presbyterian Nonconformists were relieved from the severities to which they and their ministers in Ireland had been subjected through episcopalian influence. Essex, Lord Lieutenant of Ireland, in his letters to Charles II. stated that Sir Arthur Forbes was "as worthy a man and as "faithful a servant to your Majesty as any person I "have ever known, of great use to me in many cir-"cumstances, most particularly in the affairs relating "to the army here, wherein he appears very just, "indeed as careful in his station as any man I have "ever known." Sir Arthur Forbes was created baron of Clanbrack and viscount Granard in 1675, raised the Royal Irish regiment of foot in 1684, was advanced to the earldom of Granard, reappointed a Lord Justice of Ireland and president of the Council there. He opposed the repeal of the Act of Settlement in the parliament of 1689, was in 1690 besieged unsuccessfully in Castle Forbes, joined William III., commanded the army to which Sligo surrendered, continued a privy councillor, and died in 1696. His son Arthur, second earl Granard, served under Turenne, and at the siege of Buda, and was Colonel of the Royal Irish regiment of foot, from which he retired on the accession of William III. For his suspected co-operation with the Stuarts he was thrice committed to the Tower of London, but was in favour with Queen Anne and received an offer of the governorship of Jamaica, which as a non-juror he declined, and died in 1734.

George, eldest son and successor of the second earl of Granard, acquired distinction in the English navy, governed Minorca in 1718, entered the service of the Emperor Charles VI. in 1719 to create and form a marine power in the Kingdom of Naples, Sicily, or in the Adriatic; was appointed governor of the Leeward Islands in 1719.

In 1730 he projected the foundation of a colony on Lake Erie, on the model of Maryland, as a barrier against the French in Canada. As envoy of Great Britain to Petersburg, in 1733, he negociated and concluded the first treaty of commerce made by England with Russia, various papers in connexion with which are in the present collection.

Lord Forbes was appointed Rear Admiral in 1734 and in the same year succeeded to the earldom of Granard.

In 1735 he was promoted Vice Admiral of the Blue, declined the governorship of New York in 1738, acted in the parliament of England in concert with the Duke of Argyle and Pulteney, retired from public office in 1740 and died in 1765 in his eightieth year. The third earl of Granard, characterised by his political opponent Sir Robert Walpole as "a curious and busy man," gave much attention to matters concerning coinage for Ireland, linen manufacture, political arithmetic, and natural science.

His second son, John Forbes, Admiral of the Fleet and general of the marine force of Great Britain, made a remarkable protest against the execution of Byng in 1757. He compiled in 1779 "Memoirs of the house of Forbes, "earls of Granard, in Ireland," which the present Earl published in 1868 from the MS. at Castle Forbes.

"I was very glad to see y^m^ of the 28 of the last month, & no mention in it of the continuance of y^r^ indisposition w^ch^ report^d^ had made more dangerous than I thank God it is; that very day our friend S^r^ Robert Murray died sudainly after a very strauge manor of w^ch^ you have doubtlesse heard from other hands. It is true I tould my L^d^ Aungier that I thought very injust & mutinous use had bin made of some letters you had shewen here, but I never heard that any letters writen by y^rself had bin exposed to that misfortune. Touching the other story concerning my L^d^ Lauderdaell & me, all I know is that I have bin tould his Grace should say that S^r^ Arthur Forbes would cary himself so dextrously betwixt him & the Duke of Ormond as that at last nether of them would trust him, to w^ch^ the answer I then made was, and the assureance I now give you is, that his Grace was very much mistaken if hee sayd so, & that it was not in his or in any body's power to make mee mistrust S^r^ Art. florbes of any thing not becomming a man of honour. Whether this was sayd by his Grace or no, or whether this bee the thing meant by my L^d^ Anngier, I cannot tell, but I am sure my answer was as I here tould you, & you may bee sure I am, with all reallity,

1675. Earl of Essex, Lord Lieutenant of Ireland, to Sir A. Forbes—holograph:

"S^r^, London, Sept. 25, 1675.

"There hath hapned a thing of some importance here w^ch^ in regard it relates to Ireland, & some persons may officiously write over & perhaps in such termes as may be to the disadvantage of a great person here who hath appeared much my friend & done me severall good offices, I conceive it may not be amiss y^t^ your selfe of whom I have a most perticular esteem do know the truth that so you may do right to the person concerned in case any storys be raised to his prejudice. On Thursday Mr. Pits, comptroler to the Duke, being called to the committee appointed by his Maj. to consider of the proposals for the new farme; he behaved himselfe in so unhandsome a manner as I have never seen the like, speaking in most rude & indecent termes to Mr. Secretary Coventre, & to my Lord Treasurer, & to the latter w^th^ most unworthy reflections; on Friday he was called again, the King himselfe being present, where he behaved himselfe still worse then before, & being pressed to explain w^t^ he ment by the words directed to my L^d^ Treasurer he said that w^ch^ he had to offer was upon the collections he had made by that w^ch^ he had heard from others, & being further urged to speake out & tell the substance of w^t^ he had to object, after many shiftings he said that my L^d^ Treasurer had an understanding w^th^ some of those who treated for the ffarme. My L^d^ Treas. behaved himself very worthily on the occasion, & the other rather like a madman then one who understood w^t^ he attempt^d^. His Maj. has appointed to morrow in the afternoon to hear the business. I am confident some by ends has provoked Pits to do w^t^ he has done, & 'tis fit he should smart severyly for it if he fail (w^ch^ I have good grounds to beleeve he will do) in his proofs. 'Tis late, & therefore I give you but this imperfect account to prevent misinformation,

Manuscript Books.

1. A volume in small quarto, paper, of 145 pages, lettered on back "Manuscript," but without any title-page or author's name. This book was transcribed apparently towards the middle of the last century by an unskilful hand. It is a narrative, giving details not elsewhere mentioned, in connection with the affairs of England and Ireland, from the Restoration to the accession of James II. The commencement is as follows:—

"After my Lord of Ormoud had passed near 70 years in different fortunes, another surge of favour set him a fourth time in the government of Ireland; he began the world low, for his grandfather came colatoraly to his title, and his predecessor Thomas (called the Black Earl) had left a daughter who marryed the Lord Dingiule, Earl of Desmond, and as their general began a furious contest with my Lord of Ormond for the inheritance. This debate was, after much expence, referred to the determination of King James the 1st, and each party gave bonds of 100,000*l.* to stand to his award, but when it was, the partition was so favour'ble to the Lord Desmond, who was his countryman, and one he had raised, that the Earl of Ormond would not submit to it, which occasioned his being imprisoned in the —— where for many years he very poorly. In this time the Duke of Ormond was born in London, while the Lord Thurles solicited the liberty of the old Earl; being yet very young his father was drowned passing into Ireland, and near the same time and in the same manner the Earl of Desmond, the latter leaving but one daughter, about 3 years younger than the young Lord Thurls, whose wardship was given to my Lord of Holland & she taken into his family. Some time after the old Earl of Ormoud likewise dying, his grandson, who had been taken from his mother and bred a protestant in my Lord of Canterbury's family, succeeded to his title and quarrell, but the sight of an agreeable young lady of an age so suitable to his, and of such a fortune, changed his animosity into a nobler passion, and made him think a divine fitter to end their difference than a judge. In this view he gained by money some of my Lord of Holland's and of her servants, and got into her acquaintance; he was a very handsome youth, the consideration of his person, of his name, the lowness of his fortune, were apt to work compassion, and the reflecting that she being the cause of his misfortunes might with herself end them, that it would be generous as well as just in her to do so, and make her be adored in a family nobler than her father's, of which she was now the horror, did so soften her tender heart, and she gave the young Earl marks of her pity; he began to think himself very happy and secure of re-establishing his family, but those hopes proved but very short lived."

The following passages illustrate the character of the volume:—

"My Lord of Ormond and Anglesey had always been of different partys, Anglesey had in King Charles the first time adher'd to the Parliament, he was the first of the Commissioners who received the sword, and city of Dublin from my Lord of Ormond when the King was a prisoner, and was a violent man in the House of Commons against the royal family. However, being with many others instrumental in the King's Restoration, he was made an Earl and had considerable clauses in the Act of Settlement in his favour; upon the executing of these my Lord of Ormond and he had some clashing, each driving his own interest or that of his friends, and it was impossible but in some cases they would interfere, at that time he was Vice-Treasurer of Ireland an employm[t] that was then worth 5 or 6000*l.* a year, and his approaching so near a competition with the Duke made it the harder for them to keep friends, there being little real friendship at court betwixt such as are equal. This employment he resigned to Sir George Carteret, and lived privately in England, but the King being pressed by the factions, and charged with introducing popery, and arbitrary power, made him Privy Seal, as a man that had always been in opposition to both, and yet one he thought would comply very far for his interest, and who might be useful to him in the House of Peers, being very knowing in records and presedents of Parliament, of a good tongue, & one who had an excellent faculty in writing. Some time after, and discreetly in the heat of the plot, my Lord Castlehaven took occasion to write and print an account of the war of Ireland in which he had been concerned, justifying the Irish in many respects. The Privy Seal, glad of an occasion to make his court to the Parliament, who began to strike at him, took upon him to answer this, and in confuting his book did (out of his way) bring a cruel charge against my Lord of Ormond of his evil conduct and neglect of the Protestant interest at that time. By this means, with the same action, taking revenge of an enemy, and making his court to a prevailing faction. When my Lord of Ormond saw this pamphlet he wrote a letter to my Lord Privy Seal, from Kilkenny, in which he charged him with the injustice of his proceeding, and after telling him he seemed to take pattern by the mercenary libellers of the age, with other very sharp reflections, protested against the account of the actions of that time in a history he was then writing, that was much talked of, as having in this pamphlet given a sample of his insincerity. At this time the King had dissolved the Parliament at Oxford, and asserted the cause of his friends with more vigour than before, which I believe made my Lord of Ormond think the Privy Seal would knock under the table, and not push forward this quarrel, but instead of that, he received a letter from him in answer to his, as well writ and better in every paragraph as wit and rage could make it; both these letters were extremly good of the kind, for whatever advantage my Lord of Ormond might have in precedence and court style, the other yielded nothing to it in sharpness and good sense; but how unseemly was it to see letters printed and cary'd about the streets, wherein two men the most to be respected of any in the kingdom for their employments, their quality, and their age treated each other as these did; surely this could not have been done in any other country but England or any other time than that. All things concurred to Anglesey's ruin, for besides the strength of his enemys and his having no friends, y^e court want^d his privy seal for the Lord Hallifax who had done it such service, so that when my Lord of Ormond put in a petition to the King in Council (in which, saying nothing of himself, he charged him with having reflected upon the memory of King Charles the 1st in his pamphlet to Castlehaven) and that a day was appointed for him to answer, he, seeing that the matter was set against him, and struggling would do him no good, did not appear, pretending to be sick, but sent a letter complaining of his hard treatment, in which he said that a dagger struck to his old loyal heart could not grieve him so as to have such a charge heard against him. This wrought no compassion, his seals were sent for and given as was before resolved.

"While the above-mentioned letters were passing, my Lord of Ormond, who was at Killkenny, in some leasure, writt a relation of the war of Ireland, and of those transactions in which he bore so great a part; every week as it came from his hand, he showed it me in loose sheets, and seemed resolved to publish it as soon as he went into England. Tho' I liked what he writ, I did not approve of that design, and I told him I feared it might be dangerous to do it so soon, for that my Lord of Anglesey who had long laboured at the history of those times, which was believed almost ready for the press, wo'd not fail to take advantage of it, let it be writt with never so much sincerity and caution, and a man who had so much malice and so bitter a pen, would find some occasion to expose it in a work that it was probable might last, whereas if he let his history come first abroad, he gained the advantage he otherwise gave. I know not if it were these or other reasons that weighed with him, but I have heard nothing since of those papers."

* * * *

"In the time of the King's exile, my Lord G[ranard] being in arms for him in the highlands of Scotland, contracted a friendship with my Lord Argyll, then Lord Lorn, who had engaged in the same case, tho' his father was so notoriously against it; this kindness was so real, that when my Lord G[ranard] was taken prisoner there, he was ransomed by Lord Lorn, when none else had any consideration for him; this friendship continu^d after the Restoration, untill the tryall, condemnation, & escape of the latter. I always thought my Lord G[ranard] was not enough concerned for that unfortunate man, after the obligations he had to him, and have sometimes told him that I wonder'd he did not go and fall at the king's feet to procure some tenderness for him; he told me it was what he would do if there was any prospect of serving him by it, but the prosecution of him was a matter of state, & his intercession in that manner might do himself hurt, and could be of no use to my Lord Argyle. Being at London with him in the year [16] 82, my Lord Argyle being said at that time to be in Switzerland, a stranger in a plain habit came one morning into his chamber, and gave him a note without a name, which he read and could make nothing of, so that he sent the bearer away somewhat roughly as a man that had a mind to banter him out of money; the man in going ont hoised his shoulders and mutter'd some complaints of the misfortune of such as depended upon old friendship; soon after, I coming into the room, my Lord told me how a fellow had a mind to get some money of him, and showed me the note, which I could make nothing of, no more than he; however, I found it had a certain air that methink it might have something more in it than we knew, and I advised him not to throw it away; he took my advice, and next day he told me he had shewed it to Coll H ——, who immediately judged it must come from my Lord Argyle, & my Lord said he was confirmed it was so, seeming much concerned that he had sent the bearer away so rudely, Argyle's former kindness to him deserving another treatment, whatever he might deserve from the Crown. I was privy to no more of this transaction at that time, but it happened that my Lord G[ranard] being very desirous to make amends for this proceeding with a man that he owed so much to, did not rest 'till by the means of my Lord M[urray], his son-in-law, he found out he was in London, and sent notice sent to him, so that a meeting was appointed; he found him in some retired part of the city, he dined with him, and stayed some hours, there being 2 or 3 more in company. I know not if he saw him after, or what passed at that betwixt them, but Lord Gra[nard] has since told me he advised him with much earnestness to trust to the King and Duke's goodness, whose minds would change in relation to him, and not to think by any violent ways to help himself, and yet his answers were such as fully answer'd him he would never join in rebellion, however, 'tis apparent since, those were not his thoughts. This meeting, how secret soever it was carryed on, was known quickly by others of the disaffected, whom it is probable Argyle told it to, to encourage them by so considerable a support, for that I am confident that engaging with him in any criminal thing was very far from the intentions of the Lord G[ranard], who was moved to this interview merely ont of a principle of generosity and gratitude, yet a man so desperate as Argyle was, would be apt to make use of it to another end, as I believe he did, and by this means Walcot and some others who were executed soon after, having correspondence with Argyle, amongst other discoverys they made, named my Lord G[ranard] as one who favoured their party, and who, had there been any commotion, was to head a considerable body in the north of Ireland, he having concerted this with my Lord Arg[yle] in London, where he had met and dined with him, they telling the rest of the comp^y with several circumstances. When my Lord G[ranard] had an account of this from London, he was not a little startled, the latter part being true, it was hard for him to excuse himself, as to the rest, and what he done in seeing in private a man attainted and outlawed for high treason, and who, as appeared after, was at that time contriving against the Government, was a great crime by the law, and so much he could not disown, while he was in the greatest uneasiness upon this account, being at the Curragh of Kildare with my Lord of Or[mond], he received two letters from England together, one from S^r Rob^t H[oward], which told him somebody had charged him with this matter, desiring him by all means to hasten over, the other was from my Lord Mid[dleton], which, without mentioning any particular, desired him to come for England, seeming to infer that such a journey would be for his advantage; he shewed the last of these letters to my Lord of Or[mond], who I found did not at all like it, and his son owned to me (he not knowing anything of his interview with my Lord Argyle) that he apprehended it was to drive somewhat towards the removal of his father, nor was he mistaken in his conjecture, it being contrived that these two letters should be writ, that my Lord Granard being frighted with the story of Argyle, might the easier be brought to do whatever was desired of him. This contrivance did not miss of success, for as soon as he came to London, and that the first he talked to increased his fears, Col. T[albot] got him, and with great demonstrations of kindness inforced to him the injury he had received not having a regiment of horse in Ireland, how the King was resolved to modell the army in another manner, that he had advised him as the fittest man to inform him in what related to that kingdom, with much more to that purpose, and when he went about to excuse himself as to Argyle, he told him that tho' some about Court strove to make a business of that, the King or Duke took no notice of what rogues spoke that were condemned, having entire confidence in him, and long proof of his services; but all this while he set others to teaze him with the danger of that information, and to tell him how requisite it was for him to find some way to gain the Duke. My Lord Mid[dleton] likewise, who did not care for my Lord of Or[mond], being embarked with another party helping this forward, and his own ambition drawing where his fear drove him, he encouraged the King in the design he had to reform the army of Ireland, and gave him a list of officers not qualified for their employments, which list was what T[albot] had first given him, tho' he seemed not to appear in the matter; when this was done, which was what was asked, he is made an Earl, declared injured by the informat^rs of rogues, and is sent home again, this being to be kept secret, untill my Lord of Or[mond] was removed with the rest, and the same brought he had more reason to keep it so than the new Earl, who besides deserting an interest which confided in him, and he had always pretended to adhere to & assert, had duped himself, and taken pains to put himself from being Lieut Generall, which must come to be a necessary consequence of what he had done."

The author's last entries of his transactions in England, 1685-6, are as follow:—

"While the new Lord Lieut waited at Holyhead for a wind my Lord T[yrconnel], to shew his neglect of him, hired a ship and went to Chester, and about a fortnight after my Lord C[larendon] was sworn, I went likewise for England, as well to pay what I ought to the King as to meet my sons that were to come out of France. His Majesty received me very well, but I soon found there were designes of changing most of the army in Ireland, and that the war was kindled against the Hydes; the King taken me into his closet, and questioned me very particular about the officers of my regim^t of whom I could give no ill character, tho' I found he wished and expected I would; by that, entertainments, and many other things, I saw I should meet great mortifications in Ireland, to avoid which, and at the same time to preserve my integrity and my employment, I co'd see no better way than to spend the summer with my son in Hungary. I proposed this to the King, who readily agreed to it, and Coll^o B. Forbes resolving on the same journey, we provided some more horses than what we had brought from Ireland, and having sent them with my son and kinsman some days before, left London together the 12th of April. Having been for some time sensible of the persecutions of my Lord D[anby], who strove on all occasions to feel his resentments for what was past by imposing upon my office, and the great rates he made us pay for powder and bad arms to the Tower, giving me ground enough, I resolved before I left London to let him see I was not to be injured safely, and being well prepared for it, put in a proposal to the King, by which I offer'd to furnish his magazines in Ireland with powder and much better arms, of which I produced patterns, that should be made in that kingdom, at a 4^th part less charge than was payed for them to the Tower; to this proposal Lord D[anby] and his officers gave a long answer, and I was to reply in two days. I apply'd myself to it, and got my paper ready in time, which I believe they did not expect, and had a long hearing before the Cabinet Council, all his officers appeared against me, and we debated the matter about two hours, at last having frighted his Lordship, and convinced the most knowing at the Board that I was in the right, to my great contentment it was given against me, tho' it would have been of honour, and of advantage to my employment, I saw the danger as things went of carrying what I desired, and the morning had agreed with my Lord Treasurer that tho' I wo'd shew my Lord D[anby], I would not be imposed upon, I wo'd be content not to explain myself too much, so all partys were pleased, and from that hour my Lord D. has been my very good friend. We landed at the Brille the 26th April (New Stile).

The remainder of the book is occupied with an account of the parts which the author and his companions took in 1686 as volunteers against the Turks at the siege of Buda, at which he tells us there were "men of quality "from all nations of Europe," and here Sir Robert Forbes, son of the first Earl of Granard, was mortally wounded.

Although the author of this volume does not mention his own name or title, the work appears to me, from various passages in it, to have been written by Sir William Stewart, first Viscount Mountjoy, while a prisoner in the Bastille in 1688-9. This nobleman's mother, Catherine, after the death of her first husband, remarried with the first Earl of Granard, to whom her son Alexander was granted in ward. Sir Alexander Stewart was created Viscount Mountjoy in 1682, held the office of Master-General of the Ordnance in Ireland, and was Colonel of a regiment of Horse. On the accession of James II. he was regarded by the Jacobites as head of the disaffected party in Ulster. Burnet, after observing that the latter "wanted a head," tells us that the Lords of Granard and Mountjoy were their chief military men, in whom they confided most; and Bishop King speaks of Mountjoy as "the likeliest man to head "them." In January 1688-9, Mountjoy and Baron Rice went as Commissioners from Ireland to James II. in France, where the former was committed to the Bastille, and detained there till exchanged for Richard Hamilton. Lord Mountjoy fell at the battle of Steinkirk in 1692. The fact of his having left the interesting narrative, now noticed, appears to have been hitherto unknown to historic investigators.

2. "Diary of Lord Forbes while envoy from Great Britain to Russia, commencing 10 May 1733 and ending 7 June 1734. Folio.

Extracts.

"1733, May y^e^ 10. Thursday, a little after nine in the morning his Lordship came on board the Charlot yacht at Dedford, which yacht was appointed to carry his Lordship on board the Lowestoff man-of-warr at the Nore. This ship was appointed to carry his Lordship to St. Petersburg. The yacht weigh^t^ at half-past nine and fel down with the first of the ebb, there being little wind veering betwixt the N.E. and S.E. Wee past by the Tuscany galley in which was embarked his Lordship's coaches, plate, and part of his equipage, the rest of his Lordship's equipage and all his servants being embarked on board the Lowestoff. At two in the afternoon the tide being neatt, anchored at Erif, little wind at S.E. At seven weigh^d^ again, and at one in the morning anchored off Lee.

"1733, May y^e^ 28. Monday, at one this morning had 28 fathom, at 2, it being fair day light, I began to write this day's journal, and last night could see to read till 10 o'clock. Fair weather, fresh gale at W., stood E., at 5 stood E.S.E. to make the land, 25 minutes after 3 saw the sun above the horizon, at 4. 15 fathom, soon after made the land S.E. by S., about 5 leagues of, at 6 being within 2 leagues of the land perceiv^d^ it to be Robsnuit. Steer'd away N.E. by E. within four miles of the shore. At noon abreast of the Scaw, lattitude by observation 57° 43^m^, several ships standing as we did, and 9 sails plying out, at half-past 12 hailed up S.E. about the Scaw, wind at W.N.W., at half-past 5 being past the Trindels hailed up S. by E., at 11 being past Anvows hailed up S.

"1733, May y^e^ 31. Thursday, wet weather, waited on Count Pless and Mons^r^ Blome Reg^ts^ in the absence of the King of Denmark, and on the younger Count Pless, Great Chamberlain, none of them at home. Mr. Brackel, the Russian Minister, sent to invite himself to dine with me at Mr. Titley's; Mr. Cuimans, the Dutch Minister, left his name at my door; spent the evening and supt by invitation at the elder Count Pless, the threasurer.

"1733, June y^e^ 1^mo^. Friday, saw the arsenal, and if I counted right, there was about 800 pieces of brass canons, great and small, with shot, carts and carriages for most of them, and all proper furnitures, 118 brass mortars, great and small, besides several canons and mortars of iron, 40,000 fire-locks and carablines with bayonets, swords, pistols, and cuirasces in proportion, all well disposed and in good order. I dined with the younger Count Pless by invitation, afterwards payd a visit to Mr. Cuyman and Mr. Brackel.

"1733, June y^e^ 8. Friday, fine weather, little wind at W. by N., the captain came on board at one this morning, conid not tell whether they should return the salute from the place, but offered to do it from the ships; Admiral Gordon wrote to me and sent me a letter from Mr. Rondeau. At three we weighed and anchored again within a mile at Crownstat, past seven Admiral Gordon came on board to see me, receiv^d^ him at the side with a guard and beat of drum, could not agree about the salute, but saluted him with 17 guns when he went away. Vice Admiral Saunders and Commodore Villoy came afterwards to visit me, saluted them with 13 guns. At 7 Mr. Rondeau, the King's Resident, came to see me; we went immediately on shore together, but call^d^ by the way on board the Alexandra, a Russia man-of-warr of 70 guns, that I might repay Admiral Gordon his visit; at parting from the Admiral he saluted me with three cheers and 17 guns, lay'd this night at Admiral Gordon's house in Crownstat.

"1733, June the 21. Thursday, returned all the rest of the Foreign Ministers' visits but the visit of Mr. Swarts, which was made to me this day in the afternoon. Went by water to the Monastery of Alexander Nefskey, 7 verses [sic] of to see the corps of the Dutchess of Mecklenbourg lying in state there.

"1733, June y^e^ 26. Tuesday, the Dutchess of Mecklenbourg was buried at the Monastery of Alexander Nepsky with great pomp and ceremony; endeavoured to see Count Osterman, but he excused himself.

"June y^e^ 27. Wednesday, the anniversary of the battle of Pultova which was kept hollyday and celebrated by firing of the cannon from the Castle. At 7 in the evening Mr. Kelderman, Secretary in the College for foreign affairs, came to tell me that I was to have an audience of Her Majesty to morrow at ten a clock, on which I sent him to Count Osterman and obtained an audience of him, and afterwards sent the Count a copy of the discourse I was to make to Her Majesty.

"1733, July y^e^ 1^mo^. Sunday, at past ten a clock went to the Summer Palace to take an audience of Her Majesty; Mr. Rondeau was with me in the coach, and my audience very private. In the evening went to wait on Count Osterman; General Count Levenvold set out for Warsaw this morning at 2 of the clock.

"1733, July 10. Tuesday, Her Majesty reviewed a regiment of cuirassiers, they were well mounted and armed, were all in buff westcoats with their cuirasses on, and scul caps over their hatts.

"1733, August 8. Wednesday, Count Osterman desired to speak with me at the cabinet; I delivered him the points for a treaty of commerce. A guard of a serg^t^ & 16 men was sent to my house.

"1733, September 3. Monday, Her Majesty reviewed her regiment of horse guards that arrived yesterday from Riga, of which she is colonel.

"1733, October the 20. Saturday, wrote to Lord Harrington. Her Majesty went about the streets in her sledge, the Great Chamberlain & General Ushakoff standing behind it.

"1733, Novemb^r^ 2. Friday, Her Majesty saw two batailllons of her foot guards exercised; a courier arrived from the army in Poland.

"1734, January the 3. Thursday, was shown at Court a very fine present from the Emperor of China, it was exposed in Her Majesty's bed chamber, consisted of bars of gold, china ware, & silks.

"1734, January the 6. Sunday, the ceremony of blessing the waters, seven regiments drawn up on the river.

"1734, January the 27. Sunday, the Persian Ambassador made his entry, & arrived from Mosco with a train of about 60 persons.

"Jan. 28. Monday, Her Majesty's birthday. Entertainement at Court; the Persian Ambassador had his audience; a ball at Court & fireworks worth 8,000 R.

"1734, May 6. Monday, Count Osterman came to see me, and gave me the Czarina's letter for the King, together with the translation into English, both of them in a red box. In the afternoon Prince Courckin came to see me, and he brought a diamond ring from Her Majesty that she usually wore on her finger. (This ring was valued by a jeweller in London at 1,100*l.* ster^l^, and he offer^d^ 900 guineas).

Soon after Kelderman (one of the Secretarys of the Chancery) brought me six thousand roubles as a present from Her Majesty, and told me it was the present usually made to Ambassadors, and that Her Majesty made it to me to distinguish me. I gave him fifty gold ducats, and sixty rubles to the guard that came with the money.

"1734, May 7. At 7 o'clock in the evening I left Petersburg and set out with two post waggons, a courier of the cabinet, and two guards, all on horsback, to attend me.

"1734, May 9. Thursday, ye roads very good; fine weather. At eight at night passed Derp 173 verst^s^. This place and Nerva consists of part ancient, and part modern fortifications, but they are in very bad order. There is good drink in Livonia, and particularly at Derp, but no meat but what we carried with us.

"May 10. Friday fine roads. Good weather, and good horses. We overtook 15 carriages with cloths and accouterments for the troops at Riga. The country is fine and well cultivated, but it is mostly forest, fir, birch, popler, and alder trees.

"May 11. Saturday. At break of day we arrived at Riga, 226 versts from Derp. We had 12 horses, that is, 4 for each carriage and 3 for my attendants. We pay[d] for 543 versts, and spent in all to Riga one hundred roubles. Dubos, a French commissary, has taken a farm, and set up a saw mill in Courland, from whence he sends 6,000 boards yearly to the Admiralty in France, by Dutch ships. At half-past two o'clock in the afternoon we ferried over the Dwina, which is broad and swift, but is only 12 foot deep. The floating bridge was not yet layed, it is reckoned a curiosity. The fortifications are in good order. Four regiments in garrison, General Lacy is governor. Our horses tired so that we did not reach Mitau before 12 at night, passing over two ferrys. Tis 7 leagues or versts from Riga.

"1733, May 12. Sunday, we left Mitaw, and parted from the courier and the cuirassiers, but Her Majesty had provided so that I had relays all the way through Courland. Throughout all this journey we hardly meet with a stone, the country being generally plain, sandy, and thinly peopled. We saw no oak trees in the forests all the way from Petersburg to the river Windau, nor brambles, thorn bushes, or ash trees. Courland appears to be a good country, but thinly inhabited, and the cattle smal.

"1734, May 14. Tuesday, at six in the morning we arrived at Memel, a town belonging to the King of Prussia; it is a smal poor place standing on the river Memel, and near the sea. It has a rampart and a ditch, but both out of repair. They load here about 10 English ships with flax for the ports of London, Lancashire, Oporto, and Italy. They load or board Dutch ships for Holland, Bremen, and Stetin, about 10,000 barrels of flax seed. The magistrates seal the barrels which measure about the same as the barrel of Riga. The price is from 9 to 10 guilders Polish money the barrel. A Hollands ducat is 8 guilders perhaps, according as exchange may be, or from 12 to 13 shillings the barrel. They ship off flax in May, and flax seed of the same year's growth from November, just as the pesants thrash and bring it in. It is cheaper as to freight than from Riga. The whole charge for commission is 9 p[r] c[t]. The duty is 10 pence on each barrel, packing and town seal 3½ pence. Reinburse by draughts on Holland. They export corn and masts. Formerly the Russians took English cloth, but now are obliged to take only Prussian cloth and salt, which salt the King of Prussia makes at Hall. The garrison of Memel consists of 600 men, Littopitel is governor. We left Memel at 12 o'clock and passed the Haft in a ferry. All along the sandy shore of the Haft we found amber, in size from the bigness of a pin's head to that of an egg.

"May 15. Wednesday. We went along the stripe of land that seperates the Baltick from the water of the Haft, which communicates with the Baltick at Memel. The last is quite fresh, but the water of the Baltick is brackish. Hardly any green herb is to be seen on the sand, altho some fir trees grow on it, and towards the side of the Haft grass and trees grow pretty well. For eleven Polish miles it is mostly a barren sand, and then for two miles it is all a forrest. This stripe may be about half a mile broad. Boats were sailing and fishing in the Haft, and they brought us salmon, sturgeon, and pikes all just caught. From hence, for seven miles to Pilau, the country is pretty good and well cultivated, and the pesants and farm house have a good appearance. We arrived at Pilau at 8 o'clock, and crossed over the Haft in extreme rainy weather. Flax, hemp, linseed, hogs bristles, sturgeon, potash, &c. are shiped off at Pilau. The place is in good repair and strong. The garrison is Prussian.

"1734, May 21. Tuesday. . . . . Count Levenvold and Count Jagorenskey came to visit me, as did Mr. Guidikins, the King's Minister at this Court. The King of Prussia went early this morning out of town to a review. Seventy thousand troops cost him only six millions of florins a year. His revenue is sixteen millions of florins. Left Berlin at 5 o'clock in the evening.

"1734, June 7. Friday. I waited on S[r] Charles Wager, and went with him to Richmond, where I was presented to and kissed the hands of the King and Queen, and was very graciously received by their Majestys. I then dined with Lord Harrington at Petersham, and lay at S[r] Charles Wager's at Parson's Green."

3. Correspondence of Lord Forbes with Lord Harrington

COLLECTION OF THE EARL OF ROSSE, BIRR CASTLE, PARSONSTOWN. [SECOND REPORT.]

The documents referred to in my first report* on this collection, as comprised in the volume there designated No. 2, include many unique papers elucidating affairs from 1641 to 1690. Amongst them are letters from some of the Irish leaders of 1641; memoranda of daily transactions of Captain William Parsons in London, 1644-5; one of the rare original debentures under the Act of Settlement, 1663; papers connected with the surrenders of Birr Castle in 1642 and 1688, and with the trial, condemnation, and respite of Sir Lawrence Parsons under the government of James II.

The contents of the volume are as follow, in order of date:—

1610, May 15. Order of James I. to Deputy and Chancellor of Ireland, to confirm grants to Sir Richard Hardinge in Ireland.

1611. King's letter to Sir Arthur Chichester, directing grant to John Wakeman of Mary's Abbey near Dublin.

1620. Agreement between Richard Roche Fitz David and Sir Lawrence Parsons, for lands of Shinanagh in county of Cork.

1625, October 23. Acquittance from Ri. Smith & John Knollis to Lanrence Parsons for eighty-four pounds English for the redemption of two plowlands in White's Island, which Captain Teut lately sold. 23 October 1625.

1626, July 3.—Dublin. Order by Lord Deputy Falkland and Council on plantation of barony of Eglish in the King's county, and assignment there of lands to John MacFarroll, as a native.

1636, January 14. Indenture between Lady Anne Parsons of Parsonstown, alias Birr, and Donogh O'Kenedy of Tirreglasse, in the county Tipperary, and Edmond O'Kenedy of Portlaghan, in said county, his son and heir, with respect to town and lands of Lackenboy in Lower Ormond.

1636, April 4.—Dublin. Order on composition between William Parsons and Commissioners, on defective titles. Signed by Adam Cusacko and James Ware.

1636. Certificate of Sir Samuel Mayart, Justice of the King's Bench, with reference to acknowledgment of Henry Sacheverell of Ballintagorte, co. Armagh, for fifty pounds due by him to Anne Parsons. 24 June 1636.

1636. Order to William Parsons for Birr and other lands in the King's county. Signed Ri. Bolton, dated Trinity term, 1636.

1636. Certificate signed Ri. Bolton, with respect to lands of Ballindowne and Ballywilliam in the territory of Fercall.

1636. Chancery order to William Parsons, for Newtown and other lands in King's county.

1638. A schedule of the lands and hereditaments for which William Parsons, Esq., compounded with Commissioners for remedying of defective titles, with order thereon, and autographs of Wentworth, Adam Loftus, Gerrard Lowther, Ri. Bolton, Christopher Wandesforde, Rob. Meredith, James Ware, and Adam Cusak. Dublin Castle, 15 June 1638.

1639, November 13.—Dublin. Order by Lords Justices and Council to Captain William Beisly and William Parsons, for the searching of the house of John O'Carrol of Clounlish.

1639, December 16. Examination of Hugh Gilhane, Mr. John O'Carrol's footman.

1640, March 25. Acquittance from Donnell MacCahirr O'Molloy to the Lady Anne Parsons, for one hundred pounds in redemption of mortgage by Arthur Coghlan.

1641, July 12. Statement of payment of the second subsidy of the four entire subsidies within the King's county.

1641, November 12.—Dublin. Commission from the Lords Justices and Council to William Parsons, for raising footmen and horsemen within the country of Ely O'Carroll, giving him the command in chief of all the said forces.

1641. Letter addressed "For William Parsons, Esquire, " at Birre—These be delivered " :—

" Mr. Parsons,

" I intercepted yo' lettere before it came to my Colonell's hands, w^ch when I perused I beganne to be jealous for your partiality, offeringe yo' protection to the head and excludeinge ye members from the winge of yo' mercy. You write to my Colonell forthw^th p^r repare unto you and to helpe you in suppressing those that have offended his Ma^tie, but who are the offendors, the English or Irish ? I say w^thout any partiall regard of either nation that they are partely of the Irish and for y^e most parte y^e English officers and governors who, contrary to his Ma^ties gratious intention, oppressed y' poore subiects, w^ch bred a greate scandull to the King's dignity and crowne. If yo' joyne w^th them Mr. Parsons wee cannot in conscience ioyne in an unlawfull matter w^th you or w^th any body of y^t faction or any faction els'. " Contrarywise, if yo^e be a true subiecte or if God (that I may use yo' owne words) hath yett some share in yo' recanteinge yo' former life w^ch yo^e have lived this 3 monethis last past, I promise yo^e in my Colonells name his Ma^ties protection promiseinge yo^e here faithfully my best endeavo^r for the preservation of yo' self, yo' wife, children, and yo' good mother, whom wee held hitherto to be goode neighbors with all assureinge yo^e that the good opinion w^ch wee conceaved of yo^e and y' mother was y^e onely cause y^t wee behaved ourselves so mild and tender hearted towards you, w^ch thinge yo' brother-in-law (Chidley Coote) will try by experience to be true if hee be to doe forye, espetially since wee are in such sorte, whom as I am informed he hangs and kills w^thout remorse of conscience, w^ch is no signe of manhoode or civill christianity. If yo^e be pleased therefore to accept of this motion yo^e shall have it to the more security of your life, w^ch is exposed to farre greater dangers at the castle of Birre then where wee are, or if yo^e bee pleased to convey yo'selfe elsewhere yo^e shall have our free passe, otherwise if yo^e ioyne with Coote he not offended w^th if wee doe our best against yo^e all for o' owne safety, if yo^e come yo^e shall understande y^t first of all yo^e are to subscribe to our oath of allegiance consistinge in 4 points; first, y^t yo^e will endeavo' to maintaine the King's prerogative; secondly, to finde a redresse for y^e abuse done to y^e Quecne; thirdly, to use all meanes in oppressinge y^e oppressors of y^e comon wealle; fourthly and lastely, to assist y^e Catholicke army against the puritants, and thus much for y^t.

" As for my Colonell's heade w^ch yo^e write in yo' I're y^t it will not stick longe to his shoulders, yo^e may peradventure say it not out of yo^r owne mynd but by y^e perswasion of others who by pollicie of state use all meanes to encurrage yo^r promiseinge what will never be performed and blindeinge others to keep theme in theire confederacy untill at length they feele the smarte, but suppose an army come out of Englande to succour yo^e wee are stronge enogh God be thanked against yo^e all if yo^e bee not too many, for wee have in Irelande 100,000 men in armes and God as o' guide w^ch is the chiefest thinge, but that I may returne to my Colonell's head, I will doe this for yo^e, I will picke out 60 men and fight against 100 of yo^r choise men if yo^e doe but pitch yo' campe one mile out of yo' towne, and then if yo^e have y^e victory yo^e may threaten my Colonell, otherwise doe not reckon y^e chickens before they be hatched. Thus I wrote to yo^e out of a certaine affection I bore yo^e presenteinge w^th all my keinde offer unto yo^e, desireinge yo^e if yo^e be wise to take hold of it. And so concludeth, expecteing yo^r answere.

" Your freind if yo^e will,

1642. April 1—Dublin. Order by Lords Justices and Council for twenty-five horse for Captain William Parsons and one hundred foot for Captain Chidley Coote, for keeping of the castle of Parsonstown and defence of said town and country thereabouts.

1642. Letter addressed " To my respected friend Mr. " William Parsons at Parsonstown—These present :—

" Mr. Parsons,

" I have receaved yo' letters whereof I understood that yo^e are desirous to know my minde. My minde is always goode towards those that deserves it; as for shootinge to yo' moors I gave no direction till poore men this side were shooted by you contrarie to your aleadged order. As for peace, whereof you speake, wee love it to with all our hearts, knowinge it to be the end of warres. You wrote to Collonell Richard Butler, as I heare, that you was desirous to comme and speake to him privately; if yo' meaneing was to knowe the generall's resolution in giveinge of quarters and due convoyance or anie other termes or condicions of yeldinge I knowe and am acquainted with both generalls in Linster and Mounster, and Generall Moore is in the borders of Ely about this tyme, and if you please I would be a means to bringe you and him to some agreem', as for hindringe yo' markett itt is not my dooinges, but the generall consent of the armies, w^ch I cannot forgoe without further direction from my superiors; as for sheddinge of blood, specially of poore sillie people, women, and children, wee hate it to our verie hearts, and as yo^e were the first soe wee wish you to be the last actors of such inhumanitie if they be not occasioners themselves; as for not killinge of men when they cann be taken prisoners, I see no reason to the contrarie, though by experience I know wee are thought [sic] from you contrary to the lawes of armes in all nations; and Mr. Parsons, indeede I wish you well, and would you had beene better advised both for yo' owne and the contryes welfare wherein you may conceave that truely I am desirous of yo' welfare though unacquainted; as for the provision you speake of I cann doe nothinge of meselfe without special direction from my generall, wherein (if yo^e please) I will be solicitous in yo' behalfe. As for newes I believe that you have heard of the arrivall of Owen Roe O'Neill in the north w^th Spanish assistance, and Collonell Preston att Wexford w^th 7 shippes lauden with armes and ammuition, Townegar Spanish was battred by the artillerie of Limricke last Thursday, and the rest of the English in Tuomond are to be served if not alreddie in the same kind. Thus in hast I rest from our garrisson, 28^th of July 1642.

" Yo^rs if you please as above,

" FARELL O'KENNEDY."

1642. Letter addressed " To my much honored and " highly esteemed the Lady Ann Parsons—these be " presented " :—

" Much honored Lady,

" I receaved yo' letter w^ch might easily move me to doe yo' ladyship any lawfull service or courtisy w^ch I have allwayes coveted to do unto all such of yo' condicion, vertue and worth; and muche the rather for that I find all the gentry and neighbours of these parts to much hono', esteeme, and love you, and in that degree, that one would thinke you are of their blood * and bonds, and there detained against their wills † . . to their great greefe. Butt, good madam, it pleased God by his will or sufferance that this great alteration and sepperacion of many freinds should happen, w^ch hath reduced us to that condicion that those who weare a little while since loveing freinds, are now bourneing, killing, and destroyeing one another. And for yo' parte, Madam, though I thinke yo' have noe mallice to us, yett are yo' the support and maintayner of that p.ace, and those that are w^th yo^s being known, as I heare, to be malitious, will take any thing yo^e have to help their designes, as they have used those horses yo^e writt off, and by likelyhood would doe againe, soe that, if I should gett them restored, I should arme or help my enemy against my selfe, in w^ch case (if yo^e weare a judge yo' selfe) yo' would condemne me . . . any. But if I weare assured noe such use should be made of them, I would endeavo' to gett them restored, w^ch truely I hould butt a poore courtisy and nothing to what I should find my selfe willing to doe yo' . . same way. I would write a little more that might rather tend to yo' good then otherwise, butt that I will not imitate some who stuffe their letteres w^th bragging, lawnting, and inveuti . . neewes, but onely I wish with all my hart that yo' ladyship weare out of y^e danger that some thinks yo^e are in, for I heare yo^e wish well to all honest people. And soe I take leave & remaine yo' ladyship's friend and servant in what I may.

"W^m Parsons. J^o Borlasse.

"Whereas Captaine W^m Parsons with thirty-five horsemen under his comand, and Captaine Chidley Coote with one hundred ffoote under his command (both raised and armed by the said Parsons and Coote) have since the beginning of this rebellion maintained the Castle of Byro in the King's conuty against the rebbells, though often besedged by armyes of them, and preserved therein the lives of many hundreds of his Majesties good snbjects, British and Protestants, who had bin otherwise destroyed by the rebbells, and by that strength of horse and foote did kill and destroy many of the rebbells, and in continued preserving that place and his Majesties good subjects there untill the 20th of January last, at which time (being noe longer able to hold out against a powerful army of the rebbells that then besedged them and undermined the said castle) they after seaven dayes scege were constrayned to give it up to the rebbells on quarter, and brought the said horse troope and ffoote company, or most of them, with them hither to Dublin to serve his Majesty here as they should be appointed. And whereas the said Capt. W^m Parsons having direction from this board for maynetayninge the forces there, did in his zealo to the publique service, and in confidence to be repayed by his Majesty pay the said thirty-five horse and one hnndred ffoote besides theire officers (the captaines meanes excepted in parte) from the 20th of November 1641 to the said 20th of Janury 1642 out of his owne purse to his exceeding great charge. And albeit those 35 horse and one hundred ffoot were soe maintained by him and employed in continnall service as aforessid, yet by reason of the great distance between this place and that, and the multitude of rebbells which were continualy in the way, hindring accesse from hence thither there could be no commission sent him for mnstring the said horse or ffoote in parte, soe much as it is not fitt that soe great a burthen and chargo concerning the publique service should be layd on the said Captaine William Parsons, who hath already lost his estate to a great value by this rebellion, and is now reduced to very great extreamity and want, as is also the said Capt. Coote who hath in like manner lost all his estate of good value by this rebellion, and for that he and the said Captaine Coote have for the publique service since this rebellion began often hazarded theire owne persons and (for their services) merited well from his Majesty and this state. Wee therefore thinke fitt and soe doe order that our very good Lord the Lord Marques of Ormond, Leivtenant-Generall of the army doe issue several commissions to the said several persons (vizt.) to the said Capt. William Parsons to be captaine of the saide horse troope of thirty-five, besides these officers (vizt.) Phelix Wilson as Leivtenant, Thomas Proctor as cornett, John Hodgson as quartermaster, and Anthony Stockdale as corporall and a trumphetter, which persons have hitherto discharged the dntyes of those places and

At last on the 18th, being instructed by a mason who had been employed in the building of the castle they hit upon the right ground, a green clayish bank on the west side of the castle. The mouth of the mine was not above four yards distant from the very foundation of the walls. The garrison hearing the sap, fired some shot and rolled great stones down the bank upon the enemy; but by break of day they were got under the ground and out of all danger . . . . And that the said Lord Marques doe give warrant that the said severall captaine, officers, and soulidiers, as well horse as ffoote be lysted in his Majesties army, for and from the said 20th of November 1641 at the like entertainments and pay as other such captaines, officers, horse troopes, and ffoote companyes in his Majesties pay in this kingdome are and shall be allowed. 1689. Colonel Garret Moore's certificate to the Duke of Tyrconnell:—

"These are to certifie that his Grace the Duke of Tyrconnell, being Lord Deputy of his Maj^tie kingdome of Ireland, being informed that S^r Lawrence Parsons was fortefieing & makeing a garrison of his house att Birr, commanded mee to go thither and enquire further, and accordingly I did go to his said house and tould him what informacion was giuen ag^t him. His answero to mee was that hee shntt upp his foregate and kept his back gate open for any that would have pleased to come to see him, and haveing treated further with him, tould him that hee received many armed men into his said house, his answere was that some of his neighbours and ten^ts intreated him to give them roome in his house, w^ch he said he could not in charety deny them, having beene plundred of their goods, and pretended to be affraid of their lives, and tould mee hee would bring them all before mee in the castle yard, w^ch he accordingly did, and did observe there were more or as many women & children among them as men. I tould him that hee must disperse them, or that his Grace would not bee satisfied, who declared hee would harn or garrison the said house if hee had not; and the said S^r Lawrence asked the people whether hee sent for any of them to his house or detained any of them ag^t their wills, who answered hee did not, on w^ch I said that will not serve, but you ought to disperse them; his answere was, hee could not well command them away considering the feur they pretended to bee in of their lives, but he ordered that all the arms in the house were putt upp and locke in one room at least any of the people would committ any act of hostilitie, and brought mee to the roome where the arms were, and assured mee hee would not suffer any acts of hostilitie to be committed, and would suffer any of his neighbours to come into him and go out as they pleased; and this treaty w^th him was abont foure days before hee gave upp his house to Coll. Oxburgh, and I'm credibly informed that hee did not suffer one shott to be made in a hostile mann^r dureing the time hee had the said people in his house, and do further certefie that he'es an aged and gonty person, all w^ch I thought fitt to certifie this 8^th day of March 1689.

* A copy of these articles with the following letter addressed to Bishop King, is among the correspondence of the latter, noticed in my Report to this Commission for the present year:—

"My Lord,

"Mr. Bonell tells me your Lordship desires an act of my triall, and to know whether I was not condemned for articleing w^th King James. In order to your Lor^ps satisfaction, I under wright a copie of y^r articles, and doe further certefie your lordship y^r chief evidence against me was y^r articles w^ch S^r Henry Linch, my judg, caled for and declared there was noe need of any farther evidence, for articleing w^th y^e King was high treason; besides this was proved I bitt a stone wall and made spike holds in it, and y^t some of my men threw stones at y^e Kings soulders, & y^t I kept men with in my house, and exsersised daily, all w^ch he declared was high treason. To all w^ch when I offer^d to speake for my self he fell in passion and railing bitterly at me would not hear me but w^thout more ceremoney, all the y^t pick^t jury had deliver^d thear vardict, sentenced me & two more to be hang^d, drawne, and quarter^d. This and many other circumstances too long to trouble your Lordship w^th, I am able and redy to justifie when ever I shall be thearto required. For y^r saving my life I procured five severall reprevees, w^ch I have by me. I was in close prison from y^r date of these articles till y^r route at y^r Boine. I am my Lord,

"Your Lordships faithfull, hum. ser^t,
"Law. Parsons."

^b I intend for England soone, wherin I shall be glad to receive y^r Lor^ps recomenditory letters w^ch I humbly begg y^r Lor^p will be pleas^d to send me hither.

^c My Lord. Coll. Oxburgh was my fathers ser^t, and my ten^t & ser^t this 36 y^rs, and had y^r manag^t of my estate at this time, who owed 4,000 in my debt, and would have hang^d me. He had 100^li per ann^r for receiving my rents, and was to allow me 500^li yearly, and pay my debts w^th y^r rest, but p^d nothing, and w^th my mony raised a reg^m for King James; this acct in brief I presume to give y^r Lordship, beeing y^r Lordship is wrighting the late transactions, in w^ch I pray y^r Lordship will be pleased to particularise my great sufferings." The case of Sir L. Parsons is referred to by King in the "State of the Protestants in Ireland," London, 1692, p. 104.

The volume designated No. 3, in my first report on this collection, is bound in vellum and endorsed in an old hand "My grandfather's acts in 1641, &c." Its contents, as follow, mostly undated, were transcribed apparently in the time to which they relate:

"To the King's most Ex^t Ma^tie. The humble peticion of yo^r true and faithfull Catholique subjects of your kingdome of Ireland."

"To y^e King's most Ex^t Ma^ty. The humble petic'on of S^r Robert Talbot and Coll. Garrett Moore in behalfe of yo^r Maiesties Roman Catholique subiects of Ireland."

"Answeares made to certaine exceptions against the clause and proviso tendered in behaulfe of his Maiesties loyall subiects the Roman Catholiques of Ireland. The clauses desired by the Irish papists to be added to the proviso (touching Ireland) in the Act of Indempnitie and the exceptions thereunto."

"A brife narrative how things were carried at the beginning of the troubles in the yeare 1641 in Ireland, published in print in y^e yeare 1660."

"A continuation of the Briefe narrative and of the sufferings of the Irish under Cromwell. Printed in the yeare 1660."

"To the King's most Ex^t Ma^tie. The humble petic'on of S^r Rob't Talbot, Bar^t, and Coll^o Garret Moore in behalfe of the Roman Catholiques of Ireland."

"Answeares and reasons ag^t the clauses and motives urged to conclude those whoe were forced to accept lands in Connaght."

"A briefe as well of certaine proposalls presented to his Ma^tie in behalfe of the Englisch in relacion to the settlement of Ireland. As also of the soverall answeares by the Irish Com^m given therennto."

"Answeares at large to certaine proposalls offered in order to y^e settlement of Ireland."

"Reasons humbly offered to his Maiesty in order to the settlm^t of Ireland."

"A meadium or humble offers made to his Ma^ty in order to the settlement of Ireland."

"An answeare to bitter exceptions ag^t y^e medium."

"To the King's Most Excellent Maiesty: The humble petic'on of S^r Robert Talbot, Bar^t, and Collo^l Garret Moore in behalfe of the Roman Catholiques of Ireland."

"Observations on the declaracion humbly offered to your Maiesteys princely consideration."

"A coppy of a lettere sent into France to a certaine nobleman, and therein a petic'on to the Queene Dowager of England in behalfe of the Catholiques of Ireland by S^r Rob't Talbot, &c. London, July 1661."

"A coppy of the presamble of a bill transmitted out of Ireland for ye Royall assent: An Act for the better execution of his Maiesty gracious declaration for the settlement of Ireland, and satisfaction of y^e severall int'rests of Adventurers, Souldiers and other his Maiesties [subjects] there."

MSS. OF O'CONOR DON, M.P., CLONALIS, CASTLEREA.

The MSS. submitted by O'Conor Don include the following:—

Books.

1. MS. in the Irish language on vellum, fifty-four pages folio, in double columns, imperfect at beginning and end.

The penmanship is excellent, but the vellum is dark and defaced in some places. From a note on the first page, we learn that this book was transcribed by Adam O'Cianan for Thomas, son of Brian MacSamhradhain, apparently the chief of the territory of Teallach Eachdhach, in the north-west of the present county of Cavan, whose death is chronicled by the Four Masters under the year 1343. The contents consist mainly of poems on the genealogies, achievements, and liberality of the chiefs of Teallach Eachdhach and their relatives.

Among the chiefs are named Brian, Fearghal, Maghnus, Niall and Thomas MacSamhradhain.* Of their wives and daughters the following are commemorated: Gormlaith, daughter of Brian MacSamhradhain, wife of O'Reilly; Nuala, daughter of Maguire, wife of Thomas MacSamhradhain; Sadhbh, daughter of Cathal og O'Conor, wife of Niall MacSamhradhain. The authors of the poems are as follow:—

MacNaimhin, Patraic.
O'Clumhain, Cuac Ceise.
" Gilla Aongus.
O'Domhnallain, Tadhg.
O'Fialan, Adam.
O'Heoghusa, Aongus.
" Maelseachlainn.
O'Huigin, Daire.
" Gilla na naemh.
" Mathamhan.
" Niall.
" Raghnall.
" Tadhg.
" Uilliam.

The volume also contains various pieces in prose on the territories, rents, and genealogies of the sept of MacSamhradhain, and the families with which its members were allied, including those of O'Conor, O'Donel, O'Ruarc, and O'Raghallaigh or O'Reilly. In it we likewise find miscellaneous writings, among which are tracts on the kindred of Christ, the parentage of Mary Magdalen; the names of the twelve Apostles; the rites of the Church; the letters of the alphabet, divination, &c. There does not appear to have been any account hitherto published of this manuscript. Some of the poems which it contains are the only productions at present known of their authors, and the volume may be regarded as a valuable accession to the collections of the native literature of Ireland of the 14th century.

2. Manuscript on paper, small quarto, in the Irish language, the leaves numbered from 1 to 413.

The heads of the leaves from 1 to 46 are damaged by damp, and several pages are missing throughout. The writing is elegant, in characters of three sizes and interspersed with rubrics.

The name of the transcriber does not appear, but at page 394 we find the date—Ostend, December 1631. The volume now contains about 380 pieces, all in verse, chiefly the production of, or ascribed to, the following:—

Cairneach.
Colum Cille.
Donnchadh an-t-sneacta.
Erc, daughter of Loarn.
Ferriter, Pierce.
Flann, filé.
Flann, Mainistreach.
Gormlaith, daughter of Flann.
Guille, Atha loic.
Laitheog, mother of Flann.
MacBruaideda, Domhnall.
" " Domhnall, son of Daire.
" " Seaan buidhe.
MacConmidhe, Gilla Brighde.
" Gilla Brighde, Albanach.
" Gilla Brighde, Beag.
MacDaire, Domhnall.
" Tadhg.
Macraith, Eoghan.
" Moeleoin.
" Moelmuire.

* Latinised "Mac Gabhafanna" and "Gauranus," — modernised Magauran and "Somers."

The volume also contains pieces on the following subjects :—Iniskillen ; kings of Leinster ; visions of love ; monastery of Donegal ; persecution of poets by earl of Thomond, and their protection by Aedh O'Domhnaill ; the river Shannon ; the harps of MacEochagan, Donnchadh O'Brien, and Aedh O'Domhnaill ; the flight of the northern earls, etc.

In his "lectures on the manuscript materials of "ancient Irish history,"* the late Professor O'Curry referred as follows to this volume :—"I am acquainted "with a manuscript book of historical and religious "poems (of which few are found anywhere else) con- "taining more than ten thousand quatrains, which was "either compiled or transcribed at Ostend in the year "1631, now in possession of the O'Conor Don. Of the "originals . . no trace has yet been discovered."

Fine copies of many of the pieces in this collection, made in 1848 by O'Curry, are now in the library of the Royal Irish Academy.

3. Account of the family of Butler of the house of Ormonde. Small quarto paper, 132 pages. This manuscript does not state the name of its author, but it is mainly a copy of an unpublished work compiled by Robert Rothe, under the following title :—

"A register containing the pedigree of the right honourable Thomas late Earl of Ormond and Ossory, and of his ancestors and cosines, both lineal and collaterall, as well since the conquest of Ireland as before, and containing many of the memorable acts and services done and performed by the said earle, as also of their matches and what honours, offices, and promotions, with notes of severall purchases made by them. All which were collected and gathered out of the severall chronicles and pedigrees, and of sundry records and evidences by Robert Rothe, Esq., one of the said late earles counsell in the yeare after the Incarnacion of our blessed Saviour Jesus Christ, 1616."

Carte, in the introduction to his history of James, Duke of Ormonde in 1736, refers as follows to this compilation :—"There are in manuscript two accounts of "the original and descent of this family. One was drawn "up by Mr. Rothe, a barrister of law and council to "Thomas, Earl of Ormonde in Queen Elizabeth's time, "but had the last hand put to it by his son, Sir Robert "Rothe, who succeeded his father in the same post, "and had the inspection of all the family deeds and "writings. This was in the hands of Sir James Ware, "and hath passed with the rest of that learned and "judicious antiquary's collections, first, into the hands "of Henry, late Earl of Clarendon, and from thence "into those of his grace the Duke of Chandos. The "other was wrote by William Roberts, King of arms in "Ireland." . . . "This manuscript is now in the "possession of Dr. John Stearn, Bishop of Clogher, who "has likewise a copy of Sir Robert Rothe's."

The style of the compilation may be judged from the following extracts :—

"The s[d] Pierce Butler [eighth] E. of Ormond and Ossory (in all the course of his life) was verry religious and godly, and as I have heard by antient men that lived in his time, he used every yeare in the last fortnight of Lent to retire himself from all wordly business, and to lye during that time in a chamber near S[r] Kenny's church, of Kilkenny, called Paradise, and there he used his daily prayers and gave alms to the poore and prepared himself to receive the blessed Sacram[t], and uppon Easter in the evening he returned to his dwelling house. He was married to the Lady Marg[t], daughter to the E. of Kildare, with whom he lived many years in great hon[r] and prosperity, the s[d] E. and Countess planted great civillity in the county of Tipperary and Kilkenny. he gave good example to the people of that country, they brought out of Flanders, and other countreys, divers artificers who were daily kept at work by them in their castle of Kilkenny, where they wrought and made diaper, tappestrie, Turkie carpets, cushions, and other like works, whereof some do remaine as yet w^th the now E. of Ormond. The said E. was a most humble, plaine, and kind gentleman, loving, familiar, and liberal to his friends and followers, and a scourge and enemie to all bad people; he was a most worthy subject and did many great and acceptable services to the Crown of England in his time, and died in the favour of his Prince, and in the love of his friends and followers on y^e 26th day of August in anno 1539, and was buried in St. Kenny's Church affores^d, in a monument made for him in y^e chancell of the s^d church; y^e said Lady Marg^t, Countess of Ormond and Ossory, lived some few years after him, and during that small remaine of her life she lived most Godly in contemplation and prayer, giving alms bountifully to poore and needy people, and at her proper cost and charges built a school house near the churchyard of St. Kennes church aforesaid.

The concluding passages of the book give the following particulars of high genealogical value:—

"The said S^r Walter Butler, K^t, now E. of Ormond and Ossory, is married to the Lady Ellan Butler, daughter to y^e said Edmund Butler, late Lord Viscount of Mountgarett, and had issue by her Thos. Butler, now Lord Butler and Viscount of Thurles, and James Butler, Esq^r, the said Tho^s Lord Butler is married to Elizabeth, daughter unto S^r John Poynings, K^t (a gentlewoman descended of Hon^ble and worshipfull parentage), by whome he had issue three sons, viz^t James Butler, John Butler, and Richard Butler; and the said E. had issue also by the said Countess, nine daughters, viz^t the Lady Margt Butler, married to the said Barnaby Fitzpatrick, son and heire of the s^d Lord Barron of Upper Ossory. The Lady Kathrine to Pierce Powr, Esq^r, second son to Richard Lord Powr, of Curroughmore. The Lady Ellan married to S^r Pierce Butler of Lissenalin, K^t (who was after made Lord of Ikiren). The Lady Ellen Butler married to James Butler of Grelagh, Esq^r, son to Ja Butler, Lo. Baron of Dunboyne, he Lady Johanna Butler married to George Bagnell, Esq^r, and also four other daughters who are yet unmarried. The said S^r Walter Butler, K^t, now E. of Ormond and Ossory, did very good and acceptable service to the Crowne in the late Queen's time; and in the latter end of the said Queen's reigne, he with his owne company and some few gentlemen of y^e county of Tipperary prosecuted the traitor Redmonde Bourke (before remembred) and finding him and his company in Ormond, where he made his most abode, slew a great number of his men, and him and y^e rest of his company he put to flight, and then took his brother prisoner, who (soon after) was condemned and executed for his treason according to the course of law. The s^d E. was then hurt by y^e s^d rebels, the print of which hurt remaineth in his body to this day. The s^d Redmond, after the s^d overthrow, went to Spain, where he continued ever sithence.

"The said Walter Butler, fourth son to the said James, late E. of Ormond and Ossory, was married to y^e daughter of McBrien O'Gomagh, and died at his house at Ballinenoddagh and was buried at Kilkenny, and had issue Pierce Butler of Moyally, Esq., who had issue James Butler and other children; y^e said Walter had issue also two daughters, viz. Johane, married to John O'Dwier, who had issue Philip O'Dwyre, and other sons and daughters; Ellice first maried to John Sherlock of Mothell in the county of Waterford, Esq., who had issue by her Patrick Sherlocke, Esq., and other children; after she married S^r Edward Gough, Knight, by whome she had issue one son and one daughter; and lastly she married Sir Laurence Esmond, K^t, a noble, wise, and worthy gentleman, and a man that did great service to y^e Crowne of England, both in this realme and in other countries. Y^e said James Butler, fifth son to the said E., maried Margrett Tobin, daughter to James Tobin, of Comey, who died and was buried at Kilkenny, near his ancestors, having issue a son called James Butler, who died without issue. Y^e s^d Edward Butler, sixth son to the said E., maried Margrett Bourk, daughter to Rich., late E. of Clanrickard, by whome he had issue James Butler, who dyed without issue. The said Pierce Butler, seventh son to the s^d James, late E. of Ormond, maried Catherine, daughter to John, late Lo. Power of Coraghmore, by whom he had issue James Butler, Edward Butler, and Rich. Butler and Edmond Butler: the s^d James Butler, the younger, who yet liveth, and y^e said Pierce had issue also Catherine Butler, maried to John Tobin of Killaghy, Esq., and divers other daughters. The said Edmond Butler, late Lord Viscount, of Mountgarett, son and heir to y^e s^d S^r Richard Butler, Knight (late Lord Viscount of Montgarett, who was y^e first of that honour), was a stout, valiant, and noble gentleman, and did great service in his time against y^e rebells of Lex in Upper Ossory and in other bordering countries; he was well beloved in his countrie, and especially in the county of Kilkenny (where his most abode was), in regard that he loved them and war ready to spend his blood in their quarrell and defence. Y^e said late Lord Viscount was maried to Grany, daughter to old Barnaby, Lord Baron of Upper Ossory, by whom he had issue six sonnes, viz., Rich^d Butler, now Lo. Viscount, Mountgarett, James Butler, Theobald Butler, Pierce Butler, Gilbert Butler and John Butler. Also eight daughters, viz., the Lady Ellan, now Countess of Ormond and Ossory, wife to said Walter Butler, Knt., E. of Ormond and Ossory, Ellin Butler maried to Lucas Shee, Esq^r, Ellinor Butler maried to Morgan M^cBryen Kavanagh, Esq^r, chief of the sept of the Kevanaghs called Slught Dermott. Mary Butler maried to Bryan O'Conner, Esq^r, Ellice married to Walter Daton, Esq^r, Anne Butler married to Edward Butler of the Old Abbey, Esq^r, Johane Butler married to William O'Farrell, Esq^r, son and heir to O'Farrellbane of the Annell[y], and Marg^t Butler, wife to Oliver Grace, son and heire to Gerald Grace, late of Liegan, Esq^r, deceased. The said Rich^d now Lord Viscount of Mountgarett and his said brothers and sisters have many good children, the names of whom for brevities sake I passe over. The said Pierce Butler, second son to y^e said S^r Richard Butler, Knt., late Lo. Viscount of Mountgarett, had issue Edward Butler and James Butler and other children, both male and female. John Butler, third son of the said S^r Richard Butler, Lo. Viscount of Mountgarett, had issue Walter Butler and other children. Thomas Butler, fourth son of the said Lo. Viscount of Mountgarett, had issue Pierce Butler and other children. The said Walter Butler, second brother to y^e said James Butler FitzEdm^d, father to the said Sir Pierce, had issue Richard Butler of Powlistowne, who had issue Edm^d Butler, who had issue Walter Butler, who had issue S^r Rich^d Butler, now of Powlistowne, K^t, and other sons and daughters. And the said John Butler, the younger brother to the said James FitzEdmond, had issue Pierce Butler and John Oge Butler, who was attainted of felony at Kilkenny and executed for the same in the late Queen's time. And the said S^r Pierce Butler, E. of Ormond and Ossory, had a brother called John Butler FitzJames, who had issue a daughter called Margarett Butler, [who] was wife to Edmund Blanchvill of Blanchvillstowne, who had issue Gerald Blanchvill, who had issue Edmund Blanchvill and divers others, sonns and daughters, now living."

With this manuscript are bound five leaves commencing as follows:—

"Observations on y^e foregoing treatise. By me, T. G., Anno Dni. 1669:

"The copy whereout y^e said treatise was by me transcribed I had from Mr. Walter Lawlesse of Talbot's Insh. In y^e beginning I have left out part of what was written concerning St. Thomas of Canterbury, as I have likewise done in y^e latter end thereof: because y^e same, and much more to that purpose, may be read at large in his life which is printed. There is in two or three places a little added, w^ch is included in a parenthesis [. . . . .] that thereby it may be known from y^e rest."

Walter Lawlesse of Talbot's Inch, in the county of Kilkenny, here referred to, was connected with the Rothe family through his daughter Letitia, wife of Peter and mother of Nicholas Rothe.

Rothe with reference to the document issued by him on the 18th of August 1646, commanding a "general cessa-" tion of divine offices throughout all the city and suburbs " of Kilkenny, in all churches, monasteries, and houses " in them whatsoever." The present paper, consisting of two small leaves, is much injured. The contents, divided into eight sections, include the following, which are of interest in connection with David Rothe, Roman Catholic Bishop of Ossory, a learned writer,* of whom but meagre personal details have come down to us.

"1. In regarde of his unworthy undervalning at the first notice given him of this intended censure; by diiecting him to the ministeriall office of a single notary to authenticat copies of certaine declarations preambulatory to the censure, wherein he had no hand eyther as councelour, counselor, or witness: and that don, at the instance and (as it were) comaund of an alien subdelegat (knowne to be most eager to woorke this feate), reserving to himself the secret and absolute comprising of the maine plott; and casting on his betters the oppen and odiouse execnution thereof.

"3. For having permitted him self to be drawne by certaine hotspurrs, still keeping them selves stiff on horsback, for such carriers; to inflict, yeers ago, the like censure; for a cause of more importance, and in itself more censurable then nowe is offered, which just infliction within his proper jurisdiction was suddainly cald back and annuld by supreasne ecclesiasticall power, the cause thereof still persisting; leaving him to the wrath and indignation of the woorthely so censured by him, without regard had of his authority, credit, and zeale in that action.

"4. For being now made a particular butt for denuncing with extreame rigour this present censure after formall appellation from it; to the lamentable desolation of his flock, no other prelate being required to do the like in their respective cities; he being the weakest, for age, and continuall dangerous infirmities,† of all the rest, and skarce hable in privat to performe his dayly devotions.

"5. For that it is not without fear and danger that his forwardness in giving way to deserte the use of his churches latly acquired with the countenance and assistance of those that are now principally declard unworthy to enioy the benefit and comfort of them will occasion their unwillingness to put them againe into our hands when most we shall desyre it; and when the prime authors of this turmoyle will be farr of from succoring us in woord or deede, which will become the more greevouse to us and ominouse to the generall state of religion with us, that our cathedrall being the first that was of late reduced to its ancient use should be also the first that of our owne accorde would be turned as it were to waste and profanation." * * * * "Hæc solus soli, salvo meliori indicio."

1647, 21st December. Bond of Reginald, Marquis of Antrim, to Peter Shee of the city of Kilkenny, Alderman, for fifty pounds, to be paid by the Receiver-General or other public officer in the province of Leinster out of the yearly pension of one thousand pounds sterling voted by the General Assembly of Confederate Catholics of Ireland at Kilkenny, twelfth of November 1647, for the maintenance of the Marquis, to be levied from the receivers of the respective provinces of this kingdom.

1648, October 7.—Kilkenny. "By the General Assembly of the Confederate Catholiques of Ireland. "Whereas the necessity of maintaining an army in the " field within the province of Leinster requireth a " present supply of money which by an applottment " cannot be seasonably or speedily brought in. There-" fore it is ordered that you, James Archdeacon of " Kilkenny, shall by way of loane to the use of the " publique pay ymedyately unto Richard Nettervill, " Esqre., receiver of the publique dues within the " province of Leinster, the sum of sixty-five pounds " sterling. And for repayment of that sum it is further " ordered that the said Richard Nettervill shall out of " the first moneyes coming to his hands of any publique " dues from the province of Leinster satisfie and repay " unto the said James Archdeacon, the sume of sixty-" five pounds sterling. In affording whereof you the " said James Archdeacon, may not faile at your highest " perill and in pursuance hereof the Councell are with-" out delay causing all necessary compullsories.—Ex[d] " per Phil O'Kearnye, Gen. Controul. Cler."

1650, August 24.—Rosse. Letter of Richard Dellahoyde, concerning shipment of wines and merchandize from France, through favour of Lord Deputy Ireton.

1652. Articles of agreement concerning the rendition and surrender of the town of Gallway. This MS. contains, as Article 7, the following which does not appear in the copy printed by Hardiman in his "History of Galway:" "7. It is concluded and agreed upon " by and between the said parties that the Governor, " garrison, and inhabitants of the isles of Aren upon " their surrender, shall have the same conditions as are " granted to the town and garrison of Galwaie, that " particular of the five thousand pounds composition for " the personall estates being excluded. Provided that " the said isles of Aren be surrendered to the L. President or whom he shall appoint within ten daies " after he or any authorized by him shall demande the " same, otherwise this particular act to be void and of " noe effect." The signatures here set down do not correspond with those printed by Hardiman, and to them the following, not given by him, is appended:—" I " doe approve, ratifie, and confirm these articles granted " and agreed upon by my commissioners. Witness my " hand and seal, 1st day of April 1652. Chas. Coote."

1655. March 15.—"Kilkennie. By the Commissioners for tryall of transplantable persons:—Whereas Mr. James Archdeacon hath been lately apprehended as a person transplantable for default of transplantation, and having upon strict examination found that he was not in arms against his Highness and the Commonwealth, and that he was noe proprietor of any lands, nor any way included in the qualifications for transplantation, Wee doe hereby acquitt and discharge the said James Archdeacon untill further evidence shall appear against him."

1688. Petition of John Pape of the city of Kilkenny to his Excellency, Richard, Earl of Tyrconnell, Lord Deputy, praying to be relieved from soldiers or officers in the army being quartered upon him.—Petition referred by Tyrconnell to Mayor and Sheriffs of city of Kilkenny to do the petitioner justice, as has been directed by a former order in the like case. Chappelizod, 3rd of August, 1688.

1689. Letter addressed "to the Sheriffs of the city " of Kilkenny, or either of them." "Kilkenny Castle, 18th April 1689. Sr, It is my Lord Duke of Tyr-" connell's comman[d] that Mr. Haskins and Mr. Carrole " be taken out of the dungeon, and that they be kept " only in the common prison without having any irons " on them. I am Sr your humble servant W[m] Ellis."

1689. July 20.—Dublin. Letter from Leonard Bayton to Alderman John Archdeacon, Kilkenny, requesting for his cousin Hackett, a rent-roll of Kilkenny city, and liberties that a power may be sent to receive the rents:—"Here was a plott lately discovered and intended by Sir John Davies, Robert FitzGerald, Esq., " and a greate many other protestants to seize the " Castle and the citty of Dublin, and that they had ten " thousand men in readiness to performe this which " they thought the more easily to compas, seeing the " most of the army away from hence. The said Sir " John Davies, FitzGerald, and a great many of them, " are clapt up for it."

1689. Instrument with seal and sign manual of James II., declaring James Phelan to be Roman Catholic Bishop of Ossory, under Act of the Parliament held in Dublin in 1689:—

" James R.,

" In pursuance of an Act of Parliament intitled, an Act concerning appropriatt tythes and other dueties payable to ecclesiastical dignitaries, we doe hereby signifie and declare that James Lord Bishopp of Osserie, who at the tyme of passing the said Act was a Roman Catholique Bishopp, is and shal be hereafter reputed, taken and deemed the Roman Catholique Bishopp of the diocess of Osserie within our kingdome of Ireland, according to the true intent and meaneing of the said Act, and of another Act of Parliament intitled, an Act concerning tythes and other ecclesiastical dueties. Given at our Courte at our Castle of Dublin, the 23[th] day of July in the yeare of our Lord God, 1689, and in the fifth yeare of our reigne.

all persons of city and liberties of Kilkenny, from age of 16 to 60, to appear before them at the parade on Thursday next, between the hours of nine and ten of the clock in the morning, armed with their best arms and horses, and if thereof disfurnished to come afoot.—Much torn.

1689. Letter of Thomas Otway, Protestant Bishop of Ossory, to John Archdekin, Mayor of Kilkenny—holograph:

"M^r Maior, "Octob. 8, '89.

"I heare that you send yo^r officers into the Irish towne [of Kilkenny] to take the customes. I wish you had not commenced yo^r Maioralty with such a palpable act of injustice, w^ch you cannot but know to bee so, in regard none of yo^r predecessors ever enjoy'd the customes but either by order from the Chiefe Governor, or by farming them from the place, neither of w^ch you have. I cannot see my selfe wrong^d and say nothing, but shall take the same course w^th my predecessors have done, and addresse my selfe to his Majesty, who I doubt not will give me the same releife w^th his Royall progenitors have given other Bishops. If you please to send any to me that understands Records, I can shew severall where it is declared in Chancery that the customes of the Irishtowne are part of the Temporalities of the See of Ossory. I cannot thinke that your owne Bishop or any of yo^r clergy will advise you to what you are going about. I am told that you have warrants out for some poore men I employ there; I shall desire you not to putt them to trouble or charge, and I will take order that they shall not hinder you. I shall say no more but that there is a command non concupisces, and hee that made it will see it punisht if broken, especially in things consecrated to himselfe and service. So I remaine, S^r, 1689. December 30.—Kilkenny. Letter of Aldorman Bartholemew Gernon to John Archdeacon, with instructions on making and delivering bread for the army.

1690. June 23. Order of Colonel Walter Butler, Governor of the castle and town of Wexford, Lord Lieutenant of the said county, and Supervisor General of the counties of Wexford, Carlow, Kilkenny, and Queen's County, commanding all those of Protestant religion within the said counties within ten days after publication hereof to deliver into the hands of the respective High Sheriffs of the said several counties, what arms of what kind soever they and every of them have by his licence or otherwise, &c.

1699. June 3.—Dublin. Certificate by Commissioners for hearing and determining the claims to the articles of Limerick and Galway. Having examined witnesses on the petition of Matthew Power of Limerick, merchant, the Commissioners certify that he was in Limerick on the 3rd of October 1691; hath since submitted to his Majesty's Government, and taken the oath of fidelity, and therefore is adjudged to be comprehended within the articles made for surrender of that place, and to be thereby entitled to all the benefits and advantages thereof."

Some of the foregoing papers are the only originals of their classes, yet brought to light in connexion with the public affairs to which they refer.

Dublin. J. T. Gilbert.

"Account of the War and Rebellion in Ireland since the Year 1641," ascribed to Nicholas Plunket. MS. in Possession of the Right Hon. Major-General Francis Plunket Dunne, Brittas, Queen's County.

To this manuscript, which is written on paper of small folio size, its present owner has prefixed the following notice:—

"This volume consists, as may be seen by the character of the handwriting and other differences, of two parts, one being much more ancient than the other. The more ancient portion commencing with the page numbered 910 had been long in the possession of my family, but no more was known of it than that it came to us through intermarriage with the Plunkets of Dunsoghly, a family I am now the representative of, possessing their name, and some portion of the estates they formerly owned, particularly the Castle and lands of Dunsoghly in the County of Dublin. It was considered by us as a curious relic, and we were unwilling to have it bound lest we should thereby detract from its character of antiquity, and accordingly suffered it to remain without the protection it would have had from proper binding, to the damage of the paper. I should here observe, however, that it was never, within my memory, anything else but the imperfect fragment it now is, nor have I ever heard how, or when, the earlier and larger portion of the work was lost. On shewing it however, in the present year (1868) to Mr. John P. Prendergast, author of "The Cromwellian Settlement of Ireland," he informed me that it was certainly either the original, or a nearly contemporaneous copy of a work mentioned with high commendation by Carte under the title of "Plunket's Memoirs," and frequently cited in his "Life of James Duke of Ormond," inasmuch as he had seen a pretty full abstract of the entire work in Carte's own hand in the great collection styled "The Carte MSS." in the Bodleian Library at Oxford; and that he found by the paging and other marks of some extracts he had himself made from this abstract that it corresponded perfectly with the fragment in my possession. I accordingly entrusted it to him to compare with the abstract at Oxford, and requested him if he found it to be what he believed, to have a copy made of so much of Carte's abstract as related to the deficient pages of my MS., which has accordingly been done, and the copy thus made now forms the first and newer portion of this volume. Mr. Prendergast has made a careful comparison of my old MS. with Carte's abstract (to be found in the LXIVth volume of the Carte papers), and he informs me that he believes the fragment is part of the original work described by Carte, as it not only agrees with the paging of the volume used by Carte, but that the very gap in the present MS. from page 1040 to page 1109 is noticed by him in his abstract as being in the volume he used. And as further evidence of its identity the abstract concludes with page 1235, as does the present MS., some pages being still wanting.

"To the objection that some of the earlier portion of my old MS. is in a copying clerk's writing, it is to be observed that the work is stated to be a collection by different hands, and this will account not only for the variety of the handwriting, but also for some other discrepancies as to time to be found in the concluding pages of the work, as at page 1124, where the writer speaks of James Duke of York being king, and at page 1138 "our present brave and magnanimous king," plainly meaning King William III., and at page 1149 he speaks of "Queen Anne now upon the throne." But that the writer of the concluding part commencing at page 1017, was actually the author or compiler of that portion and not a mere copying clerk, is plain by his altering and correcting the phraseology of the opening passage which connects it with the foregoing part.

"It would thus appear that we have here a portion of the original work which Carte saw entire in the year 1733 (except the deficiencies he then noticed), but since his day two thirds have been lost, a loss which may be estimated by the following testimony to the character of the work given by Carte in his preface to his "Life of James Duke of Ormonde." "Another work [was communicated to me by Mr. Henry Plunckett of the county of Meath, whose uncle was the compiler thereof. It would make a very large volume in folio, and is a collection of a vast number of relations of passages that happened in the Irish Wars, made by a society of gentlemen who lived in that time and were eye-witnesses of many of those passages. It is not digested into a proper order, but is wrote with great temper, modesty, candour, and regard to truth; the compiler upon all occasions taking care to distinguish what was the result of his own knowledge from what he learned by common report, in his relation from others, that the reader might make his own judgment of the measure of credit which each relation in his book deserved. And I must do the author the justice to say, that whenever he asserts anything of his own knowledge, I have found him still confirmed by the relation I met with in the Duke of Ormond's papers. I have borrowed from this collection several parts of the characters of the principal persons concerned in the rebellion, and some other passages mentioned in this history and quoted from thence under the title of Plunckett's Memoirs."

Having thus supplied the loss suffered by this work as well as I can, I must only hope that the missing part may yet be found, however faint may be the chance of its recovery, considering the length of time during which we have no trace of its place of deposit.

1st August 1868. Francis Plunket Dunne.
